
STRIKING ANTI-CENSOR CARTOON.

The above engraving is a reproduction of a cartoon which appeared in a recent issue of the New York American and which illustrates in a most graphic manner the evil of Federal Censorship as proposed by the Crafts bill.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

IF any prediction ever made in these columns proved true, it is the one that the old-time theatrical people have never and never will, become reconciled to the conditions established by the advent and progress of motion pictures. We are told that "film men are split on the proposed Federal censorship bill." The truth is there is no split. We read of certain moving picture makers and handlers fawning and crawling upon the lap of Chairman Hughes of the Committee on Education at Washington and offering him a practical—in fact, a decided—surrender of their constitutional rights, while nearly all motion picture people stand upon principle. It is a remarkable fact that the fawners are people who three years ago derided and detested motion pictures. It is also a fact that the children who have crawled upon the knee of Chairman Hughes for ground-floor recognition and free publicity are not as numerous as they appear to be. One corporation signing the paper is the distributor for at least two of the most prominent of other signers. Two other signers, although separately inscribed, are covered by one organization, so that, instead of having four very prominent penitents upon his knee Chairman Hughes has but two.

To be plain about the matter, let us take indisputable facts. One party which practically surrenders to the Federal Censorship movement is the Paramount Picture Corporation. It is followed by the Famous Players Company, the Lasky Feature Play Company, the World Film Corporation and the Equitable Motion Picture Corporation. Now, first, the Paramount Picture Corporation is not a manufacturing concern, but a releasing company which handles the productions of both the Famous and the Lasky companies, so that the Paramount really sits in the lap of Chairman Hughes for itself, the Famous and the Lasky companies—a representation of one. Mr. Hughes is told the World Film Corporation and the Equitable Motion Picture Corporation want to be good. He counts two more converts, while in fact there is but one, as the Equitable productions are released through the World Film Corporation, so that he has in all but two converts upon his knees.

On the other hand we find arrayed against Federal censorship the Universal Film Company, the Metro Pictures Corporation, the American Film Company, the Mutual Film Corporation, the V-L-S-E., representing four of the best known moving picture manufacturers, the International Film Service and the Nicholas Power Company. With them are representatives of notable motion picture publications, organizations of exhibitors and the Motion Picture Board of Trade. Does this indicate that "film men are split on the censorship bill"? If a percentage of 100 to 20 can be called a "split," then we must recede. The last named companies are on record against pre-publicity censorship and stand ready to support any measure that may be framed to hold them repsonsible under the criminal laws if they produce or exhibit anything that does not comply with the laws.

A representative of one of the organizations that has become servile to the Federal bill agitators says there are many persons in the moving picture business who look upon it as a means for a quick clean-up and a get-away for profit. All of which is quite true. But such people are the bandits of the business. They are the people who flourished some years ago, but can now only be found skulking in the darkness, producing for and marketing their products to the unwary and depraved exhibitors. Despite the opinions of many and the rulings of the courts in recent years regarding the existence and operations of moving picture trusts, one truth stands out boldly. If it were not for the establishment of some of the combinations the moving picture business would not have the world-wide standing it has to-day. Twelve years ago the country was flooded with interloping motion picture producers who were, as the representative says, "get-rich-quick artists." The first thought of combination was directed against the class who gave attention to quantity rather than quality and the effectiveness of that campaign is shown by the fact that not one of the guerrilas is represented in the ninety-five per cent. of motion picture business. The five per cent. is composed of the people for whom the agitators hold the entire business responsible.

To reach the outlaws the agitators would shoulder the responsibility and expense upon the innocent, without according them their constitutional rights to a day in court. The legitimate producer must abide by the delay and cost attending the pre-adjudication of his subject and support the supervising body for considering the subjects of the irresponsible producers who abandon their subjects when they find they cannot "get away with it." The honest man is put on all fours with the culprit without a trial. That is a true picture of pre-publicity censorship. Ordinarily all persons accused are entitled to the benefit of a doubt. Not so with the motion picture producers and exhibitors. They are first condemned and then tried. As a prominent director of pictures said the other day, "This censorship is one of the greatest insults to American manhood ever contrived. I am a respectable American citizen. I am raising a family and am as jealous of the spiritual and moral welfare of my wife and children as any man who ever attempted to teach the gospel. I would not allow myself to picturize anything that would contaminate the mind of man, woman or child, yet I am branded by these censorship people as one of degraded inspiration. Why, because I produce a picture showing a policeman accepting a bribe. The police say it unduly reflects upon the police departments. I am condemned because I show a clergyman who has become involved in unfortunate mercantile speculation because it tends to diminish respect for the cloth. I dare not produce a picture showing a man pointing a revolver at a burglar who has entered his home at night, because it is contrary to the commandment, 'Thou shalt not kill.' I dare not expose the conduct of a libertine, because the mind might otherwise remain ignorant of the existence of such affairs. In brief, I dare not tell the truth, no matter how delicately I may do it, because the 'holier than thou' feel that such affairs should be kept under cover, and yet the newspapers, magazines and novels of unlimited circulation, teem with such stories, the stage tells them day after day, and not a protest comes from these censors. Many of the newspapers and periodicals reek with filth, and I'll stake my reputation, together with my salary for a year, that the so-called reformers cannot find a filthy photoplay in any part of the country. The answer comes back, clear and distinct. The foundation for the censorship of moving picture films is pure, unadulterated graft. The condition of affairs in the moving picture business is terrible and I blame the manufacturers for it. They have given these 'holier than thou' people too much rope. They have lacked backbone enough to fight them inch by inch and have the courts determine how far sanctimonious interference with legitimate business shall be tolerated. 'Cut out the drinking scenes' is one of the injunctions issued to us. How in the name of all that is good are we to show the degrading effects of the liquor habit if we do not show its indulgence and results? If John B. Gough were alive to-day he would be one of the foremost moving picture exhibitors with his programme filled with drinking scenes. He went the picture one better and showed terrible examples in flesh and blood on the lecture platform. So did others in his time. Many of the so-called reformers of to-day will stand in the pulpits and upon the platforms, ranting about wine being a mocker, yet they deem it an honor to sit at festive boards surrounded by uplifted glasses, flowing over with bubbling wine. I always admired President Rutherford B. Hayes and William Jennings Bryan for their consistency in this respect. That is more than I can say of nine-tenths of the so-called reformers with whom I have come in personal contact. What do I think of censorship? I answer in the legal definition of the term 'fraud.' It is a dishonest or illegal artifice by which undue advantage is taken of another, or by which the interests of that other are unjustly prejudiced. My profession is an honorable one and I follow it accordingly. I take pride in it; and when anyone, whether he be of the cloth, or otherwise, says I make a business of contaminating the mind or impairing the morals of the young or old, he is deliberately guilty of a falsehood. By his reckless declaration he prejudices the interests of my employer, my family and myself. By his blanket charge against my profession as a whole, he commits the meanest act man can do. His artifice in besmirching all for a few is a fraud upon the intelligence of all. I am heartily in favor of penalizing any manufacturer or exhibitor of an improper moving picture, and that cannot be done until offence has been committed against the public and the offender given a trial. You cannot collect damages against a newspaper, or imprison the editor, before a libel is published."

FAMILIAR phrases:—"I've written three scripts better than that play and got 'em all back!"

Successful authors we have known—Rex Beach, Bob W. Chambers, Charles Dickens, Homer, Conan Doyle and Joe Brandt. Joe had a hand in "Graft."—P. S. We mean he was co-author of that story.

Have you heard of the recent metamorphosis of Gilbert Anderson?

Right away now you think he's in bed with it, but let us hastily relieve the tug at your heart strings by saying that Broncho Billy has shed the old cowboy garb and discarded his trusty "gat" for the less dangerous evening costume in which he will make perilous ventures into society pictures. So passeth Broncho Billy. How western villainy will flourish now.

Our tenderest sympathy goes out to that brave little band of Edison pilgrims led by Dick Ridgely as they languish among the Havana cigar makers and list to the drone of the tobacco bug as it flits from leaf to leaf. Words tremble on our lips as we think of the sleety, rainy, snowy weather of New York, from which they have been so unceremoniously yanked to be compelled to bask in the balmy, lazy atmosphere of the West Indies. Between scenes, can you not visualize that heroic flock standing on the silvery beach, sadly gazing across the vast expanse of blue and sobbing to the accompanying of the wailing waves—"I love the "L" and subways, but this is the life."

The Motion Picture Board of Trade entertained the President of the U. S. A. the other night. Also the Mayor of N. Y. Those present were Mrs. Ne——(What do you think this magazine is? A directory of the United States?—Editor.)

Hurray! This is the month, too, that the Motion Picture Board of Trade gives a dinner to the cartoonists of New York. A sign painter has been engaged by the committee to make some of the following notices to be hung: "Cartoonists will please not push! There will be room for all." "Don't get excited—if there isn't enough in the kitchen we can send out for more."

"Speak kindly to your competing cartooner. He too might be hungry." "Don't hit your fellow diner in the head with the dishes—remember good dishes are expensive." We can't think of the rest.

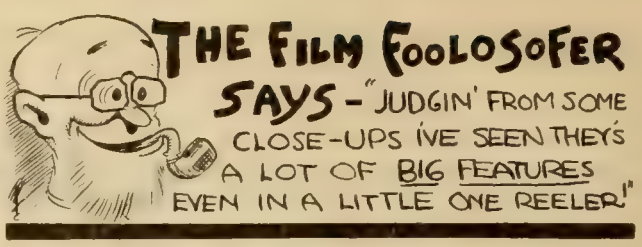
And also besides being the month in which Abraham Lincoln and G. Washington were born—(of course, those events didn't happen this particular month)—it is also the month of the Screeners and Exhibitors affair. There'll be a lot of peaches in Madison Square Garden that evening. The band will play and quips and pranks and merry jest and men of chest will all hold sway (did you get the poetry?). Anyhow, let's make it a big night.



Australian Notes

Hoyt's, Ltd., a Melbourne company, is about to erect a fine picture theater in Sydney, with a seating capacity of over 3,000 people. It will be the largest of its kind in Australia.

Australasian Films, Ltd., have secured the sole rights for Equitable Features in Australia. The first one shown here was "Divorced," with the Australian actress Hilda Spong in the leading role.

A new theater, the Piccadilly, has been opened in Sydney. It is rather small, only seating about 600, but is well fitted up. The management is at present showing Alliance Features. The prices of admission are six-pence and one shilling (10c. and 25c.) while private boxes can be obtained at one and six pence (35c.) per person. The latter is an innovation in photoplay theaters in Sydney, but promises to become very popular.

"My Old Dutch," is playing to capacity houses at the Crystal Palace here this week. The attendance so far has broken all records.

Fraser Films, Ltd., and Australian Feature Films, two prominent exchanges here, have amalgamated. The former has the agency for Universal pictures, while the latter are the sole agents for Paramount features.

The Clement Mason Cine. Co., the agents for Essanay, have just released the first of the Henry B. Walthall pictures, and are widely advertising them. Three have been released, viz., "Temper," "The Woman Hater," and "The Circular Path." Walthall is very popular in Australia, because of his work in "The Avenging Conscience."

During the past month the following features have been shown in Sydney:—"Divorced" and "Should a Wife Forgive," Equitable features; "The Morals of Marcus" and "Stolen Goods," Paramount; "Alias Jimmy Valentine" and "The Boss," World Film. TOM S. IMRIE.

LESSER BOOKING DIRECT TO EXHIBITORS.

Sol Lesser, who holds the United States rights on "The Ne'er-Do-Well," the ten-reel adaptation by Selig of the Rex Beach story, announces that for the present he is not ready to talk states rights on his big subject. Aside from the territory controlled by Mr. Lesser's California offices, all bookings will be made direct from his office at 218 West Forty-second street, New York City. It is the intention of the western film men to consider first the principal picture houses in the larger cities. Ten prints will be in circulation for the first showings.

It is Mr. Lesser's intention later to take up the question of territorial rights. Already owners of larger houses all over the country are manifesting lively interest in "The Ne'er-Do-Well." Mr. Saxe, of the three-thousand-seated Alhambra of Milwaukee, wants the subject for two weeks. In the only two cities where the picture has been shown to the public, San Francisco and Los Angeles, Manager Roth of the Portola, in the former city, ran it for two weeks, and Manager Lloyd Brown of Clune's Auditorium, Los Angeles, kept it before the picturegoers of the southern city for three weeks and has made application for a return.

J. A. KOERPEL TAKES VACATION.

"I have not had a vacation in two years," said J. A. Koerpel, who has just resigned his position as manager of the Washington, D. C., branch of the General Film Company. "That's why I am in New York just now." Koerpel dropped into the Moving Picture World office to say "how do you do" last Tuesday. He has not decided what connection he will make, but is considering several advantageous offers. Mr. Koerpel has been very successful in organizing the selling end of the film game and in efficiency work and should have no trouble making a connection.

BRITISH NOTES

THE Lancashire Chief Constables' Association remains insistent in its petition to the authorities to appoint a Government Censor of films, and their proposal is also meeting with alternative opposition and endorsement from the chiefs of police in other counties. A British parallel to official censorship as known in the States is, however, upon the Government's own admission, hardly within the bounds of possibility. Existing statutes would in the first place have to be altered and this would mean the introduction of a special Parliamentary bill for the purpose. Special legislation for anything not directly nor indirectly connected with the prosecution of the war is not likely to get a hearing in the House for some time to come.

The displacement of male labor in the commerce of the country and the growing substitution of female employment has become a noticeable tendency during the last four months of the old year, more especially so in the provinces than in London, and the application next month of the first of the conscriptive measures will impose still stronger demands upon the manhood of the country. The moving picture trade of Great Britain has already a roll of honor of men who have gone to the front proportionately as large, if not larger, than that of most callings, but the number of men whose livelihood depends upon motion pictures to be called up under the "group system" is much greater. Operators, attendants, electricians, managers, film salesmen, renters, exchangemen and every branch of the trade are represented, while the gradual incursion of women into these vocations is daily becoming more apparent. So far as the exhibitor is concerned there is little novelty in the situation. He has always employed women and girls as cashiers and attendants (or ushers) and at some of our best shows, those of Provincial Cinematograph Theaters, Ltd., for instance, female operators are well established. But women as renters, film travelers, theater managers, commissionaires and producers, to select a few diverse departments that have already been initially invaded, certainly present a futurist prospect.

Regarding the woman operator I am informed by the manager of a modern picture theater in the north who himself has trained and placed in good situations close upon one hundred women that, given adequate training and facilities for study, they have proved in every way as competent as their brothers of the lantern. "Don't you find the natural hypersensitiveness of the sex a disturbing factor?" I ventured as a query to this compliment. "I did at first," he replied, "but it is all a question of training and familiarity to the new environment. My first pupil ran out of the box in hysterics when her first film fired, but now, having selected a likely, level-headed candidate, I make it a point that no disturbing incident shall happen until, so to speak, she has become thoroughly acclimatized to her new surroundings. Then we arrange a little fire expressly for her benefit. If she survives it with prompt action and presence of mind, she passes for complete training. If not, the ordeal is repeated until she does."

Joseph R. Darling, of the Fox Film Corporation, has this week been making a tour of the provinces. There is every indication of a separate organization being inaugurated with a head office in London and several provincial branches to handle the productions of the Fox Company.

"Is there any wonder that a decent dramatist refuses to write for the cinema?" is a poignant question asked this week by a well-known British melodramatist. "Five guineas a reel is considered princely remuneration. A guinea is common payment for a plot. As for the royalty system, it is unsatisfactory, being reckoned on the sale of films by the manufacturer and not upon their exhibition. There is a vast difference between five per cent. on the gross receipts of a theater and five per cent. on the sale of a film. The latter royalty is quite contemptible; a successful play would do quite well for its author if it yielded him £50. And £50 is exactly one week's royalty at the lowest rate in a West End theater, based on average business."

And as to the scenario writers' conditions in America some very astonishing information comes to hand this week through the Society of Authors from its American correspondent. Here are a few excerpts from his despatch: "The trade is very unscrupulous in its methods of doing business. It is very difficult (for authors) to get accounts and royalties beyond the amount paid in advance. It is important, therefore, when dealing with an American firm, to see that a large advance is paid. * * * American manufacturers demand not only world rights but also rights covering the whole term of the copyright." Furthermore, American manufacturers are openly accused of giving away to the distributing companies half of the author's royalty and paying him only the other half and of appointing nominees or middlemen to absorb the author's profits in return for "handling the film." But for disingenious romancing, the gem of this communique (which is given in the organ of the "Authors' Society') is the following: "In the United States an author is allowed very little say with regard to the production of his scenario. This lies in the hands of the producer who is generally hopelessly inartistic, illiterate and illiberal."

London Trade Topics.

Paul Kimberley, who presides over the Thanhouser destinies in London, writes this week to say that Thanhouser Films, Ltd., the European headquarters of Thanhouser and Falstaff releases, will henceforth release its exclusive productions under amalgamation with the Thomas Thompson renting exchanges in the north country. The new concern, which will in no way interfere with the open market policy of Mr. Kimberley for the shorter productions, will be known as the Thompson-Thanhouser Films Company, with Messrs. Kimberley and Thompson as joint managers. Anything over three reels is an impossible proposition for the open market in England, so, following the tendency of the times, coupled with the fact that the recent large creations from the New Rochelle studios are yet to appear in England, new facilities for their exploitation had to be considered, with the result stated.

W. C. Scott, of the Flying A and Beauty products, left town in a hurry for the States and will no doubt return with the first serial picture from the Santa Barbara studio, which, by the way, is assured of a good booking list here.

What qualified and independent reviewers describe as the finest effort of British film production was shown in London the other day under the auspices of the London Film Company. It is a version of Hall Caine's play, "The Christian," and is certainly the best work done by George L. Tucker since he came over here.

"The Birth of a Nation" finishes its run at the Scala theater this week-end to make room for the first series of the official war films. King George himself attended a private show of these last week.

The American trade is presumably acquainted with Alma Taylor, the Hepworth player. Through a servant's carelessness, her home at Sunbury, only a few miles up the river from here, was entirely destroyed by fire the other evening. The house was an historical treasure, being at one time the home of Anne Boleyn.

The Exhibitors' Association is making a little experiment in renting. A patriotic film produced by the London Film Company and sufficiently strong in plot and cast to draw the public is to be exploited upon co-operative lines. The exhibitors purchases the film for £14 and gives an agreement to show it as widely as possible over given territory.

* * *

J. D. Tippett announces this week that the next line of special features to emanate from Universal House will be the Bluebird series. The Trans-Atlantic Company is one of the most ardent champions in the country of the open market cause and even on the current releasing calendar are many subjects in the 15,000 feet per week which, length not considered, are comparable in quality to many so-called exclusive features.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Alive and Kicking.

HAVING wasted a perfectly good obituary notice on Frank D. Stanton, the same is hereby retracted. Mr. Stanton writes that he is not dead, so the notice will be put in the hold-over galley, and we hope the metal stays there a long time. Mr. Stanton's death was announced in apparently good faith by a former acquaintance, but Mr. Stanton was not dead at all, he was simply out of the picture end and fooling with some musical comedy productions. Now he is with the Franklin Square, Boston, and perhaps he is advertising the shows with his usual skill. If he is, he has to prove it, for he sends nothing but his letter. We'll wait and see. Perhaps he will take the hint. Anyhow, he is where he can take the hint.

Advertising for Fair.

Do you recall the time when all the help you had from the manufacturer was his bulletin, his trade paper advertising and the right to buy one-sheets for fifteen cents apiece? That is not so terribly long ago, but long enough to have seen wonderful changes. Now the national advertising is looked upon as a part of the regular campaign of the feature companies and the booming the news films are getting will be even more with the Chicago Tribune-Selig and the Hearst-Vitagraph combinations running. Imagine a four page supplement to a Sunday paper being given over entirely to one advertisement of a news film. Four pages in one of the biggest newspapers in the country and this but part of a campaign that covers the country! Of course the newspaper itself is back of this particular advertising, but even at that it costs important money. There should be more money in news films than there seems to be. One trouble is that exhibitors in many sections decry them merely because they are not photoplays. Some of them object because the news film ninety days old does not look so very newsy, but a news film has no business being ninety days old. You can get them first run if you pay the price and if you handle it right you'll make a big profit even on first run price. Just because you do not care for them personally, do not decry them. Use them and get your money back. They'll bring people to your house you never knew lived in the same town with you, but the pictures must be up to date and properly advertised as well. Because you make money with photoplays, it does not follow that you can make money with nothing else. You can, if you will, but you must give them the same booming and use the national advertising that comes to your hand to back up your own efforts. The grocer finds it profitable to push the nationally advertised lines. Why not you?

Seeing the Handwriting.

One of the best New Year's resolutions came in the other day in the form of the January first issue of the Orpheum Herald, Aberdeen, N. D. In passing it might be noted that A. W. Walker has pulled in his front page heading with good results. Mr. Walker, speaking for the Walker Circuit, writes:

> Believing that the theater goers of Aberdeen appreciate and demand the best there is to be had, and realizing that they attend the theater to be amused—to laugh with the comedians and to enjoy the plays of romance and adventure, of the better class rather than to see films depicting intrigue, murder and bloodshed, Manager Walker has decided to discontinue showing productions released by ———.
> It is a fact that ——— Films are splendid from a standpoint of photography and scenic detail. They have produced a very few pictures that were really enjoyable. But the majority of them are gruesome—horrible, ghastly tragedies where the cast is gradually eliminated either by murder or else by some awful mishap until when the last scenes flash on the screen, there is scarcely anything left to look at but the scenery and several subjects for the undertaker.
> Furthermore, such pictures as "—— —— ——" do not leave a good impression upon the people. They are not fit for women and children to witness.

Here is one management that has found that it does not pay to be decadent. It has made the Great Discovery that at bottom the American people are clean and decent and prefer clean and decent amusement as a steady thing. Sensation will take you just so far and then it must stop. You can go no further on account of the police. People will come to see the picture in which a woman takes off part of her clothes just as they will flock to see a man lynched or press in to look at the mangled remains of the victim of a premature blast. They are not interested; they are fascinated and they will remain fascinated only so long as the horror grows. When this stops they suffer the inevitable reaction. Nudity in plays is artistic if it is offered as something artistic and not as something sensational. Sensational nudity must inevitably reach the point where having stripped a woman to her skin, you must skin her to provide a new sensation. You are pandering to a debased sentiment that feeds on growing intensity. Offer normal entertainment for normal people and you can make money regularly if you adhere to standard. Pander to the sensation seeker and you must constantly whet jaded appetite. There are comparatively few offensive films, but these do untold damage. Were there more managements like the Walker Circuit the photoplay screen would be cleaner and better and photoplay theaters would be better attended.

Celebrating.

Mart Cole, of the Dreamland, West, Texas, gave out an eight page program for the holidays, covering two weeks and making a page comment on a raise in prices. Mr. Cole did better on his part than did the printer who tried to work a photo brown with not very good results. Unless your printer can show you some work he has done that is good, it is better to trust to black and be sure of a reasonably good job than to let him try color work and fail to get away with it.

Browns and greens and reds should be used only when it is reasonably certain that the printer will turn out a good job. If he does not the effect will be spoiled. Mr. Cole has gotten out some good copy, but the printer failed. One novel idea is to take two entire pages for a display of the program for Christmas and Christmas eve. If Mr. Cole would make his printer work with him, we think that with his frank way of putting things he could raise the prices even higher and be thanked for doing so.

Simple, But Informative.

The Ideal, Springfield, Vt., tells all about itself in a four page program. It is not an ambitious effort. There is no straining for fanciful effect, but it tells and tells clearly all it has to say, and that is far more important. Not all books in leather covers are worth reading and the paper cover may be used for a book worth while. It is the same with programs. It is not so much what you spend as what you say and how you say it that makes money for you. The front page starts off well. The top third is given to the house name. The word "Program" is set in light face. It is there but it does not overshadow the "Ideal Theater" that follows in a modified Gothic. Then it tells that the program is the Week of and the two inclusive dates, not the starting date alone. Next it gives the matinee days and the time the matinees start, then the night shows and the times they start. The last division tells all about the admission prices. You have to guess at nothing. Inside they give three days to a page with a big, black day and a black date, with a few lines about each film or more lines about one feature. Each day is cut off from the others by white space and a two point rule. If the program had been offered as the answer paper to a question as what points should be covered by a program it would be marked in the nineties. It would be the full hundred if the question of decoration did not enter. There is practically no ornamentation such as box work, save the front page panel. It is all straight job work with no frills, but the type faces are well chosen and are put up by a man who has a sense of proportion, the impression is black and clean and it is a program that no one need be ashamed of. If you want an example of a cheap, but thoroughly good small four pager, perhaps the management will send you one if you make your request with a stamped return envelope enclosed.

More Celebrating.

There was an anniversary at the Majestic, Columbus, Ohio, the week of January 16th. There were, of course, special attractions, but the feature of the celebration that was a feature is suggested by this excerpt from the back page:

> In Honor of the Occasion a Special Performance Will Be Given Each Morning During the Week Except Saturday. We Will Have As Our Guests:
> ON SUNDAY—The Newsboys of Columbus.
> ON MONDAY—St. Vincent's Orphanage.
> ON TUESDAY—Hare Orphans' Home, State School for the Blind, The Convent of the Good Shepherd.
> ON WEDNESDAY—The Franklin County Children's Home, Special School for Boys.
> ON THURSDAY—State School for Deaf and Dumb.
> ON FRIDAY—State Institution for Feeble-Minded.

That sort of a celebration means something and will attract more attention than souvenirs to the patrons.

On the same lines and even more important from an advertising point of view is this:

> A decided innovation, to be inaugurated this month, is a series of motion picture entertainment for children to be given every Saturday morning for a period of ten weeks, each performance to be for the benefit of some Columbus charitable or educational organization. Those which have already been granted a place in this series are the Home and School association and the Friendly Visitors, which will likely be the beneficiaries of the first performance; the Children's hospital, the Penny lunch, the District Nursing association, the Anti-Tuberculosis society and the Baby camp. It was expected, as this publication went to press, that the first performance would be arranged for Saturday morning, January 8.

The films will consist of special programs, formulated by the Pathe company, which is famous the world over for its educational department. Travel pictures in different countries of the world, bird pictures, dramas written especially for children, educational films of various kinds and selected cartoon comedies will be among the matter that will be supplied for these entertainments. The best that the photoplay world affords in this kind of production will be shown.

On the mornings, to be announced definitely in the daily press of Columbus, the Majestic box office will be open at 9.45 and the shows will run until 12 o'clock. Anyone, therefore, buying a ticket up to 11 o'clock will be sure of seeing the complete entertainment, as the performance hours are thus made 10 and 11 o'clock. The admisison price will be 5 cents to the children and any adults who may wish to accompany children will also be admitted on extra tickets at the same price. The committee will have complete charge of tickets and money. Its own cashier will be stationed in the ticket booth and all courtesies possible to extend will be furnished free by the Majestic Management. The entire receipts from every performance, so given, will be at the disposal of the committee.

This movement for special shows for the kiddies is gaining ground rapidly. Get into the current and beat your opposition to it. You must come to it sooner or later, for much of the development of the business will hinge upon educational and cultural advantages to the children.

About the best advertising a house can possibly have is that it figures in the times and does its share toward improving general conditions. The Majestic keeps on the firing line.

Another good advertising point the Majestic offers is that whenever a new field inspector is appointed by the State he is taken to the Majestic that he may use that as a standard in inspecting other houses.

Simple and Good.

The Raymond Amusement Co., Ocean Park, California, sends in a photograph with this letter:

> We are enclosing you a photograph of our latest advertising device which we send out on our big pictures.
> The body is mounted on an ordinary express wagon and may be taken apart and stored away in fifteen minutes.
> To attract attention we use sleigh bells fastened to the wagon and these are kept constantly ringing by a simple adjustment from the hub of the wheel.
> What do you think of it? Possibly this picture in the World may suggest the use of a similar "frame up" to other exhibitors. The whole proposition cost us under fifty dollars and we would be glad to furnish particulars of construction to any exhibitor wishing the information.

If you write for particulars, be sure to enclose a return stamped and addressed envelope, but the photograph should speak for itself. It is a float recessed to frame the paper and with permanent advertising for the house. The cost is trifling, and yet the touch this gives the usual bill matter will more than repay the investment in a short time. It is no more than an advertising float, yet a float arranged to give a suggestion of care that unconsciously communicates the same idea to other features of the house. It pays to do things well and Mr. Raymond generally does things in that way. Witness many other suggestions he has made in the past few years. He speaks of a device for jangling the sleigh bells working from the hub. We think that if they were placed on the false wheels no adjustment would be needed. If Mr. Raymond will send in a drawing of the device we will be glad to reproduce it.

Good Work.

The Majestic, Grand Junction, Colo., is most nearly always doing something. The latest is its own special cut-off. This takes the place of the usual printer's rule. In this particular case it is a white on black slug. But to make it work to the best advantage they should use it to break all paragraphs, the same as the always competent Tom North uses V-L-S-E slugs instead of dashes in his Pals. The Majestic has it made up both single and double column widths. Get a really good slogan, one that you can live up to, and have it work on all your paper. You do not have to copy the Majestic, but get some one catchline you can stick to and plaster it over everything. As a matter of fact we would prefer a column slug that ran only half the column to the full column or two that the Majestic uses. The Majestic used a special children's matinee Dec. 28. For that matter it uses about everything that will make for business and invents some of the ideas, indeed many of them. He's so good that we'll run a half column cut of Manager Decker if he has the nerve.

And for another suggestion, give the once over to this use of the corner cut for Paramount. You know you do not HAVE to put it in the exact and geographical center of the advertisement. Use it where it will show best. It may be the center or the corner or somewhere else, but wherever you think it will be shown best, put it there.

Dates Needed.

The Temp-Star is the title of a four page sheet issued by J. B. Hubbard for the Temple and Star theaters, Houston, Texas. Evidently it is a daily, but a scrutiny of the issue to hand does not disclose a trace of the date of issue. It speaks of "Today's Star Bill," but it does not tell which day is referred to and you are not certain if it is the current issue. There should at least be a covering date. The sheet is 8 by 10½ well gotten up, but some advertising readers of a jeweler in the issue sent are in very poor taste and the advertiser should be asked to change his copy and his style of copy. There is no particular humor in bed bugs and the advertiser should be so advised. It is a blot on an otherwise good issue and cannot but be hurtful to the house that stands for it.

Ruff Stuff.

Ralph Ruffner had a whole lot of fun advertising "Matrimony" when it came to the Liberty, Spokane. Even with an extra page we cannot reproduce his 3-21's, but if you can imagine the copy below spread over a space three columns wide and the depth of a twenty-one inch page you can get the idea.

ARE YOU
if so
LOOK OUT!
DON'T
SEE
LIBERTY or she'll
YOU

Remember you'll have to keep her away from the Liberty for four days, starting today, Because "Matrimony" will be there until Midnight Saturday.

For the last two days he used two columns and split the display into three parts, the rest being about eighteen point. The banks are

IMAGINE
8000	GOOD	DOUBLE
WIVES	Night	TROUBLE

The eight thousand wives went to the Liberty to see how to manage their husbands, so it is Good Night to them. On Sunday they started with Double Trouble, which rounded out the advertising very nicely. There are times when such display will bring more people than the best descriptive advertising ever written.

Mr. Ruffner also prides himself on the insertion in a local labor paper of a letter received from "some workman" praising the house. If the workman had a name and address the letter would look less like a fake. If Jove can nod, why Ruffner can take a nap now and then, but it is unlike his usual alertness to put out an anonymous letter, and there are any number of workmen who would have stood for the signature.

do it nicely. They did. They use the stock Triangle covers, which has a mortise in which the house name may be set. The Regent had a block made white letters on a black ground to match the rest of the front cover, but like others they have trouble in matching the ink they use to the lithographic ink on the cover proper, just as Mr. Wilby had trouble matching their lithographic brown on the heralds with the home printed sheets. The Regent can do a little better using a glossy black, but the cover will be a hard match, at best. They offer so good a program arrangement that this is reproduced here to help others, not alone with the Triangle but with any service. Lay out your program to make it look like something. Make it look like the program of the dramatic theaters. It can be done if you will take the trouble to lay it out properly. This is about the best arrangement we have seen yet.

Wants Advice.

C. H. Colby, of the Mirror theater, Dennison, Texas, sends in a Hennegan cover and wants advice as to changes that might be made. The front page is neatly done, the added type matter fitting its space nicely, though we might suggest a plainer face for the name of the house. Inside he runs three days to a page, apportioning the space evenly. Where each day always takes the same space (and this makes for a neater effect than where the program runs as it will) it would not entail much cost to have three rule boxes made instead of carrying it all in one panel. This will separate the days at very small loss in space that is more than met by the improvement in the appearance of the sheet.

Mr. Colby does not use very good lines. In the program in question he has a "Good MinA Comedy," Friday there is a "Corking Vitagraph Comedy," and on Saturday a "Good Essanay Comedy," as well as a "Good Vitagraph Comedy-Drama." It would be more convincing if he would use some of the reference systems suggested in Picture Theater Advertising and tell what there is to it that makes him think these plays good. A program serves two purposes. It tells the titles and it makes you want to see the plays so titled. The last end is gained only where the titles are made to look attractive. "Good Drama," or "Good Comedy" is not argument and it will not only lose force through iteration, but it may even lead the reader to suspect it is all you have the heart to say about the subject, which may not always be the case. For a V-L-S-E he has a time table, showing the hours at which the subject starts. This could be used with advantage with all subjects in three or more reels.

The program is attractively set and well printed.

Udell's.

Several have asked for some more of those freak letters that Dave Udell used to write and which came in so handy for other advertisements. We print the only one we have with a suggestion to that gentleman from Paxton, Ill., that the supply is out.

DEAR OSWALD:

Your gittin to be a regular old nut. Why didn't you answer my last letter? I hunted all day and night; woke Snicckles up from a sound sleep; spilt gravy on that roses stamped rug Aunt San gi' me last October; broke the baby's new Ford (an' pretty near broke his heart) you know how he liked to drink out of a tin cup anyway. Well, I did all this for you, just trying to find that false tooth coupon (I knew I layed it sommers) you've wanted for uncle Ashpole. You can't guess where I found it. Well, you know where Hank? who use to room with us, use to take off his undershoes before going to hay: after he left I stock a large vase on the same spot (with fragrant flowers in it) some how those false teeth coupons got in there and I never would have found them if the flowers had been artificikal. Well, you can easily see the trouble I've been to, all for a gink that never writes. I'm sore. Good-bye. Inclosed you will find that ankle watch you gave me last Xmas. I don't want any of your old stuff. You don't need to write if you don't want to.

Yours sincerely,
Maggie.

Today, Dec. 15, 1915.

Well Dear Maggie:

Well Maggie, Maggie. You have been communicating with yourself wrong. Let me have just one word. Explanation. I lost my lead pencil and the store burnt down and couldn't buy any, so how in the Dickens could I write to you. I am writing this on a typewriter I got for saving blue attendance ribbons in Sunday school. I had the best attendance this year. The other feller got sick.

To square things with you I've incloseted ten tickets for the Crystal Theater tonight, where you can see: J. Warren Kerrigan in "The Adventures of Terrence O'Rourke" No. 2; "When a Queen Loved O'Rourke," just like I love you, yet, Maggie, and "Murdock MacQuarrie in "The $50,000 Jewel Robbery" and a good Han Mann Comedy.

Yours Uncrutingly,
Oswald.

From S. A.

The Carlton theater, Johannesburg, South Africa, has a good advertising man. He puts an attractor in his advertising that causes people to hunt them up. Sometimes it is "nonsensical." Two of these are shown:

In England just now they send you to jail
If you stand an old friend a small bottle of ale;
But here in South Africa treating's all right,
You can treat your best girl to the CARLTON to-night.

Willie's latest "Hymn of Hate"
"Gott strafe the British and the French
And strafe their men in every trench;
Strafe Russia, whose retreat's a plant,
And strafe the CARLTON—
(bursts into tears)—No! I can't."

Another clever line is:

Two advantages, wet or fine.
(1) Out of the car into the Carlton.
(2) Out of the Carlton into the car.

That makes a strong bid for the automobile trade, particularly on a wet night.

Four Pages.

The Theaterette, issued by the house of the same name in Fort Scott, Kansas, is a four-pager, printed on news stock. The program in detail runs on the back page and the rest of the issue is taken up with film notes and a fair sprinkling of trade ads. There should be a little more house talk to balance the film chat, for a paper such as this will be read and it is good advertising to say a few things about the house now and then. The sheet is not costly, but it makes for business because it creates interest. It's best feature is the avoidance of extremes of puffery. It does not sicken the reader with overpraise of the subjects.

Three to Two.

The Burland theater, New York City, offers a new arrangement of program with three attractions to two pages. It takes the two inside pages as a whole and runs one attraction across the entire space for about a third of the page. The other two each get the remaining two-thirds of one of the pages. This solves the problem of advertising three changes on two pages without making a turn and at the same time each of the three is more distinct than had all three been run straight across. A little figuring will sometimes make for novelty and effect. Try it on your own program some time.

Cards and Colors.

After using a post card program for a week the Third Street theater, Easton, Pa., went over to Hennegan covers, getting a very nice display. They are always up to something down in those parts. Just now they are splitting between Triangle and Paramount service, which should keep them pretty well supplied.

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising for Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throw-aways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. Mr. Sargent tells all he knows and this includes what several hundred successful exhibitors have told him. More than 100 examples. An introduction and then 299 pages of solid text. All practical because it has helped others. It will help you. Handsome clothboard binding. By mail, postpaid $2.00

Inquiries.

Questions concerning the writing (but NOT the marketing) of photoplays will be replied to without charge if addressed to the Photoplaywright Department and accompanied by a fully addressed stamped envelope. Questions must be typewritten or written with pen and ink.

Questions as to the financial standing of concerns or the probable markets for specific or certain styles of stories cannot be answered.

In no case and under no circumstance will any manuscript or synopsis be handled and if sent will be returned without reply.

A list of addresses of producing companies will be sent if the request is made direct to the publication office, but not where request is made to this department.

Warning.

EXHAUSTING the possibilities of the old school schemes and looking for new ideas with which to beguile the money from the unwary writer of photoplays we have come at last to what is technically known as the book publishing swindle. Since the latter part of November letters similar to the following have been received by many writers whose names appear to have been sold to mailing list dealers:

> Why continue to write scenarios and have them returned when you know they are worthy of production or sell them for a few dollars when the market is paying as high as $1.50 a foot or $1,500 a reel for negative print or finished film?
> We produce all film scenarios for writers who wish to market their own product at a cost of a little more than $300 a reel, thus enabling you to make an enormous profit, whereas you would only receive a few dollars if you merely sold your scenario as a manuscript.
> The demand is big! You have the ideas! Now is the time to have them produced by us and reap the just reward of your efforts.
> Scenarios sent to us for production will be given our personal consideration with a view to their immediate success.

Doesn't that listen well? Wouldn't you rather make a profit, of, say, $1,100 than to sell a script for $25, or not even sell it at all? Should you not be graceful to the nice, kind man who will make the picture and let you sell the film for $1.50 a foot? Bless his kind heart, you'll mortgage the farm for a few weeks to make that much, and you know that your picture is better than the rot you've seen on the screen. We know you know because you've written and told us so.

Now listen. The largest and most liberal buyer of film from the open market pays from sixty cents to a dollar and twenty-five cents a foot for the stuff it wants, and for that only. There are records of sales, by contract, for larger sums, but the higher figure quoted represents the open market price for the best goods.

Working under this scale—and not at the top figure—one company lately had 15,000 feet of its product turned down cold.

The head of a large concern recently stated that he could buy all the negative he wanted at an average of thirty dollars a reel, which is three cents per foot; less than perforated negative stock will sell for. What he said was that he could buy half a million feet at that figure. Most of this stuff was produced at a cost of more than $30 a reel, and was expected to sell for more, but some failure in the story or the ability of the director to get it over caused it to be offered at less than the cost of negative stock in the hope of at least getting something back.

Now! Dealing with an unknown company and with an unproved script, what chance do you stand with a $300 production?

If you get stung, on your own head be it. Don't ask for sympathy, for you will not deserve it.

For the Luva Mike.

Harry O. Hoyt, who has changed from Fox to Rolfe, sends in some scenes from a recent play submitted by a well known author with the comment, "Pour de l'amour de Michael, be definite." Passing over the French, these are the scenes:

> 1—LIERARY AT HAZELDENE. Lord Mountjoy at desk looking over papers—taps bell—butler enters—Lord Mountjoy, etc., speaks . . .
> CUT IN—Tell John, my son, I wish to see him at once.
> Back to scene—Butler out.
> 2—John Leighton's room. Foils, gloves, guns, etc. Leighton and friend boxing.
> 3—A hall. Butler enters and knocks.
> 4—Leighton's room. Lively bout on.
> 5—Hall. Butler knocks—listens—enters.
> 6—Leighton's room. Bout on. Butler enters as Leighton knocks his friend down. Butler speaks . . .
> CUT IN—The Governor wishes to see you in the library.
> Back to scene, etc.

The point is that the first spoken insert is unnatural and the second is superfluous. Have Lord M. instruct the Butler to say something and then see him go to the son and tell him: Your father wishes to speak to you in the library. Nine out of ten writers use one extra subtitle in a case like this and usually force the situation for the sake of explaining that John is the son of the Lord. It gets over the way I suggest without difficulty.

I might mention that four successive paragraphs in the synopsis read about like this:

> "By a devilish ruse John is taken prisoner."
> "In a very novel manner John escapes from jail."
> "By a set of curious circumstances John meets Mary again."
> "The property is secured by a daring expedient."

Building up on Mr. Hoyt, we fail to see that either leader is required. The man with the title speaks to the Butler; the latter gets the son. The situation is plain. There might be a better chance, earlier or later, to explain the title. The scenes might be played 1-5-6 and not with the elaboration shown, and it is assuredly safe to say that any butler who refers to his title's employer as "The Governor" would be looking for a job without credentials from his last place. It does not appear that Mountjoy is a titular governor.

If professional writers do these things, perhaps the beginner may feel that he is in safe company, but why should any one, beginner or practiced hand, make such inexcusable breaks?

Criticism.

With about a tenth of the photoplay aspirants wailing that editors will not be helpful in pointing out their errors, a correspondent writes:

> Some time ago a certain editor wrote, "Miss ....., I could offer you a helpful suggestion on the enclosed script if you would not come back on me as some writers do."

Let that sink in a moment. The editor was not only willing but anxious to help, but he feared to speak because he knew, from sad experience, that any comment might lead to an extended and acrimonious correspondence. And in spite of this the correspondent adds:

> What I would ask is this: Would you advise ignoring the editors as a class—merely acknowledge checks?
> You seem to feel more for the hard-worked editors—but are we not equally tried by some of these notional men, as often, very often, I throw ugly notes I write into the waste paper basket?
> Won't you please put in your paper a plea for us—haven't we our patience tried, too?
> Please advise how the editor should be treated. Should I ignore all advice from those who really seem to be willing to extend the glad hand?

Can you wonder that the editor writes as he does! He offers words of advice and the recipient of his letter wants to know if editors "as a class" should be ignored save as a source of checks.

Undoubtedly authors have their trials. We know more than one studio that holds scripts for six months or more, and one editor of which is constantly in the process either of falling behind or catching up. This is not pleasant, nor is it at all fair to the writer, but editors "as a class" are helpful when they feel that courtesy will not be abused and they should be listened to if they show they know what they are talking about—which is not always the case.

Literary Work.

Down beside the typewriter is some stuff left over from the Advertising for Exhibitors department, and one of these is a program with a George Ade fable as one of the attractions. It is "The Men at the Women's Club" and below is the explanatory line, "The only literary men are those who have to work at it." Like most of the Ade humor, there is more sense than nonsense, and there is the text for a whole sermon in these simple words. The only literary people are those who work at it. The men and women who pose are not literary people. They are imitative apes. The people who make good are the ones who keep so busy that they have no time to stick around and show off. They are too busy writing to have time to complain and before that they were too busy learning to write to have time for complaint. The pests are the people who pose as writers, or who want to be writers because it sounds like earning money easily. They do not want the work; they want the checks. They do not know what it is to work all day and half the night because something must be done before the spirit changes. They want to sit down now and then and dash off something for which they will receive a large check that they may show their friends and brag about. The real literary man does not call himself a literary man any more than a real newspaper man ever describes himself as a journalist.

Take the suggestion to heart and be a worker and not a poseur.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive cerbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 124.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high-class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

When you change connections and increase the amperage of your mercury arc rectifier, what is it really occurs which causes the increase? What size fuses would you require on the A. C. supply lines of your mercury arc rectifier, using 40 amperes at the arc?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 118.

The Roll of Honor on question 118 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Fort, Texas; Wilson Hays, Barton, Maryland; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, New York; G. Betz, Osgood, Indiana; Walter Collins, Tiffin, Ohio; Manuel Nosti, Tampa, Florida; Leon Grantley, Nacogdoches, Texas, and P. R. Dey, Winnipeg, Manitoba.

I have selected the reply of Brother Betz for publication.

Reply to Question No. 118.

By G. Betz, Osgood, Ind.

The Question:

Are there any circumstances under which an inside two-wing shutter is to be preferred? What is likely to happen if a three-wing outside shutter is used when the current is 60 cycle A. C.?

The Answer:

Yes, in my opinion, there is one circumstance in which the two-wing shutter is to be preferred, viz.: when on the road using mostly alternating current. It is also my opinion that a well-designed inside two-wing shutter would be at least as good, if not superior, where a very short focal length objective is used, since the light ray would spread rapidly, and an outside shutter would, of necessity, have to be, due to the rapid spreading of the light ray, a very poorly proportioned affair in order to avoid travel ghost. As to the three-wing shutter and 60-cycle alternating current, why, it will work all right, always provided the current be not less than 60 cycle, and the crank speed of the projector does not exceed 65 revolutions per minute. Above that speed the shutter blades are likely to get into synchronism with one side of the alternations, producing a waving effect in the light, meaning that the light will die down and flash up. The only remedy is to either lower the speed of the projector, equip the machine with a two-wing shutter, or, best of all, install a mercury arc rectifier, moter generator, or rotary converter.

[All of which is a tolerably complete reply to question 118. There were a considerable number of answers which said no, pointblank, and they were knocked out through the fact that when one is on the road, using mostly alternating current, the two-wing inside shutter is to be preferred, since it is much less liable to damage and not in the way in shipping; also the results, if the shutter be properly proportioned, will almost equal those of the two-wing shutter.—Ed.]

From Edmonton.

C. S. Stuckey, Edmonton, Alta., Canada, says:

Power's machines are used almost exclusively in this city. I would like, however, to make a suggestion, viz.: that the mechanism be raised a little off the machine stand by four small legs. To my way of thinking ½ or ¾ of an inch would be just fine—just enough to allow us to get a cloth underneath to wipe off oil which may work down on the base of the mechanism. Other operators have also spoken to me of this. We are anxiously awaiting the appearance of that Handbook. I think I might say that projection in most of our houses is fairly good, considering the conditions and handicaps some of the boys are obliged to work under. However, there is plenty of room for improvement with us all.

That, my brother, is always the case. When a man or a local gets to the point where he or it gets the idea that there is no room for improvement, the usefulness of that man or that local will very quickly cease. As to the suggestion, it is most respectfully referred to the Nicholas Power Company for their consideration. I think it might be accompanied with only a slight change in the base casting of the mechanism. I would, however, like to suggest to Brother Stuckey and other operators that if you oil your machine as it ought to be oiled, viz.: one drop of oil on a bearing, no oil will work down to the base of the mechanism, except in cases where oil works out of the oil well along the cam shaft or intermittent sprocket shaft, and I don't think there is much of that any more. My compliments to the Edmonton men. They seem to be a live, progressive bunch, and that's the kind we need.

President of the United States Endorses the Editor's Position

At the Motion Picture Board of Trade dinner on January 27th, President Wilson, who, by the way, can express more hard, rock-bottom sense with a given number of words than any man it has been my privilege to hear speak, unconsciously, but, nevertheless, most emphatically took sides with the position this department has occupied for lo these many years in the matter of overspeeding the projection machine. And more than that, this was the one important point, so far as motion pictures be concerned, he made in his entire address. The president said in substance:

"It has often been my privilege to see myself in moving pictures, and I have been deeply chagrined at the spectacle. I note the extreme rapidity with which I am made to walk, the way in which I produce uncommon grimaces, and the extraordinary exhibition I made of myself has since caused me unhappy moments. It impressed me that I was viewing some sort of puppet or automaton which resembled me in appearance."

I trust theater managers and operators who are guilty of overspeeding will at least take this statement, made by the President of the United States, somewhat to heart; particularly those who pretend to conduct high-class houses, and yet commit this most heinous offense. To the speed-em-up manager and operator nothing is in any degree sacred. They are just as ready to take liberties with the chief executive of the nation as of anyone else. But the best part of this whole thing is, that the President made the point without any knowledge or consciousness of what he was doing. In all human probability he did not know why he was made a spectacle; he did not know it was due to the overspeeding of the film. He simply knew that moving pictures did, all too often, place him in an utterly ridiculous light. But I can tell him that, as you, I, and everyone else connected with the moving picture industry knows, it is entirely due to a practice which is totally, entirely, and absolutely unnecessary, viz.: running the films above the speed which will give naturalness of action.

The presence of the President at the Motion Picture Board of Trade dinner was, it seems to me, a matter of much importance to the moving picture industry. Viewed in the cold light of reason and common sense it seems a rather absurd statement to make, but it is, nevertheless a fact that the President's acceptance of the hospitality of the representative organization of an industry stamps that industry indelibly with the word "important." More than this, the very fact that the chief executive has, in his official capacity, been entertained by the representative organization of the moving picture industry lends to that industry a certain dignity, and gives to it a certain standing which it did not before possess.

The Motion Picture Board of Trade dinner has been amply covered by my good friend, Stephen Bush, but the unconscious protest made by the President with regard to the overspeeding of projection is too important a matter to not be made special note of in this department. This is the more true because the President, in voicing his own objection to this most obnoxious practice, also voiced the protest of millions of people who are daily outraged without knowing how to make effective protest, or in fact, knowing that there really is anything wrong; meaning by that that unless they saw the picture which is placed before them at race horse speed projected at proper speed, they don't know or realize the fact that they are being cheated.

S. O. S.

W. H. Stricker, Tulsa, Oklahoma, orders both question booklets, sends in a subscription to the World, and says:

Hurry up the new "Bible," because the rats got into the first and second edition and spoiled a lot of the pages.

Fighting the Arc.

A paragraph in a letter from H. E. Gonder, Wichita, Kansas, says:

> Best results are obtained with present adjustment by keeping the carbons close together—just open enough to arc. This requires the constant attention of the operator; in fact, it seems that when using A.C. the operator must be continually fighting his arc to keep a uniform light on his screen, regardless of what the conditions are.

Right you are, Brother Gonder, unless you increase your amperage to not less than 80. With 40, 50, or even 60 amperes, in order to secure a good spot it is absolutely necessary that the carbons be separated not more than ⅛ of an inch, and usually even less than that. The operator who gets good illumination with anything less than 70 amperes A.C., will have to be right there on the job every second of the time, and to approach D.C. results you must use from 80 to 90.

Chromatic Aberration of the Condenser Beam.

Ralph W. Martin, Los Angeles, California, contributes the following exceedingly interesting article on chromatic aberration of the condenser beam. If I understand this matter correctly, and Neighbor Martin has set forth the conditions correctly, then it seems to me that diagram No. 3 is the best explanation we have ever had for the appearance of the ghost on the screen which always accompanies a too great advancement of the condenser toward the film.

In Fig. 1 a crater is constructed by cutting an aperture in a piece of cardboard and placing a piece of ground glass behind it. Back of this is placed a 100 C. P. incandescent lamp. The crater and screen are placed at conjugate foci of the condensers. The screen corresponds to the aperature plate of the machine. A piece of cardboard pierced with a pin hole is shown in Fig. 1

The results as observed upon the screen Fig 1 are: The crater is focused in full definition on the screen, but is colored with the tints of the spectrum as shown. Now it has been demonstrated by the Kinema-color process that all the colors of the spectrum can be reduced to approximately two shades, viz: a reddish-orange, and bluish-green, which, for the sake of clearness, we will call orange and green.

In Fig. 2 are shown the same conditions described in connection with Fig. 1, except that the colors of the spectrum have been reduced to the two primary shades, viz: orange and green. Notice at the screen (aperature) that the colored rays combine and form white light.

Now, if the process shown in Fig. 2 be continued, and a very large number of rays be drawn, using orange and green ink, the result will appear as per Fig. 3.

In Fig. 3 it is observed that the beam is enclosed by an orange envelope, which is thickest toward the central part of the beam and comes to a point, or disappears entirely at the aperature and the condenser. The beam has a core in the center, which same is composed of the violet, blue and green shades of the spectrum. The white part of the beam is the result of mixing the other two primary shades, but the mixture is not perfect at all positions. At the section AA, Fig. 3, the the white light is most pure, but as it approaches the position BB, the colors at the violet end of the spectrum commence to predominate, so that at Section BB the white zone has changed to a dirty purple. In view of this condition it is not difficult to understand why a ghost appears on the screen when the aperature is brought back too far toward point BB. When properly located all the colors of the beam finally combine at the aperture to form pure white light, and since it passes from aperture to objective, all light beyond the aperture is pure white. It is also noted that the light at section AA is pure white.

Now it must be remembered that the results shown in Fig. 3 can only be approximately true, since all the colors of the spectrum, which are infinite in number, have been reduced to two shades.

Even if only seven colors had been used in the drawing, the straight lines in Fig. 3 would show as curves, and more closely resemble the true shape of the actual beam. Nevertheless, when a small screen is placed a different sections of the actual beam, the results show a very close agreement with the theories set forth.

In photographing the beam, only the white and green zones are actinic and show in the photograph, and by observing the actual beam it is seen that the theoretical shape of the combined white and green zones agrees very closely with the photograph. But even to the eye the beam has a curved shape, probably due to the existence of infra red at the outer edge of the orange envelope. It is finally seen, as a further point in practical application, that one of the important functions of having the crater in true focus at the aperture is to purify the light from color effects. The aperature may be placed a little forward of the focal plane (Front conjugate foci point of condensed system, Ed.), but should never be behind it.

It will be observed that in Fig. 1 Brother Martin has taken a line of argument well calculated to make clear the exact action of light when it is passed through the outer edge of the condensing lens. You will observe that in their order the colors are pulled down into the light beam by chromatic aberration, plus spherical aberration, which is a corrobation of the statement I have already several times made that chromatic and spherical aberration simply amounted, in effect, to a discoloration of the light ray, and hence a diminution of its brilliancy. There are other and exceedingly interesting articles from Friend Martin on the editor's desk, one of which deals with anastigmatism, and still another with spherical aberration. There are in hand at the present time quite a number of the articles, all accompanied by exceedingly well made drawings. We recommend them to the careful consideration and study of our readers, and invite discussion thereon. It really looks now as though the work we started a year ago in going to end in the complete understanding of the projector optical system, and in its very great improvement in a number of different ways.

When Professor Wall to all intents and purposes told the editor he was an ignoramus and a fool, the editor was not absolutely certain that events would not prove the professor to be right at least in-so-far as the light ray proposition be concerned. In other words, the ground under our editorial feet seemed at that time to be rather shaky and decidedly wobbly, but we nevertheless stuck by our guns, and the result has even now fully vindicated our position in this matter. This is not the first time the editor has had the "last laugh"—said to be the best one.

A New Screen Process.

From Philadelphia comes news of a screen process known as "Luna-Lite." The managing director of The Luna-Lite Company called at my office and finding me absent, left the following description, which is given without comment, just as Mr. Turner dictated it to my secretary. I shall examine into this matter carefully at the earliest opportunity, and then will tell you what I think of it personally. Mr. Turner's claims are rather large. Let us hope, however, that Luna-Lite will fully justify him in his statements. The following is a description of Luna-Lite.

> An efficiency process has been perfected which in turn perfects the actual showing, or exhibition, of moving pictures or photoplays. This process is chemical, optical, and actually luminous—it shines in the dark. The projection, instead of being thrown upon an ordinary screen surface is thrown into what is called an ultra violet or stereoscopic field, or cushion of ultra violet rays actually pouring out from the screen surface to meet the light of projection. To accomplish this the screen surface must first be chemicalized, so as to appear snow-white in daylight or under projection, but actually luminous in the dark with the intense ultra violet colored rays. When the chemicalization has been completed, and when the chemicalized screen surface is fairly baptized before projection begins, the ultra violet rays are developed with great intensity, and is maintained in the picture presentation thereafter by the light of projection resulting first: In marvelous depth of detail, appearance and dimension or body. In a word, with stereoscopic effect, which has not been hitherto obtainable. Two: Snow-white brilliancy of the curtain for the picture showings. Three: Actual correction of acute and oblique distortion as ordinarily occurring from the forward and side seats and angles. Other minor perfections are accomplished, but the above are the most important, thus making it actually possible for the first time to standardize the photoplay house throughout.
> The defined processing of the curtain to derive the product "Luna-Lite" is covered by the basic first and six claims of the U. S. Letters Patent No. 1,166,569 of January 4, 1916, and its trade-name is its technical and duly registered trademark.

There is one very remarkable feature in connection with the foregoing, viz.: here is a company which actually proposes to create and use the much abused "ultra violet" rays which up to this date every one has slandered, vilified, cursed and muck-raked. The violet ray has heretofore been accused of about every crime in the dictionary, from eye strain to pimples on the nose of the office cat, and there has been none to voice defense in any degree. Personally, the editor feels that if he were to make a date on the street corner (a thing he, of course, never does) with Miss Ulta V. Ray, he would of necessity request that she wear a Scotch plaid skirt, French slippers, a sun-bonnet, and carry a blue-bordered handkerchief in one hand and a turnip in the other, so he would know her. Well, here is a company who proposes to bring the coy U. V. R. out right in front of the curtain and introduce her to us all. Thanks! We'll look the lady over mit bleasure.

Never Too Old to Learn.

Frank Olson, and Bob Woodworth, Mitchell, S. Dakota, writes:

> We notice in December 16th issue request for reports from operators who have tried the Speer carbons. We have, and have found them to be very good—in fact fully equal to any other of several brands we have used. Our current is not the best, as the plant is quite old and the voltage at times very unsteady. We are pulling from 50 to 60 amperes at the arc, using Bell-Howell inductors. Are constant readers of the department, which has been of great benefit to us. A fellow never gets too old to learn, especially in this profession. A few days ago we received a set of the Hawkins' Guide, and found them to be O. K. in every respect. We also have the Handbook, which is something we would under no circumstances be without. As soon as the new one is ready we want one.

Your name has been put on the list to be notified when the new book is ready. As to the Speer carbons, your experience corroborates that of many others who have reported. The only criticism we have had on the Speer is that it is a trifle harder than other carbons (which may or may not be a fault), and that they don't stand overload very well, though, as I have before said, the latter does not necessarily constitute a fault either.

Jimmy, the Usher, Is Costly.

J. H. Anderson, Carroll, Iowa, says:

> Enclosed find clipping from local paper concerning a fire at the Star Theater. It was a case where Jimmy,-the-Usher runs the machine, with an ordinary fan motor for power. You will notice the clipping says that this could not have occurred when the show was in operation. Some joke, don't you think? The fact is there was a lack of oil in the friction case of the automatic fire shutter, and the thing stuck from the night before. But Mr. Jimmy-the-Usher operator did not notice this trifling circumstance, and struck the arc, with fire works as a result. Possibly the manager of this particular house may conclude it is cheaper to hire an operator when he re-opens. I am happy to say it was not a member of local 85 I. A. T. S. E., to which I belong.

The clipping in question pulls the old, time honored yarn about the "explosion" of a reel of film. Says the accident occurred partly as a result of carelessness on the part of the operator, or rather the operator's assistant, who was alone in the building at the time the fire occurred. Also says the accident was one which could not possibly have occurred while the show was in progress, as "the thought of fire is then uppermost in the operator's mind, and precautions against it are taken, which were neglected while the operator was there alone."

One gets really tired of commenting on such idiotic propositions as this. It seems, both from the paper and from Brother Anderson's letter, that there was no competent operator on the job, but merely a "Jimmy-the-Usher," and therefore I cannot see that the theater manager is entitled to any sympathy whatever. The lesson is a somewhat costly one, but will be worth the money if it teaches Mr. Manager that it is cheaper to pay out money in salary to a competent operator than for fire loss. Next time he might not be so lucky and death might be added to the property loss.

New Handbook.

R. S. Slagle, La Rue, Ohio, says:

> About what time will we get that new Handbook? Also put my name down on your list, for I want one. I noticed recently where some chap asked you to put your "John Hancock" on the front page. I wish you would put a picture of your "mug" there also. By the way, what would you think of a man who served one and a half years' apprenticeship, and has had one year's actual experience as operator, who tried to use solid carbons above and below with A.C.? His idea was not a success, and I told him the difference pretty quick.

Your name has been added to the list of those to be notified when the new book is ready. As to my picture on the front page, why that does not appeal to me. I do publish a map of my mug in the department about every two years, because the new men like to see who they are talking to, but to put it in the book—well, I dunno; that always looked queer to me. You may perhaps say there is no difference, and quite likely you are correct; but it does not seem that way to me. As to the operator in question, why I am not surprised. He probably is just one of those self-satisfied boneheads who don't believe there is any necessity in studying. Books and the department probably represent to him the very height of absurdity. I am glad to say that the ivory top tribe is decreasing in numbers, but they nevertheless are still with us.

Proposes to Improve.

E. I. Wilson, St. Joseph, Missouri, orders the question booklets, and says:

> I have been operating something more than six years, but never having encountered any trouble I could not remedy, have never purchased a Handbook, neither, I am sorry to say, have I done much of any studying, meaning that I have never gotten down to the real "meat" of the subject. In the future, however, I intend to absorb all the knowledge I possibly can. Suppose a man to have mechanical ability, the questions, the "Bible," and Hawkins' Electrical Guide, and, oh yes, several years' experience, can he, by hard study, become a really honest-to-gosh operator? If there are any optical books or anything else that will help, please give me a list of them, as I am sure going after the right to tack that R. O. (Real Operator) sign after my name. The reason you have not been bothered with outbursts from me before is because I know I had no business in the fast company you keep. However, after I do a whole lot of hard work on those books will probably hear from me regularly.

Welcome to our city, Brother Wilson. You will find, after you get wet all over, that the water is fine; also I am very sure that the more you dig down into the finer points in your profession the more interested you will become, and I am quite sure, old man, that you will have more pride in associating with men of knowledge and attainment, such as are hundreds of our correspondents I could name, than with the down-with-knowledge tribe.

Sawdust and Pool Balls.

G. Betz, Osgood, Indiana, sends in reply to Question 117, and says:

> With reference to the article by "Hasco" of the Sterling Camera & Film Company, most likely he imagines moving picture machine operators to have a discarded pool ball filled with sawdust, in place of a head. Well, all I have to say is that probably if operators did not regulate projection speed, the picture would in many instances be a sadly jumbled up affair. Could you recommend a good coating for the inside of the lens barrel to eliminate reflection? In closing this letter let me wish you a happy and healthful New Year, and that when 1917 rolls around the projection department will still be doing business at the old stand, with Brother Richardson at the wheel.

Well, Neighbor Betz, I used to myself think a goodly number of the boys had something in the nature of a pool ball filled with sawdust, but most of them have traded that brand of bean for something better. True, we still have the solid ivory variety with us, but they grow less in number year by year. Possibly "Hasco" himself found one of the pool balls an operator had discarded, though, judging by his letter, he must have spilled the sawdust out when he substituted it for his own head, and you can't expect very much from a hollow cavity.

I think you will find that "coach black (ground in Japan) will fill the bill on interior of lens barrel, the idea being to get a perfectly dead black, without any gloss. Get it at any paint store.

Dissolving With a Rectifier.

George Benner, Lima, Ohio, writes:

Am using a Westinghouse 40 ampere rectifier, and wish to dissolve one picture into the next. The way I am connected up now one arc goes out as the other is struck, and it takes several minutes for the arc to settle down. Have tried rheostat on A.C., but it causes too much flicker, and the crater has to be burned for D. C. Can you suggest any way of burning two lamps at once on this rectifier? The Westinghouse Company say it cannot be done, but I have more faith in Richardson than in them, because it was through you we found out that our rectifier, from which we were pulling 30 amperes, could be made to have a 30, 40 or 50 ampere capacity by changing bulbs. Some time ago the company told us we could not get more than 30 amperes, but after you wrote them they concluded we could, and we are now pulling 40. We are thinking of changing lenses. Have 5-inch E. F. lenses, having a 1 7/16 diameter and working at 2½-inch back focus. Lenses of both machines supposed to be 5-inch E. F. What diameter would you recommend? Cannot get lamp of one machine far enough back to use combination as per Table No. 1.

As to the rectifier, no, Brother Benner, there is no way in which you can burn both arcs from a rectifier tube. It simply cannot be did. You can use heat-up-with-a-rheostate scheme, but I don't like it. The only practical thing for you to do, I think, is to do just what you are doing, viz.: Wire in multiple and fade one into the next by stealing the current. That, of course, does not give the best possible results, nor does it give you any opportunity to burn in new carbons, but it is that or the rheostat. As to the lens proposition, always assuming that the new lens will work at the same back focus, you have only to examine Table No. 1. I think that a 1 7/16 opening with one 6½ and one 7½ condenser and not less than 18 inches between the apex of the front lens and the film will be a good condition, or a 1½ opening with the same condenser combination and the same distance. It would place your arc about 3.5 inches from the lens. I would suggest, however, that you get a lens a little larger than that while you are about it, say 1⅝ or even 1¾". One thing I must caution you all about, however, is the distances given in Table No. 1 are minimum. These distances are not intended to be fixed distances, but merely minimum. In other words don't have your condenser any closer to the film than that. It may be found, however, that greater distance will give better results.

That is one disadvantage of the rectifier. With the motor generator set you can overload it as much as 100 per cent for a short time without hurting anything, but you can't do that with the rectifier tube. If you could succeed in overloading your tube 100 per cent you would probably be out one tube.

Grounding.

A. H. Robbins, Rockland, Massachusetts, writes:

Well, I see you are going to try that Go-Devil again and make more business for the "Saw-bones." In January 1st issue I notice one or two points concerning which I think you and I are due to "chew the rag." With regard to the grounding of a machine with bell wire, presuming it to be No. 16 or 17 B. & S., while it will carry away any static charges which may develop, it seems to me that this wire may, under certain circumstances, be called upon to carry the machine current. If we are taking current from one side of a three-wire system, the neutral of which is grounded, and should develop a ground in our lamphouse, the wire which grounds the machine will then have to carry the current through the rheostat, or shunt circuit, depending upon the method of connecting the rheostat. It would seem to me that this ground wire should be at least No. 10 B & S, and should preferably be of such size as will be properly protected by the fuses supplying the machine.. With regard to the electrical trouble referred to on page 82, why I agree with the statement made by Mr. Hill, and, furthermore this trouble may be due to crossed wires: that is to say, a 550 volt system which has developed a partial or temporary ground may be crossed with the 220 volt system supplying power to the machine, which would explain the existence of the 550 volt difference of potential between the ground and the machine. The electric light company should be notified immediately in a case of that kind, and if they haven't a man who can promptly find and remedy such a trouble they had better go to the National Electrical Association for information. Meanwhile, Friend Operator, don't get your body between the live machine wires and the ground, or you may have something beside burned film in the operating room.

Don't know what you mean by "trying the Go-Devil again." Could not very well "try it again" because I haven't stopped trying it yet, except a couple of days I was laid up in bed. Am going to make a trip to St. Louis in February, and my one regret is that it is the wrong time of the year, so I cannot travel by the gasoline route.

As to the grounding proposition, why I cannot agree with you. If a ground of such strength develops that it would require a No. 10 wire to carry it, I would rather see Mr. Bell Wire smoke, shut down and remedy the trouble, than to undertake to pump 25 to 40 amperes through the iron of the operating room frame. Of course under certain conditions, with the three-wire system, it would be entirely possible to do that very thing, but it might be a very dangerous thing to do; also if the rheostat be on the neutral wire there would be a dead short circuit. Nope, I cannot agree with you there. If there is a ground that pulls sufficient current to make a bell wire smoke, better shut down and remedy the trouble.

He Came Back.

The writer is always glad to be able to chronicle the "come back" of a really good man. One year ago Brother William Franke (the "e" is silent, as in clam) was defeated for re-election as business agent of Boston Local Union No. 182. Instead of sitting down and howling at the moon, or putting in his time bewailing his misfortune, Billy, old boy, promptly proceeded to grab off a job of crank twisting, utilising his spare moments rebuilding his union political fences. So well did he succeed in the repair process that at the last election he defeated his opponent and was re-elected to his old position. He is now business agent of Local 182.

This department wishes to congratulate not only Brother Franke, who is the livest kind of a live wire, but also the local. We firmly believe that, while Franke may make his mistakes (most of us do that little thing), still, when all is said and done, he is pre-eminently the right man in the right place. Who says a business agent can't come back?

Patiently Waiting.

Bert Carlson, Minneapolis, Minnesota, says:

I am working on several kinks for the Power's, which I will send as soon as I can try them out. Where can I get literature on the Vanoscope? I know the principle, but there is nothing like knowing the whole thing. Projection in Minneapolis is very good, except where the managers think the General Electric and the exchange have too big a bill, but these places are very few. Of course, I have the usual compliments to make on the department; in fact I take the World only for the projection department and motion picture photography. Am not going to ask when the Handbook will be out, but just patiently wait.

That is the best scheme, Brother Carlson. It is exactly what I am doing—patiently waiting and, incidentally, also working—reading page proof. I used to live at 2323 Nineteenth Avenue, South, Minneapolis, when I was on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad, between Minneapolis and North La Crosse. I don't quite remember, but think it was in 1885. As to the Vanoscope end of your question, why I really don't know where you can get the dope now. I am not even certain that the company still maintains an office in New York City.

100 Per Cent. Organized.

J. M. Alexander, Ottawa, Canada, sends for the two question booklets and says:

I am a little late in beginning, but nevertheless will try and catch up with the procession. Come along with the new Handbook quickly. Have the second edition and the Hawkin's Guide, but am patiently waiting for the new one. Am glad to be able to say that we operators here in Ottawa are 100 per cent. organized. In closing, I wish you and the department all the luck in the world.

Yes, mam; thankee, mam! The booklets have gone forward, and I am glad that you have joined the procession of progress in knowledge. My compliments to the Ottawa men, yourself included. May your troubles be few, and your joys many during the coming year.

THE NEW HANDBOOK

In reply to many inquiries received from our friends, we beg to announce that the third edition of the Motion Picture Handbook will be ready for mailing to purchasers early in March. The price has not yet been determined.

Definite information as to price and exact publication date will be given in an early issue.

Wants to Become an Amateur Cinematographer.

R. H. Hyde, Oklahoma, writes:

I am an operator with fifteen years' experience, starting my career with one of the first long length subjects made, Edison's "Train Robbery," and, in the last few years, I have done a little slide work which has been very successful, and now I am in the market for a motion picture camera.

Noticed that you mentioned a $35 camera, but you did not comment on it. Do you think that it would be at all practical for first simple amateur and experimental work at that price? I do not expect much from it.

I also wish to have you answer some questions through your department. 1st. Is there any difference in kind of film used for positive and negative stock? 2nd. What is the average time of exposure and intensity of light in printing, provided negative is of average density? 3d. Can the ordinary developer tubes put out by Kodak firm be used in developing negatives and positives? I have a good Power's 6 head that I wish to use as a printer. What would you suggest towards framing it up as a printer? Give me the easiest and least expensive method of making titles where only one print of each is wanted.

I did not comment on the $35 camera, as I thought it superfluous to say that a $35 camera compares with a professional camera in the same ratio as their prices. However, if one is limited as to capital and cannot afford to invest in a better instrument or does not feel justified in going to greater expense in what they may regard as an experiment in the field of cinematography, it is about as low in price as one can go and obtain an instrument that will actually take motion pictures, unless one is extremely fortunate in securing a very low price on a second-hand camera.

There is a very great difference in positive and negative stock. Negative stock is used in taking the negative and positive stock is the stock used for making the prints from the negative.

In using a projection head for printing, use a half opening single blade shutter and fasten the head to the inside wall of the dark room where you intend to work; first cutting a hole in the wall just opposite the lens opening in the head.

Fasten a small turning handle on the balance wheel shaft, or any shaft that will make a one-picture shift at each turn. Cut a small hole in the wall above the projection head and a little to one side, so that you can put a stiff rod through it about three feet long. Put a small bracket on the end which projects outside the dark room, fastening to it an ordinary sixteen-candle power bulb on a flexible cord connection, so that the lamp is directly opposite the first hole in the wall. By means of this rod you will be able to move the light close or far away from your improvised printing machine from inside the dark room. If you have no electricity you can use a gas jet with a gas tube connection or use a small lamp. By cutting some notches in the rod, it is possible to determine the distance of the light without leaving the dark room.

Above the printing machine, place a wooden arm with two pegs or studs directly over the feed sprocket of the machine head. Place your roll of negative on the peg nearest the wall, and a roll of positive stock on the other peg; pull down the ends of the two rolls and place them evenly together, being sure that they are placed with the emulsion or dull surfaces in contact. Thread up the machine with the two films, at the same time, giving the positive film a little larger loop than the negative at the top and the negative a little larger loop at the bottom. You can put a spool on the take-up and take up the positive as fast as printed, but this is not necessary, as both negative and positive may be run into a cloth rack or into cloth-lined boxes. You will find cloth-lined boxes or kegs very handy in many ways in handling film, and it is a good plan to have at least three or four of them. With these you can run the positive and negative into separate boxes and thus avoid the risk of snarling and scratching when the two are run into one receptacle.

Now, with the lamp close to the machine, run off a few turns at a regular rate, making about two turns to the second; move the light away about half the length of the rod and repeat, then take the short strip that you have printed and develope it. From this test you can determine just what distance you need to place your light to get the correct exposure. If this test strip is too light, get a stronger light or turn more slowly; if too dark, move the light farther away.

You will find your last two questions answered in another article which appears in this issue.

Drying Drums.

E. C. W., Conneaut, Ohio, writes:

I have built a plant for myself here converting a barn building by lining it throughout with building paper. I sealed all of the windows shut and made the doors tight so as to get away from the dust as much as possible.

I have a Universal camera and a Hansman step printer and have been very successful so far, considering the fact that I did not know anything about the business, except ordinary photography a year ago.

I do developing on pin frames in trays, but do not like to dry the films on the frames as it makes buckles in the film where it passes around the pins. Where can I buy drying drums or how would I go about making them?

I have never worked for any company and all that I know about the business is what I have picked up and the help I have received from the Motion Picture Photography Department in the World.

A good way to make a drying drum is to get two old carriage wheels of equal diameter and mount them on a gas pipe fastened between two posts about four to six feet apart. Get a sufficient quantity of three-quarters or inch half round beading from the lumber yard and, with the two wheels acting as the ends or heads of the drum, nail the flat side of the half round sticks, cut the proper length for your drum, at each end to the felloes of the wheels leaving a three inch space between the lath as you nail them on. If you cannot get carriage wheels, you can have circular forms made on a scroll or band saw at the lumber mill. If you wish a drum more than six feet long, a third wheel should be added to the center to prevent the slats from bowing or bending in the middle.

It is needless to warn you that you must exercise great care in unwinding from a pin frame not to scratch the film. It is a good plan to have a stand about thirty to thirty-six inches high with an inclined spindle which fits a hole bored in the center of the pin frame. This is a very handy arrangement not only for winding off but also for winding onto a pin frame. Nevertheless, it is desirable that one have an assistant to turn the frame and help in the winding off onto the drying drum.

As film shrinks considerably in drying it is well to have one or two of the slats on the drum mounted on springs which will give as the film shrinks in drying. This is not absolutely necessary, as the slats, unless unusually stiff, are sufficiently elastic to give enough to allow for the shrinkage.

Do not pin the ends of the film directly to the drum but fasten a strong rubber band to each end and loop them over the fastening tacks.

A Book for Topical Cameramen.

A booklet entitled "Hints to Newsfilm Cameramen," by P. D. Hagen, has been sent to this department by Eric E. Mayell, Editor of the Pathe News, 1 Congress Street, Jersey City, N. J., with a note saying that they would be pleased to send free copies, as long as they lasted, to any free-lance camera man who cared to write asking for a copy.

This little booklet of only sixteen pages is crammed full of meat of great value to any cameraman. It is a concise epitome of what every good news and scenic operator should know. It tells briefly what to take and what not to take, how to take it and the best way to send it for submission to the news weeklies. It gives tables and times of different shutter openings.

The booklet ends with this golden rule, 'Make as good a picture for others as you would like others to make for you."

Nothing but the very best is good enough. Think and think hard, how you can make the best pictures. Put it all down in writing in advance; plan your scenes: first I shall stand there, to get the best effect. Then I shall walk around the crowd to this spot, which will be held for me by friend So-and-So, and make a close-up. I shall want my two-inch lens for this scene and my six-inch for the other. The event will take place at such and such an hour; therefore the sun will be there, and I must turn my camera thus and so to get the best lighting and composition. That tree will mash the sky nicely and artistically; I must take my position so as to include that branch in the picture. I will have everything ready to slip the film at once.

There is plenty of room at the top of your profession, but you will not get there by standing about or just grinding away. Brain work is ultimately the only way to big money.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by Clarence E. Sinn and S. M. Berg

Inquiries.

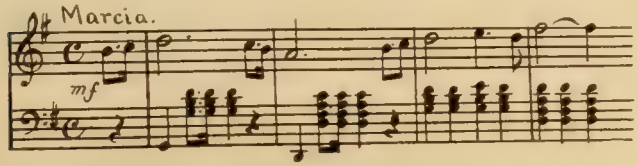
QUESTIONS concerning any phase of the work of the orchestral leader in a photoplay theater may be addressed to the Moving Picture World and the answers of Mr. Berg will appear in a Question and Answer Department, which will be a regular feature of our Music Page.

Improvising.

ARTICLE VI.

BY CLARENCE E. SINN.

Example 20 (Article V.) gives an alteration of the subject by lengthening some of the notes and changing the tempo. It has a "running accompaniment," giving it a flowing character—something of a sentimental nature. The character of this (as in many themes) can be materially changed by altering the accompaniment. Example 21 gives the same melody as Example 20, but the accompaniment—played risoluto and strongly accented—gives the melody a decided martial character. (See Ex. 21.)



Ex. 21.

"Theme" and "Subject."

As Mr. Berg so aptly points out in the Moving Picture World, January 15th, page 427, some new interpretation of the word "theme" must be accepted among moving picture musicians. The interpretation of music when used as a setting or accompaniment to moving pictures often depends upon conditions entirely different from those governing the interpretation of the same music in the concert room. For this and other reasons moving picture music is developing along certain lines which are entirely its own, and in time must have a nomenclature all its own. Some of the accepted definitions of well known terms do not always convey the exact idea intended to be conveyed, and no other terms are available to express oneself in.

Mr. Berg, after quoting accepted authorities in definition of the words "theme," "subject" and "aria," gives the viewpoint he intends to follow regarding the word "theme"—namely, a complete melody or strain of music selected for its fitness to accompany a certain scene (or character). You will find his idea exemplified in Mr. Berg's well planned "cue-sheets" for various pictures as now appearing in this department, and I think we can do no better than take Mr. Berg's acceptance of this term.

In the future I shall use the word "theme" to describe a strain, melody or complete musical idea capable of describing (or in improvising, being made to describe) a certain scene or character.

When I say "describe" I mean, of course, being musically appropriate to the scene or character.

Subject.

As to the word "subject," I shall be compelled to use it (in these articles on improvising) to mean the few measures from which a theme is developed. And this in spite of the text book definitions because I don't know of any better word to convey my meaning. For instance, in Article V. Example 15 ("The Mable Waltz") the first two, measures might be taken as the "subject" (inverted in the next two), the first 8 measures an incomplete sentence or phrase, while the full 16 measures—completing the musical idea—is the theme.

Imitation.

A correspondent chides me for using the word "repetition" (Article II, page 1824, Dec. 4th) instead of the more correct term "imitation." I plead guilty. It was a slip which I didn't notice until I saw it in print. When the same identical measure or phrase is repeated, that, of course, is repetition and needs no comment. But when a figure or a subject is reproduced—no matter whether it is in the same position or not, just so it is the same shape—that would be imitation.

The subject of Example 15 (first two measures) consists of a half note, a quarter note and a dotted half ascending. Had the next two measures been also ascending, the imitation would have been strict. The figure is the same—a half a quarter and a dotted half note—so it is imitation, but the movement is not in the same direction. It is called "free imitation." See "a" and "b," Ex. 22.

Ex. 22.

(In Ex. 22 "a" is the original subject. "b" is the same thing inverted; the same as being turned upside down. The figure is the same—the only difference being that it is descending instead of ascending as in the original subject—"a.")

Example 23 gives an illustration of strict imitation.

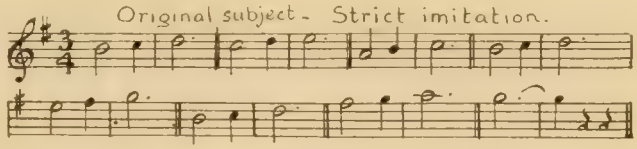
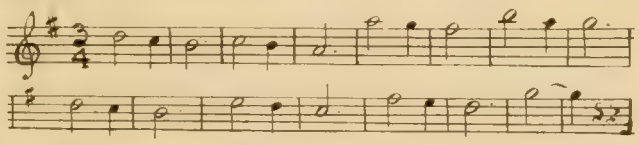
You will notice the original subject in the first two measures. The next two are in exact imitation—ascending one degree at a time as in the original subject.



Ex. 23.

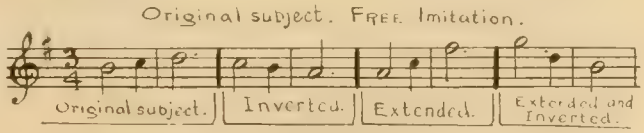
Suppose we take for our subject an inversion of the original. We now have a new subject to work on. The figure is the same, but the motion is different; it now descends one degree at a time. Developing this subject in strict imitation would give a result like that shown in Ex. 24.



Ex. 24.

Notice that each two measures is an exact imitation of the first two in everything except position. Each group is a half, a quarter and a dotted half note, descending one degree at a time—strict imitation.

In Example 25 the original subject is shown in the first two measures; a half, a quarter and a dotted half note ascending one degree at a time. The next two measures contain the same figure but inverted. This is imitation, though not strict—not exact. The next two measures also contain the same figure as found in the original subject, likewise ascending, but the itnervals are more than one degree apart. These intervals are extended, and in that respect they differ from the original subject. The figure is the same—a half, quarter and dotted half note. The last two measures give the subject altered by inversion and extension—it still imitates the figure, though not exactly in all respects. These different groups in Ex. 25 are all illustrations of free imitation.



Ex. 25.

In Article III (page 2178, December 18th), at the bottom of the first column, it says "look at the following illustration." I should have written "see Illustration 1." The next cut (Illustration II) should have been placed just before "Music for Carmen." It refers to the "mysterious character with a configuration in the bass" mentioned at the end of the paragraph.

Announcement.

Miss Carrie Hetherington, the Photoplayer expert formerly with Miller's theater, Los, Angeles, California, has accepted a call from St. Paul, Minnesota, where she will be located with the Starland theater, one of the leading photoplay houses in that city. Every moving Picture exhibitor knows of the Photoplayer, and Miss Hetherington, being the originator of the idea which led to the invention of this wonderful instrument, has been in demand for the past five years by exhibitors running first class houses. Besides being the highest salaried operator, she holds the honors for the longest experienced operator, making all minor repairs on the instrument under her charge, also selecting and arranging a proper and correct musical program for each feature, many of which have been published in the Moving Picture World. Let us offer congratulations to Mr. William Richmond, owner of the Starland theater, St. Paul, Minnesota.

Musical Setting for "The Yellow Passport."

(Released by the World Film Corporation, February 7.)

Suggestions prepared by S. M. BERG.

(By special arrangements with G. Schirmer, Inc., Music Pulishers, New York.)

This "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is intended as a partial solution of the problem of what to play for the picture and to assist in overcoming that chaotic condition encountered when the film is not available until almost the hour of showing, resulting in the first performance being a mere rehearsal.

For the benefit of those readers of the Moving Picture World who are exhibitors of World films the following suggestions for an accompaniment to "The Yellow Passport" were prepared by the photoplay department of G. Schirmer, Inc. This advance publication will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film story he is to portray with his orchestra.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will assist the leader in anticipating the various cues, which may consist of the printed sub-title (marked T) or by a described action (marked D).

Sonia, the daughter of a Jewish family in Kiev, is ambitious to become an opera singer. While studying, a terrible massacre of the Jews occurs. In order to complete her education she applies for a Yellow Passport which is the badge of the "women of the night." On board a ship to America she meets and falls in love with Adolph, son of a famous impresario. Later she is denounced as a holder of the infamous passport, but the proof of her innocence is produced and all ends happily.

Note particularly: Massacre scenes 13 to 20½. During the picture there are several scenes of Sonia (Clara Kimball Young) playing and singing at piano.

The theme selected is "Song of the Boatmen of the Volga."

Timet schedule: five reels (about 4,965 feet), 74½ minutes.

MAUDE FEALY IN "THE IMMORTAL FLAME."

Picturedom is once again to be favored with the pleasing personality of Maude Fealy, one of the first stars of the legitimate to grace the screen. Several years ago Miss Fealy appeared in multiple reel films, then a new thing to the market, and in these special releases scored an instantaneous success, second only to the fame accorded her on the speaking stage.

Miss Fealy first won distinction by her portrayal of "Eunice" in "Quo Vadis," and her success was such that she was engaged by William Gillette to support him in "Sherlock Holmes." Later Miss Fealy enacted the roles theretofore portrayed by Ellen Terry in the support of Sir Henry Irving and completely captivated the London public.

Returning from her foreign triumph, Maude Fealy was starred under the direction of John Cort in such well known successes as "The Illusion of Beatrice," "The Stronger Sex," "The Right Princess" and others. She left Mr. Cort's management to enter filmdom, and the great success she achieved is now screen history.

An original drama was created especially by Ivan Abramson in which to star Miss Fealy. "The Immortal Flame," which will be her vehicle, is fortunate in its supporting cast. Edna Luby, a headliner in vaudeville; Paula Shaw, star of "Forbidden Fruit"; Joseph Burke, featured in "A Fool's Paradise"; James Cooley and Willard Case are some of the stars who appear in Miss Fealy's support. "The Immortal Flame" is the regular Ivan monthly release, scheduled for March.

ALICE BRADY IN "THE BALLET GIRL."

The extraordinary versatility of Alice Brady is emphasized by the altogether remarkable success of her performance in the new photoplay "The Ballet Girl," screened from Compton Mackenzie's novel, "Carnival." It will have further impetus when Miss Brady returns to the speaking stage this spring in a new comedy in which she is to be the featured player.

This young actress had fully established her claim to the highest of recognition in light opera, comedy, ingenue and emotional roles when the demand for her services in the movies became insistent, and she yielded to it, more for experience than anything else, although the emolument at which she started was of large dimensions.

Since this beginning Miss Brady has acted as star before the camera in "As Ye Sow," "The Boss," "The Rack," "The Woman in 47," "The Ballet Girl" and a new piece now being prepared in the Carolina mountains. The financial conditions under which she plays for the moving picture magnates have steadily increased until she is at this moment one of the highest paid actresses in the screen world, with her services in active demand the year around.

Yet in spite of almost fabulous offers, she declines to tie herself up with any contract for a long term. "Who knows," she inquires, "but that if I were to stick to the pictures indefinitely I might forget all about the other kind of acting—for the two are very different. This is my main reason for arranging to appear in a speaking play shortly."

JANE GAIL, A BLUEBIRD STAR.

General Manager, M. M. Hoffman, of Bluebird Photoplays, has made arrangements to present Jane Gail in a series of Bluebird releases, the start to be made with the release of the screen version of Anthony Hop's novel, "Rupert of Hentzau," on March 6. In this picture Miss Gail's leading man will be Henry Ainley, who will impersonate the dual characters of the King of Ruritania and Rudolf Rassendyll. Other releases will present Miss Gail in a variety of characters suited to her emotional talents.

CRANE WILBUR, HORSLEY STAR.

Crane Wilbur, makes his first appearance as a David Horsley star in a five reel production on January 31 in "Vengeance Is Mine!" a Masterpicture, deluxe edition, the second of the Horsley Masterpicture production to be released by the Mutual.

EDYTH ROBERTS IN IMP COMEDY.

"The Unconventional Girl" is the title of Bob Hill's Imp-Universal latest comedy drama in two reels, with Edyth Roberts playing the leads. As the unconventional girl Edyth does cut some capers, and those who will be fortunate enough to see her will appreciate her efforts in a little comedy that has a real tinge of originality.

World-Equitable Players

List of Stars Contains Many Big Names—All Busy on Productions.

NOW that World and Equitable are combined and the dual releasing plan about to go into effect, the largest array of stage and screen talent controlled by one releasing concern comes under the direct control of the World Film Corporation.

The greater the roster of stars and players, the greater the opportunity for diversity of types; hence, with the two producing concerns under the direct management of one head, productional activities controlled by the one executive staff and plays and stars allotted and timed from one point of command, the opportunity for variance of subjects, diversity of types of stars and leading players is immeasurable.

Edna Wallace Hopper.

Under the direction of the two concerns are two-score noted artists—Clara Kimball Young, Robert Warwick, Holbrook Blinn, Alice Brady, George Beban, Mollie King, Francis Nelson, Kitty Gordon, Johnny Hines, Chester Barnett, June Elvidge and Douglas MacLean of the World Film staff, and Gail Kane, Bruce McRae, Charles J. Ross, Jane Grey, Marguerite Leslie, Mary Boland, John Mason, Henry Kolker, Mary Charleson, Muriel Ostriche, Carlyle Blackwell, Frank Sheridan, Arthur Ashley, Gerda Holmes, Clara Whipple, and Edna Wallace Hopper to be seen in Equitable vehicles. Cast in such noted plays and stories as are the property of the World and Equitable, from such noted producers as William A. Brady, Messrs. Shuberts, well known authors and playwrights as Rachael Crothers, Rennold Wolf, Channing Pollock, C. Haddon Chambers, Emmet Campbell Hall, Roy L. McCardell, Eve Unsell, Richard Le Gallienne and others, the numerous players can be so alloted as to afford the variety exhibitors desire.

No greater or more attractive program arrangement can be imagined than Clara Kimball Young in "The Feast of Life," Holbrook Blinn in "The Unpardonable Sin," Gail Kane in "Her God," Robert Warwick and Francis Nelson in "Velma," Carlyle Blackwell in "The Shadow of a Doubt," Kitty Gordon in "As in a Looking Glass," George Beban in "The Pawn of Fate," Marguerite Leslie in "The Question," Frank Sheridan in "The Struggle," Bruce McRae and Gerda Holmes in "The Chain Invisible," Mary Boland in "The Price of Happiness," Edwin August in "The Social Highwayman," Muriel Ostriche in "Molly o' Pigtail Alley," and John Mason in "The Reapers." While this is not the actual consecution, no definite statement having been given of rearranged program dates, the above list represents stars and plays actually at work for the World and Equitable and the forthcoming program will contain a great majority of the above named.

Mr. Blinn is at Jacksonville staging two plays. Gail Kane is enroute back to New York after three months on the Arizona deserts, Clara Kimball Young and Bruce McRae and their respective companies are at Havana, Cuba; Frank Sheridan is at Miami, Florida; Edna Wallace Hopper and Charles J. Ross are in the mountains of Canada, while the various other World and Equitable companies are working interiors at the six studios.

Definite release dates for the forthcoming quarter will be issued within the next fortnight for both concerns.

ALEC LORRIMORE HEADS COLONIAL.

Alec Lorrimore, formerly with the Gaumont Company and since handling certain independent motion picture projects, has been elected president of the Colonial Motion Picture Corporation, succeeding James D. Law. Mr. Lorrimore is well and favorably known to the motion picture trade of the country.

Counselor Friend Explains

Says There Is No Factional Fight in Industry.

ARTHUR S. FRIEND, general counsel of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, has issued a statement explaining the position of his client in regard to the Crafts bill and to Federal Censorship. The statement follows in detail:

Speaking on behalf of all those associated with me and for whom I spoke in regard to the proposed Federal legislation looking toward regulation of the motion picture industry, I want to say that we are extremely sorry that anybody connected with the industry should have attempted to make of our refusal to accept the views set forth by the Motion Picture Board of Trade a factional fight. As a matter of fact, there is no factional fight. We have the highest regard for many of the people who are in and who support the views expressed by the Board of Trade, and feel that they are entitled, as we are, to independent thought on any matter affecting the industry at large.

In my statement to the Committee on Education, at the last public hearing of the Smith-Hughes bill, I said very distinctly that I opposed the amendment to the Penal Code suggested by the Board of Trade, because it was unnecessary and because unnecessary legislation was bad legislation. When, however, the suggestion to amend the Penal Code was adopted by Congressman Towner and a bill introduced in Congress by him, we immediately advised Mr. Binder, the executive secretary, and Mr. Seabury, general counsel of the Board of Trade, that we should not oppose the Towner bill. This was at a conference held at the Paramount office on the 22d day of January, four days before Mr. Seabury's brief on behalf of the Motion Picture Board of Trade is dated. Mr. Seabury knows, as well as we do, that the Towner bill is unnecessary, except, perhaps, to clarify the law. Under Section 245 of the Penal Code, as it now exists, there is little doubt but that the same result can be obtained in prosecuting the persons who send "obscene, lewd or lascivious or any filthy" motion picture through interstate commerce, as could be obtained after the enactment of the Towner bill. The point we made and which the Motion Picture Board of Trade very well understands, is that the Towner bill is not a substitute for the Smith-Hugh bill, and does not undertake to reach any of the ills with which the industry is suffering. Our attitude is not a "holier than thou" attitude, but rather the sane attitude of men who are convinced that the industry will survive only if it is conducted along business lines, based upon clean artistic product.

Mr. Seabury and his associates must know that the kind of picture which is injuring the industry at present, will never be stopped under the Towner bill. It was suggested because it looked like a substitute, although in reality it was not, and never will be.

In so far as the change of heart of Metro Pictures Corporation is concerned, we are perfectly willing to concede the right on the part of that company to change its views as often as it pleases. However, at the time of the hearing, I had with me, a letter actually signed by Richard A. Rowland, the president of the Metro, which was clear enough on its face and which was written after a long conference with W. W. Hodkinson, president of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, who explained to Mr. Rowland and to Arthur James of Mr. Rowland's office, exactly what position we proposed to take and just why we proposed to take it. The [illegible] on truction on our part, although, obviously, there was a change of heart on theirs.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of February 7 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

Anna Held at the Strand.

ANNA HELD made her photodramatic debut in the comedy, "Madame La Presidente," which was produced by the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, at the Strand theater. The picture, adapted from a successful stage play, tells of the troubles started by the fondness for gaiety of three mature French judges. An escapade with the leading lady of a theatrical troupe, Mlle. Gobette, lands the three judges on the carpet for a severe reprimand and leads to a number of amusing complications. Miss Held's sartorial display was a fashion show in miniature. The Topical Review contained news pictures taken by Pathe, the Universal and Paramount Animated News Companies. European War pictures and the latest fashions were also shown.

Fanny Ward at the Broadway.

"Tennessee's Pardner," a photodrama made by the Jesse L. Lasky Co., from Scott Marble's western stage play, was shown at the Broadway theater last week, with Fanny Ward in the title role. The scenes of this drama are laid in the days when the "forty-niners" crossed the continent, lured by the promise of great riches in the gold regions. Some of the scenes in the production were made in San Fernando Mission, built about 1800; other portions were taken in the Great American Desert. The remainder of the program consisted of Pathe latest events, selected comedies, colored scenics, and another of the Charlie series cartoons, "Charlie, the Animal Trainer."

Triangle Program at the Knickerbocker.

"Hell's Hinges," with William S. Hart in the star part, was the serious offering on the Triangle program at the Knickerbocker theater. Mr. Hart was as effective as ever, and the entire picture furnished excellent entertainment. "His Hereafter," a Keystone comedy, was also on the bill.

New Plays and New Titles

Revised List of Triangle Releases for February and March—Some Strong Features.

SEVERAL changes have been made in the Triangle releases for the next eight weeks whereby the interests of exhibitors will be safeguarded, and carefully balanced programs will be presented. For February 13, the releases are : Douglas Fairbanks in "His Picture in the Papers," a Fine Arts comedy, and "Honor's Altar," a serious Kay Bee play, featuring Bessie Barriscale, Lewis Stone and Walter Edwards.

Scene from "Daphne and the Pirate" (Triangle-Fine Arts).

For the week of February 20, William S. Hart in the powerful Western, entitled "Hell's Hinges," is strikingly contrasted with Lillian Gish in the romantic costume story, "Daphne," the titel of which has just been changed to "Daphne and the Pirate."

The entertaining, but somewhat long filmization of Don Quixote, starring De Wolf Hopper, has gone out to the Coast for revision, and has been sent back lopped of superfluous material, so that it is now a compact five reeler. It will be released on February 27, in conjunction with the new Kay Bee play, "The Last Act." The latter is a story of a young woman of the stage who gets down on her luck and is befriended by a young married couple. The husband falls in love with her, and as she is playing a somewhat similar situation on the stage she contemplates stealing the husband from the wife and running away with him. But the good wife's plea finally prevails over her bad impulse, and the actress takes instead the good angel role of bringing husband and wife together. It is a part that affords Bessie Barriscale splendid opportunities, and she will be capably supported by Clara Williams and Harry Keenan.

Scene from "The Raiders" (Triangle-Kay-Bee).

A splendid vista of March attractions opens up for Triangle exhibitors beginning March 5, with Billie Burke in "Peggy," and Dorothy Gish in "Betty of Greystone." Both are love stories, but one is laid in a Yankee, and the other in a Scottish environment. These will be followed on March 12 by John Emerson's stirring war play, "The Flying Torpedo," and a serious Kay Bee drama, "The Moral Fabric." On March 19 takes place the long expected advent of Mae Marsh in Triangle films, her vehicle being a delightful domestic story entitled "Hoodoo Ann," in which she is supported by Robert Harron. Along with this will be presented a romantic Slav play, "Bullets and Brown Eyes," starring Bessie Barriscale, aided by William Desmond. March 26th's dramatic attractions are Norma Talmage and Seena Owen, in "Martha's Vindication." The Fine Arts' small-town story has a counterpart in the stirring H. B. Warner Kay Bee drama, "The Raiders."

As there are now ten companies working for Mack Sennett on as many Keystones there will likewise be a plentiful supply of these celebrated comedies. Some of the most notable that are promised are William Collier with Mae Busch in "Better Late Than Never," (working title "Getting Married"); "His Auto Ruination," featuring Mack Swain and Harry Gibbon, and a genuine new dog story entitled "Fido's Fate," in which the irrepressible Charles Murray will be starred.

Speaking of titles, the descriptive and ornamental letterings used by Thomas H. Ince in connection with Kay Bee plays have come in for the warmest praise from exhibitors and the trade press. It is rightly called the most artistic work that has been shown on the mechanical side of title making.

President Kleine Promotes for Merit

Three Employes of the General Film Company Made Branch Managers Because of Efficient Service.

THREE promotions in the ranks of the General Film Company were announced this week from the executive offices, 200 Fifth avenue, New York. The promotions were made in accordance with President George Kleine's policy of advancing employes who have done efficient work for the General Film Company. The three promotions are: A. J. Nelson, from traveling auditor to branch manager of Washington, D. C.; E. H. Wells, from solicitor to branch manager of Montreal, Canada; William Conn, from a minor position in the Southern Division to branch manager of the new office at Charlotte, N. C.

Mr. Nelson began with the General Film Company four years ago as a clerk. His abilities and fidelities soon pushed him through the varying grades until he became an auditor, charged with country-wide responsibilities. His performance in this capacity won the confidence and eventually the substantial recognition of the General Film Company's executives with the result that Mr. Nelson takes full charge of the General Film Company's branch in the nation's capitol.

The promotion of E. H. Wells is one in which every solicitor of every film company will be interested. Mr. Wells, when he began his salesman activities did not waste any time in telling anyone how difficult it was to sell goods—he sold them. The general Film Company has a special system of knowing constantly the progress of its solicitors. Consequently, quick advancement or retrogression in salesmanship is instantly noted. Mr. Wells was so successful as a solicitor that President Kleine felt that it would be an injustice to the salesman to keep him from a larger sphere of action. Hence his promotion followed.

William Conn was very successful throughout the South in the General Film Company's exchanges. He was employed in the booking department of the Atlanta branch, and also has done considerable soliciting. His knowledge of the southern territory is extensive. Hence, when it was decided to open a branch at Charlotte, N. C., Mr. Conn was chosen as branch manager.

MARGARET TURNBULL VISITS NEW YORK.

Margaret Turnbull, of the photodramatic staff of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, was in New York last week, her first visit east from the studios at Hollywood, Cal., in more than a year. In addition to the dozen photoplays which Miss Turnbull has written during the year, including several original and the most recent Lasky production of Mark Twain's "Pudd'nhead Wilson," she has found time also to write a novel entitled "Handle with Care," which has just been published by Harper & Bros. After a few weeks in the east Miss Turnbull will return to the Lasky studios and to her work in the photodramatic department.

Vitagraphs for February 14

Several Good Features Will Be Released During the Week —One on Fire Prevention.

THE Vitagraph releases for the week of February 14 include a powerful sermon-drama, "The Writing on the Wall," in five parts; a Broadway Star Feature, "The Man He Used to Be," in three reels and two one-reel comedies, "You're Next," and "In Arcadia."

Of particular interest at this time is "The Writing on the Wall," pertaining as it does to the inadequacy of fire prevention laws and the criminal neglect in their non-enforcement. That the scenes in the film are not overdrawn was shown by the recent Diamond Candy factory fire in Brooklyn in which many lives were lost. The fire records daily contain lists of fatalities due to the failure of landlords to properly safeguard the lives of their tenants.

Scene from "The Man He Used to Be" (Vitagraph).

It is on this theme that the Vitagraph film treats—and it presents it in a series of powerful, awe-inspiring scenes, in which the wealthy man, too late sees the "writing on the wall," and falls a victim to his own disregard of human life.

Joseph Kilgour, Naomi Childers and Virginia Pearson portray the principal roles in their usual capable way. Little Bobby Connelly is effective as the host of three hundred school children and other Vitagraphers give good accounts of themselves. The film was produced by Tefft Johnson, written by William J. Hurlbutt and picturized by Margurite Bertsch. It is a Blue Ribbon Feature, released Monday, February 14.

An all-star cast of Vitagraphers will be seen in "The Man He Used to Be," released on Saturday, February 19. This is the second picture directed by Eugene Mullin. Naomi Childers, William Dunn, Mary Maurice, Charles Kent, Kate Price, Belle Bruce and others are cast in the production.

Scene from "In Arcadia" (Vitagraph).

The play tells of a man who breaks his wife's heart and goes down to the very depths. He conquers his bad habits after a long fight and falls in love with another woman who accepts him despite the 'man he used to be."

"You're Next" is one of Wally Van's comedies with himself and Nitra Frazer in the leading roles. It is released on February 14. Cutey is a barber and Polly is a manicure girl. Cutey neglects his business for love-making, is fired and sells safety razors in revenge. The boss barber, in desperation, advertises for a lady barber and Cutey dresses up and gets the job. He creates a sensation, but the wives of the customers raise objections. He is finally exposed and elopes with Polly.

"In Arcadia," released on February 18, features William Dangman in a one-reel comedy produced under the direction of Courtland Van Deusen. Ethel Corcoran, Kate Price, William Dunn and others are in the production. The story tells of the efforts of a couple in Harlem to find Arcadia in the suburbs, believing the tale told them by a real estate agent. They are sadly disappointed and return satisfied to their Harlem home.

Clara Whipple in "The Reapers"

CLARA WHIPPLE, the beautiful leading woman of the Equitable Motion Picture Company, has been loaned, after considerable negotiations, to the Triumph Picture company to appear in the leading support of John Mason in "The Reapers."

Clara Whipple's work with the Equitable, during her connection with the company, since last summer, has established a tremendous following among picture fans. In "The Bludgeon," "Blue Grass," "A Daughter of The Sea," she did excellent work, appearing in all of them as a vampire woman.

Clara Whipple.

In Miss Whipple's most recent picture, "The Question," which has just been completed, the charming actress plays for the first time in a long while, the role of the ingenue.

In a recent interview with Miss Whipple, she was asked what was her most recent novel experience.

The pretty actress laughed and replied, "I have always in my past work been given the temptress type of character to portray—the siren who sings men on to their destruction. In 'The Question' I am the unsophisticated maiden, the wooed one. I assure you this is a most novel experience for me, for alas and alack, despite my 'baby stare,' I have been called upon to portray Kipling's 'rag and a bone and a hank of hair.'"

Clara Whipple is ideally suited for her role in "The Reapers" with Mr. Mason. The part calls for great dramatic and emotional ability, and Miss Whipple has proven herself again and again one of the most versatile and talented of the younger screen stars.

The screen fans who are watching Miss Whipple's career with interest will look forward to her appearance in "The Reapers."

THOMAS R. MILLS FORSAKES STAGE FOR SCREEN.

The legitimate stage is the loser by the determination of Thomas R. Mills to appear in motion pictures for the Vitagraph Company. Few actors of to-day have had a more varied experience on the stage than Mills, and his versatile talents trained through years of foot-light experience will be used to splendid advantage in films. He is widely known for his work with such stars as Richard Mansfield, Henry Miller, Harrison Grey Fiske and others.

The screen work of Mr. Mills will be seen in the Vitagraph features, "The Man Who Couldn't Beat God," "The Crown Prince's Double," and "A Man's Sacrifice."

"NE'ER DO WELL" AT CANDLER THEATER.

A trade showing of the Selig production of Rex Beach's story "The Ne'er Do Well," will be given at the Candler theater, West 52d street, New York, Thursday afternoon, February 10 at three o'clock sharp. The picture is in ten parts.

"Doping" It Out

Some Theatrical Past Performances That May Have a Bearing on the Future of Motion Pictures.

By Epes Winthrop Sargent.

IT IS admitted that many things are happening in the business of making and exhibiting motion pictures, and it is conceded that other and perhaps more unpleasant things are likely to happen, but just what will happen, and just what will happen after the things that are going to happen have happened, is more or less of a mystery. A really first-class fortune teller could make a snug sum by circularizing the trade right now.

But when the earnest-hearted citizen who seeks to improve the blooded stock of this country by the painful method of supporting some bookmaker seeks to peer into the future he pulls out his well thumbed "dope" book and studies past performances. The past performances of the horse will show what he should be capable of doing if his jockey and owner leave him alone. That and a little "racing luck" is all that stands between the man who wagers and the immediate fortune.

But even granting that the race of to-morrow does not always run as the race of the past, it is the most reliable source of information and it may be interesting to compare past performances in amusements with what we are going through.

Turn back to about 1890. Abbey, Schoeffel and Grau were running the Metropolitan Opera House. Grand opera was a luxury indeed and most of all the impresario. It cost more than it brought in and this was in large measure due to the star system carried to excess. There were stars for the Wagnerian operas, and other stars for the operas of the French and Italian schools; almost a double company. Each was guaranteed a certain number of appearances at a fabulous figure for those days. Something had to break. It was the managers.

Starting afresh, the star system was slightly reduced until Oscar Hammerstein came into the game with his opera houses in New York and Philadelphia. He lost more money than his tobacco handling machines brought in on royalty and he had to quit. The Metropolitan was glad to buy him out. He was glad—for the moment—to quit. The Metropolitan, running under smaller expense and to larger takings, must be well content with the deal. Grand opera, with grand opera stars, done on the scale demanded by New York is a luxury still, and is financially profitable when it has the field to itself and enjoys the financial support of all the fashionables. There is not room for two ventures of this sort.

Notwithstanding all this, there are several troupes of the type best represented by the San Carlos company that make grand opera a cold commercial venture and make money season after season. They are seldom heard of in the great centers, but they give a pretty good performance at reasonable prices, and the singing is as good as we used to get from the old American and Juch companies. There are no famous stars but a reasonably good ensemble and fairly well drilled chorus. There is no pretentious ballet, no hundred-piece orchestra, but an acceptable rendition of the works of the masters.

Motion pictures became an exhibition factor about 1895, and in that year vaudeville started to expand. In New York Koster & Bial had formed an affiliation with Oscar Hammerstein and moved into the white palace on Thirty-fourth street that was the first Manhattan Opera House. In those days they paid what were then large salaries to imported acts on condition that they played nowhere else or, at least, only at the Orpheum, in San Francisco. The acts must be exclusive.

As an offset, the Keith managers; notably J. Austin Fynes, sought to procure the services of dramatic stars and in the fall of that year the ice was broken by Charles Dickson and Lillian Burkhart, Sydney and Gladys Rankin Drew and John Mason and Marion Manola.

In those days the Keith circuit prided itself on the fact that it never paid less than $35 to the act that opened the performance. Other managers could pay $20 and $25 if they wished for the opener, but they wanted at least a $35 act. They would pay up to $70 for a double. Two and three hundred dollars for a headliner was hardly to be thought of. If players wanted that much money they took out their own shows, as Weber and Fields did. But dramatic players asked more than that and they got it. They started at $250 and ran up to $500. At once the vaudeville actors, the people who really made good for these name-acts, put their prices up. One man who a few months before had said that he would be content if he could ever work his salary up to $150 a week, later refused $800 because he wanted an even thousand.

All too late, the managers realized that a $400 salary to one act did not mean merely an increase of that much in the weekly expense. It meant that each act on the bill wanted more, even the $35 opening act. As Nick Norton, then the booking agent for the Hyde and Behman houses, once said, there was a steady advance in salaries while the admission fees remained stationary, and it was only a question of time when the steadily advancing payroll would exceed the stationary income. At that time, about 1903, the yearly advance in the bills was about $100, but this proportionate increase became larger each year.

Some of the managers were more than eager to cut prices back, but certain of the others, who owned large houses and catered to a prosperous clientele, were willing to pay the increase for the sort of show they required, and it was not possible to make a general cut until Percy G. Williams was induced to sell out. Then the regulation of salaries began in earnest and business was brought back to a basis that permitted the managers to retain a portion of the money that passed through their hands.

Just one more past performance. Around 1905 the dime museum started to fail. George Huber, who owned the largest and last of these places in New York, declared that every eight or ten years the dime museum would come into its own because a fresh crop of "freaks" would be ready, but in the intervals the interest would die down because there was not enough novelty to keep things going. The supply of doubled-bodied boys and two-headed girls did not keep pace with the demand and the public turned away until there was something fresh to see. The dime museum prospered because it was cheap and interesting for a time. It has gone because better forms of cheap amusement have replaced it. There will always be pit and side shows, but it is not probable that the dime museum of Huber and Kohl and Middleton will be ever be revived.

Now to dope it out. Grand opera shows that an extraordinary expense requires a practical monopoly, but that a product proportioned to the probable return will show a profit. Vaudeville shows that a lavish outlay for stars will bring a general increase in expense in other departments. The museum business shows that new attractions, new interests must constantly be provided.

In pictures we have the vaudeville condition of a star whose work is rendered passable only through the efforts of his or her companion players, who presently will require that their salaries be increased. There is the sameness of offering that wrecked the museums and there is the grand opera condition of lavish expenditure minus the grand opera monopoly of position. The condition must be remedied or the failure that vaudeville and grand opera averted and the dime museum could not, will inevitably occur.

It must be admitted that the presence on the screen of well known players of the dramatic stage has brought to the theaters the patrons of the dramatic houses just as Keith paid the late Marshall P. Wilder $600, not because he could be as entertaining to the patrons as Fred Niblo, at a small figure, but because Mr. Wilder brought to the house a class of persons who knew him through his lyceum and Sunday-school work and who came to see him and remained to enjoy the performance in general. They came back after he had gone on to another engagement. He gave a return for his salary. When he had drawn all the people he could, and became merely an entertainer, he was no longer of use at that figure. It has paid to coax some of the dramatic stars into the pictures, but not at the idiotic salaries that they actually receive, though these are far less than the announced payments as a rule. To an old showman some of the salaries now being paid are criminally foolish. No manager is willing to drop the star system until the others do. None will be the first. They must get together, as the vaudeville managers did; not in a trust, but as an association; not for the oppression of the exhibitor but for the regulation of the trade. This may be accomplished by the Motion Picture Board of Trade or through some other body, but there must be a gradual change to the old system in which film players are starred, and shopworn and has-been dramatic players are not put forward above the men and women who hold the interest of the photo-playgoer from week to week, through the months and years.

There must be an improvement in the stories; a marked and radical departure from the repetition of the old stories. Revivals are one thing and rehash is another. There must be a greater variety to the stories and a greater dependence upon the story and less upon the mechanical effects.

In a word, the business must be put upon a business basis and run by business men and not commercial gamblers, if there is to be any business at all. Grand opera did not prosper until it was put upon a business basis and the employment of stars was made a matter of business and not merely of display. Vaudeville, once past its initial and spontaneous prosperity, did not make money until steps were taken to hold the expenses to a level that permitted a margin of profit.

To save the pictures something must be done to stop the indiscriminate and unintelligent expenditure of large sums and to lay out what is spent with an eye to probable returns not alone in money, but in artistic effect and entertaining value. There was a time in vaudeville when any stage star could pull people into a vaudeville house. Now there must be something besides a name. We are still in the stage where we pay stars as much in a month as many of the players could earn on the stage, under present conditions, in a year, and yet we say, "thanks" when they sign the contract and again "thanks" when they take the money they do not earn. Dope it out.

Shakespeare Wrote Screen Plays?

Sir Herbert Tree and Director Emerson Think He Did—Cite Macbeth as Example.

DID Shakespeare write for the screen?

The obvious, historically verifiable answer is that he did not, but internal evidence disclosed in the plotting of "Macbeth" for the Sir Herbert Tree film version now in production at the Fine Arts studio in Los Angeles, bears remarkably the other way.

Certainly the master dramatist foreshadowed the photoplay type of dramatic continuity much more accurately than he did the present-day stage play. Infinitely more violence is done to his scene plot in any modern stage version of the plays than may be necessary in photo-dramatizing them.

In the case of "Macbeth" Sir Herbert and John Emerson, his director, found after several weeks of exhaustive study and rehearsal, not only that the tragedy could be told in pictures without loss of dramatic pungency, but that Shakespeare had written an almost perfect photoplay "continuity."

"He will play the drama almost scene for scene as the dramatist wrote it," said Mr. Emerson in explaining the discovery, " and that is something that the stage has not done, except in the case of one or two sceneless revivals, since modern stage scenery was invented. Shakespeare, of course, wrote for the stage without scenery, so he did not have to meet the mechanical problems of scene shifting. And those are precisely the problems that the photoplay has solved. Stage waits are unknown to the photoplay.

"So we can go straight back to the multiple short scenes of the original text, and in the case of 'Macbeth' we found it impossible to make any important rearrangement that would be of the slightest added value in developing a picture narative.

"We found also that the demands of the story, looked at purely from the standpoint of modern photoplay making, were not for a multitude of short scenes broken by 'flashes,' except in one or two cases, as in the siege of the castle. The natural and dramatically effective way to play most of the rest is in unusually long scenes, reaching, perhaps, 300 feet. Thus, with an entirely practical and unsentimental approach, we have returned to a treatment that closely resembles the traditional stage treatment. This, if we succeed in doing it well enough, should produce a picture play with no little of that impressive dignity that is associated with dramas, especially the tragedies, and with their best stage productions.

"We had from the beginning no intention of sacrificing dramatic vigor to any traditional form. We meant to tell the story of Macbeth—and a wonderful story it is—in the most vivid and moving way we could. That this way is so closely that of the dramatist is a great satisfaction to us. I know that Sir Herbert, whose reverence for the text is naturally of the highest, is greatly pleased and his enthusiasm over the production is steadily mounting.

"In the matter of costume and settings we found that the accumulated stage traditions were full of inaccuracies and anachronisms. After a great deal of work we discarded them entirely and turned to historical sources. 'Macbeth' is related quite definitely with a historic period—the eleventh century—but stage producers have set it all the way up to the fourteenth century and not always been accurate in their reproduction of any. That was why we turned to history and the result, while it may seem strange to many who are acquainted with the Shakespeare of the stage, will at least be reasonably true to the right century."

Howard Hall Now a Gaumont Star

WHEN the Gaumont Company releases "According to the Law," early in March, Howard Hall will make his first screen appearance as a Gaumont-Mutual star. He has been a well-known Broadway actor for a number of years and is of interest to exhibitors also because of his starring activities of more than ten years, principally in his own big melodrama, "The Man Who Dared." It is therefore certain that he will be a good drawing card, since his remarkable work is well remembered by theatergoers who enjoyed that class of entertainment which gave the same, if not as many, melodramatic thrills as one now secures from motion pictures.

Howard Hall.

Only recently did Mr. Hall turn to the screen; in fact, this is only his fifth picture. "According to the Law" is a five-reel feature by Paul M. Bryan and Joseph H. Trant which will be released as a Mutual Masterpicture, de luxe edition. Mr. Hall has just finished playing the lead in "The Clarion." Other pictures were "The Crown Prince and His Double" and "The Governor's Pardon." On the stage he is famous for his professional parts. He has to his credit seven Broadway productions in which he has played the part of doctors. Among these are "The Poor Little Rich Girl," originating the role; "Damaged Goods," "The Unborn" and "The Natural Law." He has played two engagements with David Warfield, in "The Grand Army Man" and "The Music Master."

"According to the Law" is now in work at Jacksonville, Fla., under the direction of Richard Garrick. Opposite Mr. Hall, Miss Mildred Gregory is playing. Others in the cast are E. K. James, Albert Macklin, Allan Robinson, John Reinhard, Charles W. Travis, Helen Marten and Mathilde Baring.

MacMAHON A FREE LANCE.

Henry MacMahon is no longer connected with the Triangle Film Corporation and invites offers from film companies that want good press service. Mr. MacMahon's newspaper list which he personally selected contains thousands of names of leading publications and represents a thorough acquaintance with journalistic managers and motion picture editors in all parts of the country. He has likewise many friends in the trade press. His most recent work for the Triangle has been writing up first run houses, which has put him in touch with the publicity needs of many exhibitors. On the sensational side, he managed "The Birth of a Nation" publicity campaign in Boston from April to August of last year, thereby assisting the Epoch Producing Company in securing record breaking receipts. He can be addressed at 321 West 55th street, New York City; phone Columbus 2969.

LEE HILL JOINS McRAE COMPANY.

Lee Hill, well known in photoplay circles as director and actor of unusual ability, this week joined the forces of the Universal at their Pacific Coast Studios, where he is to work under the direction of Henry McRae in his production of 101 Bison productions. Prior to his advent into the Universal ranks Hill was a member of the Vogue Film Company's forces, where he was engaged in making comedies.

Webster Campbell now with Vitagraph

WEBSTER CAMPBELL is one of the latest members of the Vitagraph stock company and is now in pictures at the Hollywood studios. Few players of his age have attained so enviable a reputation in a brief screen career, and few leading men receive more letters from their admirers.

Mr. Campbell was born in Kansas City, January 25, 1892. He is of French ancestry, and many of his relatives are Canadians. His early education was received in public schools and in the Central High School of Kansas City, and, although he spent three years at Michigan University at Ann Arbor, he left before obtaining his degree, to take up the theatrical profession. He started his stage career as a member of a stock company at Kansas City and then travelled with a road company to the Pacific Coast. The show which he was in closed in Los Angeles. He was engaged by the Vitagraph Company, and in their films has attained distinction as a screen player of ability. He is a prolific writer of photoplays and has sold over twenty scripts. He is unmarried, fond of outdoor sports, and is a favorite among his fellow-players at the Hollywood studio of the Vitagraph.

Webster Campbell.

He has appeared in "He Got Himself a Wife," "Bittersweet," "The Hoyden," "Pansy's Papas," and is now working in a three-reeler soon to be released.

Arthur Hoops

ARTHUR HOOPS, one of the best-known leading men in the country, both on the speaking stage and in motion pictures, has signed an engagement to appear in Metro wonderplays, and has begun work on the first feature, "The Soul Market," in which Mme. Petrova is starred. Mr. Hoops began his stage career as a juvenile and leading man with Nat Goodwin, with whom he appeared in this country and on Mr. Goodwin's world tour.

Mr. Hoops was with the Famous Players for nearly two years, and appeared as leading man with Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark and other well-known screen stars. He appeared with Miss Pickford in "Such a Little Queen," "Mistress Nell" and other productions, and with Miss Clark in "Gretna Green."

Arthur Hoops.

Later he was starred by George Kleine in "The Danger Signal" and "The Final Curtain." He was also starred with Betty Nansen in "The Song of Hate," and played the lead in "Should a Mother Tell" in Fox pictures.

Before going into motion pictures, Mr. Hoops played the lead with Virginia Harned in "Alice of Old Vincennes," also the lead with James K. Hackett in "The Prisoner of Zenda," and afterward appeared in several Frohman stage productions on Broadway and on tour.

Virginia Hammond

AN EXAMPLE of how a distinct prejudice against motion pictures could be turned into a genuine enthusiasm for them is given by the instance of Virginia Hammond, former Frohman leading woman. Miss Hammond makes her first appearance as a screen star in "The Discard," Essanay's latest five-reel feature.

"It was not until I had seen 'The Birth of a Nation' with Henry B. Walthall's great acting that I realized the possibilities of the motion picture work. From a real dislike of pictures I became highly interested in them. When I received an offer from Essanay, I was delighted, and accepted it without hesitation, even though I had scorned like inducements before."

Virginia Hammond.

Miss Hammond was born in Stanton, Virginia, and was educated in a Chicago school for girls. Her father was a Confederate major in the Civil War.

Her stage career has included four years with Frohman as leading woman for E. H. Sothern, and three years with the Shuberts. She was Ophelia to Sothern's "Hamlet," and also appeared with him in "If I Were King," "Don Quixote," "Richileu" and other plays. She was for a time leading woman for William Courtney.

Motion Picture Educator

Conducted by REV. W. H. JACKSON

CONCERNING THE YOUNG PEOPLE.

TO no class of the community at large is the moving picture of more interest and importance than to the young people. It is at once their educator and entertainer, it is their teacher, instructor, director, traveler and most legitimate amusement provider. To so great an extent have these facts been impressed upon all to whom the question is of interest that many feel it incumbent upon them to express some opinion concerning the best means whereby the most desirable results can be obtained. The first and most important step in this valuable subject—and one which seems to have been generally overlooked—is that those to whom the care and interests of the young people are first committed are the very ones who really ought to be the first movers in the matter. The authorities in the daily and secular schools, as also those in the religious schools are the ones to whom the first great opportunity presents itself. It is an opportunity they have only partially come to realize, when they are fully awake to the great possibilities before them they will no doubt rise to the occasion, it is not to their credit that slowness for the being marks their progress. Meanwhile, many are asking, "What shall we do for the people?" The old indolent excuse of "The Lion in the Path" in the form of Censorship, is constantly put forward. Here is where all kinds of censorship is of no avail, all kinds of educational picture and pictures suitable for children are immune, giving the maker a wide field for productions without the bugaboo of the censor hovering over him. It is only when the relation of the adult picture to the children is considered that the question of censorship comes in on their behalf, this, however, should not be allowed to interfere with the question of pictures for young people in the way in which many seem to consider necessary, if makers and users of juvenile pictures of all kinds would only come together on some common meeting ground, they would both find the field large enough for their most intense activities. Mr. Orrin G. Cocks, secretary of the National Board of Censors, is inclined to put much of the blame on the parents when he says: "Parents have been criminal in their negligence in failing to see the tremendous effect of motion pictures on the mind of the child." It is a question whether the criminality does not rather rest with those to whom the general question of child culture is a life work, study and duty.

Have they not rather missed their opportunity? The power is certainly more vested in them than in the parent; true, the parent "hands out the nickel," but all in authority "direct their steps." Mr. Cocks further says: "My work for the next few months will be to stir up parents and children's societies against the indiscriminate attendance of children at moving picture shows."

Their is a little good in the work which Mr. Cocks has laid out for himself, but is there not a greater work to be found in promulgating plans whereby the whole world of young people shall be given special and careful attention, with a thorough provision for satisfying all their longings whether at school or at home or in the outside world, be it pleasure or entertainment. No one can truly say that the wonders of the moving picture have been properly brought to bear upon the best interest of the most valuable part of our population, i. e., the next generation. The writer does not claim to be commercially wise, but that does not restrain him from being wishful, therefore he longs for the day when there shall spring up a producer dedicated to the production of pictures solely for the young people, such a firm even if it is found necessary to subsidize it, would prove one of the greatest powers for good, while solving many of those questions now so unnecessarily vexing to the community at large. By common consent, the care of the child life is one of the most important duties forced upon every form of governmental control. If then, this care is so valuable, by all means let all of us who are alike interested in both the young people and the pictures, do our best to bring them together for good.

Apropos of the development of the special attention demanded for the welfare of children and young people, for whom there can be no doubt the moving picture has its greatest benefits; it is interesting to know that, in several different quarters, men of the requisite ability are concentrating their best endeavors upon the production of both projectoscopes and films that can be depended upon to fill all the many requirements of the Church, School, Classroom and Home uses. It is interesting to note the requirements which form the basis of all endeavors. A projectoscope smaller than those used in the theater and well adapted to the uses named above as well as being within the minimum cost such requirements require. A film robbed of all its present dangers of fire and consequently enabling all users to come well within all fire precautions without an unnecessary expenditure of money. A well supplied library of films at such a price, either for rental or purchase, as shall secure for all users a most thorough supply always ready at hand and meeting all requirements.

That these are now well on the way to the front the writer can testify, although at present any details would be premature, the time, however, is not far distant when this page will gladly present to its readers a review of the results so far obtained, it being the wise desire of those responsible to withhold particulars until it is well assured that all the specific conditions are met and also to be in readiness to meet the demands which would immediately follow. It is worthy of special note that the most important gap in the power of the moving picture cannot long remain open. Too many of the right sort of people are at work. The results are so far satisfactory that the future is secured and a bright and instructive outlook stands before the young people.

TROY PARENT-TEACHER ASSOCIATION ACTIVE.

In Troy, N. Y., the Parent-Teacher Association is trying a "New Departure" in the exhibiting of pictures in connection with the local work for benefit of the schools and young people generally. Each Saturday morning, afternoon and evening, exhibitions are given. The subjects will be of as wide interest as can be expected to include, and include history, geography and travel; industrial, commercial and manufactures form another series as do also suitable fables and stories. Such pictures as "David Copperfield," "Paul Revere's Ride," "The Story of the Star Spangled Banner," are a sample of other films shown. A committee of ladies take charge of each exhibition and only five cents is charged to secure expenses. Troy is thus added to the list of towns awake to the interests of the young people.

WILLIAM DOUQUE DIES.

William Douque, a Utica, N. Y., exhibitor, and former secretary of the New York State League, died at his home on Saturday evening, February 5, of pneumonia. The deceased was thirty-four years of age and leaves a widow and three children. The funeral occurred on Tuesday, February 8, at Herkimer, N. Y. Mr. Douque was an earnest and efficient worker in behalf of the State League and was one of the most popular exhibitors in the state.

"New York"

Screen Production of Famous Broadway Success Equals Expectations—Florence Reed the Star.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

FLORENCE REED does not make her entrance until the third reel, and when she does appear lives up to her fine reputation as an emotional actress. From the third reel to the fifth and last she smiles or weeps "real tears," moving from sunshine into shadow, treading paths of deepest despair, resolving into the calm of happy motherhood in the closing scenes of the picture.

"New York" is the initial contribution of A. H. Woods to the program of Pathe Gold Rooster Plays. The play from the pen of William Hurlbut was produced for the screen under the direction of George Fitzmaurice, who has to his credit more than one successful screen production, notably "At Bay" and "Via Wireless." The Hurlbut play has suffered nothing at his hands, and it is easy to believe that it has gained something through the added advantages of screen over stage. It is a play that casts the searchlight on the whirlpool section of the great metropolis, and edges ever so gently into the purer element that really does exist in spots. Its first two-reels are somewhat shocking from the moral view point. Its last three reels contain also a vestige of the violet hue which is overcast and in a way out-distanced by the charm of the character of the newly-made wife of Oliver King (Florence Reed.)

William Hurlbut has handled a subject that involves many complications, and has woven a plot that throughout carries its own ballast. The play contains opportunities for elaborate staging that has been well looked to in the screen production; its cabaret scenes being especially remarkable.

In the cast is also Fania Marinoff who does exceptional work as Edna Macey, the chorus girl, whose downfall originates in the necessity of supporting a drunken mother. The fall which

"Man and His Soul"

A Drama With a Moral is Released by Metro With Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in Leading Roles.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE beauty of this picture is that the moral uplift, made as plain as A B C, is not allowed to overshadow the dramatic story. It requires skill to preach goodness, to champion the cause of a militant conscience and avoid becoming wearisome, yet the Quality Pictures Corporation, with John W. Noble as the director and Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne as the stars, has succeeded in doing just this in "Man and His Soul."

The story of John Conscience is so thoroughly in accord with Christian doctrines that it might be shown in a Sunday school, and at the same time the production possesses the essential qualities of good photoplay entertainment for audiences of quite another caliber. It has movement and life in the development of a human narrative, the acting is better than ordinary, every now and again there are charming light effects to attract the eye, and for a stirring climax there is a realistic factory fire.

The purpose of the story is set forth in a brief, prettily staged allegory, showing the birth and troubled career of conscience in bygone ages. The modern manifestation of the spur to righteousness is found in the person of John Conscience, who would make a first rate socialist. As a university professor he violates traditions by urging the practical need for kindly unselfish behavior, even in the world of commerce, and the trustees of the university conclude that he is a dangerous influence for immature minds. Conscience is asked to resign.

In business, the reformer finds it equally impossible to be of service without sacrificing his ideals and he loses one position after another. He meets a young woman as she is on the point of jumping into the river and finds in her a sympathetic spirit, at least so he believes, until it appears that she is going to marry for money. This causes an upheaval in John Conscience. Casting all scruples aside, he determines to have money, too, and the next thing we know he is John Power, the head of a great factory. But in due time he returns to his original state of goodness and the moral victory is complete.

Those acquainted with Mr. Bushman know how successfully he can radiate manly benevolence; moreover, he is enough of an actor to make a sharp differentiation in the character when he becomes John Power. Miss Bayne is attractive as the heroine and John Davidson makes a distinct figure of Stephen Might, Jr. Director Noble's handling of the students at the university, and the girls in the factory at the time of the fire, merits favorable comment.

"The Yellow Passport"

Clara Kimball Young Plays Russian Jewess in Shubert-World Film Production of Good Dramatic Quality.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

EVIDENTLY intent upon giving Clara Kimball Young a vehicle in which she might duplicate the success scored in "Hearts in Exile," the World Film selected another photoplay concerned with Russian life in its most brutal aspects. In dealing with persecutions in Russia it recalls the earlier work; but it is even more unmistakably reminiscent of "The Yellow Ticket," the sensational stage melodrama that gave the hitherto uninformed American public a knowledge of the Russian government's method of dealing with unfortunate women. The similarity is not in detail, rather in the use of the official license as the basis of the plot. Probably this is the first photoplay to introduce this particular phase of the social evil, and obviously it is rife with opportunities for dramatic situations.

"The Yellow Passport" is best described as a picture of persistent punches. Very little that could be expected to reach the emotions, produce excitement, or appeal to an ever active interest in sex relationships, has been overlooked. It almost goes without saying that a photoplay of this type will succeed, granting an adequate production, such as it received, and the more than adequate acting of Miss Young.

Playing Sonia, a beautiful Jewess whose family, barring a devoted uncle, is slaughtered in a massacre at Kiev, Miss Young has a character allowing no end of opportunity for emotional expression. Even before the massacre she is placed in a trying predicament, owing to the amorous attentions of Fedia, a police spy, and afterwards, when she must leave Kiev, or remain under the sanction of a yellow passport, her difficulties become appalling. The chief weakness of the plot at this point is the failure to give a convincing reason for Sonia's determination to remain in Kiev under such frightful conditions.

Scene from "The Yellow Passport" (Shubert-World).

Her wish to continue a musical education is hardly sufficient, for competent instructors might be found elsewhere.

At all events, the girl and her uncle, following especially harrowing experiences that need not be described, sail for America and on the boat she meets a producer of opera and his son. Fame, love and the punishment of the perfidious Fedia, all come in good season.

Director Edwin August put plenty of spirit into scenes such as the massacre of the Jews, and with a few exceptions the players supporting Miss Young gave convincing performances. John Sainpolis was a good type for the police spy, although he rather overworked a sardonic smile. "The Yellow Passport" is not without defects, but they are more than balanced by merits of a popular nature.

Thurlow Bergen and the situations developed from a first rate farcical plot. It is hardly a picture for audiences accustomed to the niceties of expert studio workmanship, but for those who are not over particular, and who respond to comedy and sentiment in their elementary forms, there should be entertainment in the Comstock production.

Mr. Bergen, in the role of Jack Wright, played by Cyril Scott on the stage, suggests the dash and spirit of wholesome young manhood. He is the star football player at his university, and after graduation, being finely appreciative of his mother's sacrifices that he might have an education, he is determined to earn money with the least possible delay. As a newspaper reporter his income is meagre, so he hits upon the idea of offering himself as a husband to the woman who draws the lucky number in a lottery, the chances to be sold at one dollar each.

No sooner has Jack's proposition been launched by a newspaper than he falls in love with the sister of his chum. He is ready to do almost anything to cancel the agreement, but it is too late, for the residents of the town have taken kindly to the lottery. Some of the most laughable scenes in the picture show the rush for the coveted tickets in which many types of marriagable women take part. There are spinsters of long standing, stout cooks, even colored servants, and all the while Jack and his friends are trying to corner the lottery market that he may not be deprived of the opportunity to wed the girl of his choice.

Lizzie Roberts, an important comedy role in the picture, as in the play, is acted reasonably well by Carolyn Lee, Elsie Esmond brings charm to the part of Helen and Allan Murnane is a good selection for the character of Foxey Peyton. Lottie Alter appears too youthful in the role of Mrs. Wright. State rights will be sold for "The Lottery Man."

Alice Brady Plays a Much Wooed Girl in Frohman Production Released Through Equitable Corporation.

INSTEAD of possessing a questionable past, Alice Brady, in "The Woman in 47" is a pleasing girl with a perpetually dangerous present. Viola Donizetti is ever so much more loved than loving. Her long train of admirers commences in Italy and steadily increases during the months of her life in New York, for Viola no sooner eludes one masculine adorer than another appears to fill his place. But all the while she remains true to Tony, and when he re-appears after a long separation she becomes his wife, thereby, one supposes, ending her troubles as well as the picture.

If the title of Frederick Chapin's photoplay is a bit misleading, suggesting a detective story more than anything else, no serious complaint need be urged, for the picture catches the attention and holds it without the mystery of an intricate plot. There is a large enough element of doubt in wondering what new episode will be devised for the unhappy Viola. Her charm is equally potent with all types of men.

The Frohman Corporation is to be congratulated, in particular, on its success in staging the scenes of Italian life in the first reel, and showing how Viola, looking extremely pretty in the costume of a peasant girl, narrowly escapes being forced into a distasteful marriage. The settings for these scenes are in excellent taste and the actors really look like Italians. In America, where Viola goes to visit her beloved Tony, the girl receives a liberal education in the perfidy of mankind. She is told that her lover is dead and Tony's cousin insists, more forcefully than tactfully, upon being accepted as a substitute.

Viola finds shelter with a friendly organ grinder until he is run over by an automobile and once more she is at the mercy of wolves in sheep's clothing. Her last affair is the most serious of all, for the man, taking his failure very much to heart, commits suicide in the room adjoining that selected for the marriage of Tony and Viola. It seems a bit cold-blooded to go ahead with the ceremony while the body of the dead man lies only a few feet away, but such is the spirit of youth. Viola's troubles, keen enough while they last, always are readily forgotten. Because she is weeping in one scene does not indicate an absence of laughter in the next.

Miss Brady becomes more likable with each new picture and this time she is given good support.

"The Modern Sphinx"

Three-Reel American Offering Abounds in Beautiful Scenes and Is Well Enacted by a Capable Cast.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS fascinating subject has a strong imaginative interest and, while containing a tragic note, is given a light, graceful handling that makes it very appealing. It is called a "love story of the ages" and the plot is one of pronounced mysticism.

The opening scenes occur in Egypt. Asa, the daughter of Ram, an astrologer, becomes jealous of a servant in the house because he loves another. She poisons him, but the father restores him by speedy use of an antidote. The astrologer then puts his daughter to sleep for 3,000 years, to be awakened only when she has been redeemed by true love. These Egyptian scenes are artistic and attractive and at once place the production on a high level of interest.

Scene from "The Modern Sphinx." (American).

In the modern scenes the same artistic care has been used. Asa is reborn and appears as a girl named Zalda. She is cold-hearted and has not yet felt the power of love. At a garden fete she meets a young artist named Francis Passmore, who awakens the divine passion in her breast. She gives herself to him and learns too late that he is married. She then takes poison and dies. In the closing scenes, the cycle of 3,000 years having passed, her father reawakens her in Egypt and her entire nature has been transformed.

Winifred Greenwood and Edward Coxen do appealing work in the leading roles. Robert Klein and George Field also appear in minor parts. The production as a whole is remarkable for its sheer beauty of presentation and capable handling throughout.

"Sons of Satan"

Five-Reel Red Feather Production Provides Many Thrills in a Screen Story of Crime and Detection.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THERE is a tradition that judges of the supreme bench and other men of high station are fond of reading detective stories of the old-fashioned thriller type. It is easy, if this is the case, to imagine an eminent jurist having a most enjoyable time while watching this five-reel production entitled "Sons of Satin." It was produced by George Leone Tucker from a story by Wm. Le Queux, and is enacted by a company of English players, including Gerald Ames, Blanche Bryan and others.

Scene from "Sons of Satan" (Red Feather).

No pains have been spared to keep the observer in a constant state of excitement of an enjoyable sort. All of the old tricks are employed—false walls, secret panels, jewels, murder, frame-up, arrest of innocent girl, clash between rival detectives, two bound in house, fire, hero comes! It is all in this offering, sooner or later, and there is no slackening of interest from the commencement to the close. All manner of disguises are worn during the course of the story.

The narrative begins by picturing the career of a small boy, who yields to wrong impulses early in life. He grows up and becomes a master criminal who poses as a detective in order to carry on his work. He conducts the business of criminality on a big scale, having a large band of office assistants and strong-arm men.

The theft of the Littleborough jewels leads to the undoing of this individual and his followers. The attending story is complicated and well-handled. The hero and a detective named Fenton bring the clues together and round up the gang. The abduction of the girl, while the criminals posed as a moving picture company, made a good feature.

While some of the devices employed are theatrical in the extreme, the story at the same time manages to maintain a convincing quality that saves it from the taint of burlesque.

The presentation is faulty at times, some of the scenes being short and the photography being slightly uneven. But as a whole it makes a successful production of its type.

Biographs Ready for Issue

"Pique" in Three Reels, is Taken from Play, "His White Lie," a Two-Part Drama.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

WHILE there is nothing startling about this three-part adaptation of Augustin Daly's play, "Pique," the picture has enough good points to warrant its recommendation as an acceptable offering. In matters of production, perfect photography and artistic settings, the film is practically flawless, and the story will pass as a very fair romance of the type to be expected from one of Daly's plays. Particular note should be made of the excellent scenes made aboard a man-o-war, and the few bits of action photographed in a navy yard give the picture some of its more realistic touches. Now that audiences are so actively interested in the American navy it might have been wise to include more glimpses of life aboard a battleship.

Scene from "Pique" (Biograph).

But probably Director Lawrence Marston, whose first concern was a clear presentation of the story, made the most of the opportunities offered by the scenario, and the fact that the hero was a lieutenant in the navy. William Russell appears quite at his best in uniform and altogether gives a manly, effective performance of Arthur Standish, who finds that the girl he loves has married him out of pique. Franklin Ritchie plays Lessing, the fortune-hunting trouble-maker, who weds Mabel's pretty stepmother because of her large bank account, and then it is that the disappointed girl accepts Standish, intending, however, to avoid the obligations of a wife. Love for her husband is not kindled until after the birth of a child.

In the role of the discontented wife, Gretchen Hartman is called upon for acting in dissimilar moods, first in a display of coldness, and later in the indication of strong emotion and grief over the loss of her child, kidnapped by the hirelings of Lessing. Miss Hartman acquits herself extremely well, as does Mr. Ritchie in the character of Lessing. Others who contribute materially to the picture are Isabel Rea and Jack Drumeir.

In "His White Lie," a two-part drama, we find a plausible treatment of a familiar plot showing how a self-sacrificing man assumes guilt for a crime he did not commit and afterwards, under a different name, rises to a position of importance, only to have his reputation threatened by a disclosure of the past. This time he is a candidate for political office and his chances of election seem small, indeed, until a full confession from the woman who committed the murder clears him of suspicion.

Scene from "His White Lie" (Biograph).

As in other Biograph pictures, the production is excellent and able performances are given by Claire McDowell, Charles Mailes, Gretchen Hartman and Charles Perley.

"Ham the Diver."

THERE may not be anything new under the sun, but if a man gets inside of a diving suit and starts to explore the waters under the earth, he will, undoubtedly, have a novel experience. He may even find a plot for a screen drama. Ham does not discover one, in the present case, but the scene of one of the episodes in "Ham the Diver" is laid at the bottom of the ocean, and the big comedian learns that a firm friendship is as a rope of sand when a pretty girl is pitted against it, and that even Bud forgets the call of duty once he spies Ethel on the stringpiece of a dock and catches sight of her smiling face and the clocks on her silken hose. There is capital fooling all through this one-reel farce. With Ham inside the diving suit, and Bud at the airpump and a pretty girl winking at him, at least one of the two male beings is bound to get into trouble. Bud deserts his post, but Ham arises from the "vasty deep" and goes in search of him, clad in his submarine walking suit, and creates a sensation at every step. Ham and Bud are credited with the authorship of the scenario. Come again, gentlemen!

"The Night Watch."

Howard Irving Young has written a tense one-reel drama that is without a single foot of unnecessary material. "The Night Watch" tells of a physician who is doing everything his skill can suggest to save the life of a patient, when he learns that the young man has caused his daughter's downfall. His struggle between his professional duty and his desire to avenge his child forms a powerful motive, and the author has handled the theme with a keen eye to dramatic effect. The climax is brought about skillfully, and the acting of the cast is earnest and competent. Robert Ellis, who produced the picture, plays Dr. Crawford. He does not realize the character physically, but acts it with feeling and understanding. Dallas Tyler is especially capable as the girl, and Richard Purdon and Arthur Albertson could not be improved upon in their respective roles.

"Earning His Salt."

One of the important features of this one-reel comedy is Ethel Teare's wardrobe. It may not boast the label of a foreign modiste, but it is a collection of nifty frocks, for all that. Ethel impersonates a daughter of wealth and wears her hair done up high. She is the sweetheart of a young chap with more money than brains, who tries to prove that he can earn his salt by running his auto for hire. Ethel proceeds to make Bluebird Five-Part Subject, an Adaptation of Fouque's Fairy Tale, Contains Many Scenes of Beauty.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

BLUEBIRD Photoplays released on February 7 "Undine," a five-part adaptation by Walter Woods of the fairy tale of Fouque. Henry Otto is the producer. For the greater part of the exteriors of the tale Mr. Otto has traveled to one of the Santa Barbara group of islands, which lie twenty-five miles off the coast of California. The location is ideal. The shore line of the island is marked by volcanic cliffs. In places the waves have pounded out deep caves which in the picture are used to full advantage, forming the backgrounds for scenes that in the entirety are rarely picturesque. The story is of the sea and forest, with its nymphs and mortals.

Being a story of the sea and of nymphs Mr. Otto has been bold enough to make his character approximate the conception of the average mind as to what constitutes a nymph—as that average mind is taught by artists and writers to picure it. While it is true these denizens of the deep are not clothed

In overalls it cannot be said "Undine" is a subject children should not see. For children will be delighted with it. It will appeal to them as a vizualization of many pages out of their own books. As to the reception of the picture by adults it can be said it is purely a matter of mind. Or if you like you may shift about the phraseology of the last half-dozen words. The vital fact is the picture is a thing of beauty.

The story is told in narrative form. A man reads to his little daughter the tale of Undine. Five or six times the story dissolves back to the pair. In the course of the unfolding of the tale the father and child as well as the mother are seen as characters. The illusion would have been materially enhanced had the story been told straight away, without the shifting back and forth. The appeal of the subject is to the eye rather than in its dramatic quality.

The acting is adequate. The role of Undine is intrusted to Ida Schnall, a swimmer of real ability who also portrays her part skillfully. Associated with Miss Schnall in the aquatic scenes—and there are many of them—are a score of girls who in the grottoes dance as gracefully as in the ocean they disport with pep. The photography is unusual. While most of it is in black and white, the exceptions are marks of laboratory judgment. Especially true is this statement of the coloring in the sunset call. It is the sunset.

Two Lubin Releases

"The Last Shot," a Two-Reel Melodrama, by George W. Terwilliger, and "The Diamond Thieves," a One-Reel "Crook" Play, by Frank D. Genest.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"The Last Shot."

THE main motive of this two-reel photoplay, and the one from which the picture derives its title, is romantic enough to have been taken from the pages of the elder Dumas. Two men, who are in love with the same woman, fight a duel. One of the combatants is an expert pistol shot. His adversary fires first and wounds him. The expert reserves his fire and gets his opponent to sign a paper agreeing to let the other take his shot when and where he pleases. Waiting until the doomed man is happily married and the father of two children, the revengeful rival calls upon him and demands the fulfilment of his pledge. The man, an officer in the United States Navy, does not falter. The sight of the lieutenant's wife and her two children changes the expert's purpose, however, and he fires in the air. The other situations in the drama include a murder outside of a disreputable road house, and the heroine a witness to the crime. George W. Terwilliger, who wrote and directed the picture, has woven the threads of his story together with due regard for plausability, and constructed an interesting, if not thoroughly convincing, photoplay. Happily, the duello has been relegated to the limbo of discarded things in company with a false code of honor and the motion that a gentleman proved his right to the title by drinking his neighbor under the table. We may still be "sudden and quick in quarrel," but we use the weapons nature gave us and do not aspire to drill holes in each other with lead bullets. For proof, kindly recall that little affair in Washington the other day between an ex-Secretary of the Navy and another prominent citizen.

The most artistic performance of the cast is that of Wm. H. Turner in the character of an Italian. The part is not a long one, but Mr. Turner brings it well to the fore. Arthur Mat-

"The Diamond Thieves."

Ingenuity of plot is the most commendable feature of this one-reel "crook" drama, written by Frank D. Genest and produced by Wilbert Melville. The efforts of Jim Cloves and his daughter Doris, two expert jewel thieves, to obtain possessions of a number of valuable diamonds, keep the interest of the picture at a firm tension, and the author has worked out his theme along fairly original lines. "The Final Curtain"

A Photodrama in Five Parts by George Kleine That Should Rank With "Stop Thief" in Popularity; the Big Favorites, Arthur Hoops and Alma Hanlon, in the Leading Roles, With Strong Support.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

CHANNING POLLOCK has given us a ripping, good photodrama in "The Final Curtain." It has a well-knit story that lends itself admirably to the screen; strong dramatic interest that ends most happily, and a sprinkling of rich farce-comedy that forces laughter of the good old type that aids digestion.

One feels at home with all the characters, for they are men and women of our own day and country, and we know their types so well and are so familiar with what may be expected from them that we sympathize with them, laugh at them or cuss them in the most unrestrained manner as their varying moods and actions stir us. Some of us may not be at all familiar with such scenes as take place at the dinner table in Mrs. Keene's theatrical boarding house, in New York, but that rather heightens the fervor of one's mirth, for I consider them among the most novel and most spontaneous laugh-makers of a perfectly clean type, that I have yet seen on the screen.

Little Ruth Darrett (Alma Hanlon) is a type that appeals to us from the very first view we get of her, which is in a small country town theater where she is playing the lead with a ham-fat opposite, when she attracts the attention of a Broadway star, Herbert Lyle (Herbert Hayes), who chances to be among the audience. Lyle immediately wires his friend John Banks (Frank Belcher), a Broadway manager, that he has made a great find in Ruth, with the result that she is engaged to play the lead in "Bluebird" on Broadway.

Ruth is duly installed in Mrs. Keene's theatrical boarding house during the rehearsal of the "Bluebird" company, where she meets the Marvelous Sylvesters (Crimmons and Gore), the Tragedian (H. H. MacCollum), the Dancer (Joe Scott), and the Juggler (Prince Sutton). The antics in which these worthies engage at the dinner table form a whole show, condensed, it is true, for Ruth's benefit and to permit the performers the necessary interludes to snatch and bolt some of Mrs. Keene's table delicacies. The dexterity of the juggler as he juggles with everything on the table, from soup to nuts, not forgetting plates and other utensils—will be a rich treat to every one that sees it. A great guffaw of laughter is certain to greet the supposed accidental breaking of a plate on the lofty dome of the tragedian, whose superior attitude at the frivolity of it all receives a splintering shock.

With this brief introduction Ruth Darrell is brought to the opening performance of "Bluebird," which places her at once among the ranks of the most favored stars on Broadway. And with this pronounced success begins the absorbing story of her courtship and marriage, the temporary separation from her husband, John Lord (Arthur Hoops), her successful intervention in his business interests that saved him from ruin, and their happy reunion.

Through all these changes Miss Hanlon's Ruth Darrell never fails to rally the spectator to her support. Even in the scenes between Ruth and her husband, where the whims of the girl distract and disturb the developed mind and staid purpose of the man of the world, there are delicate little shadings of character that reveal a heart loyal and true, little shy outbursts of womanliness (and some that are very determined indeed) that demand from the husband what the wife's love depends upon—attentions and still more attentions. To me this is Miss Hanlon's best essay before the camera. She appears utterly unconscious of the fact that her every look and gesture is being registered to the life; and that she appears so easy and life-like in the part results from an absorbtion of the character that makes her forget the camera.

Mr. Hoops has already proved himself a photodramatic actor of fine ability and versatility, but I must confess a preference for his finished impersonation of John Lord. The strong virility of the impersonation of this self-reliant young business man among big business men cannot fail to command the attention and respect of every spectator. That John Lord carries the same sturdy manliness to the defense of his wife—as shown in the dressing room scene in the theater, where Herbert Lyle, the leading man, is taking unmanly advantage of Ruth Darrell—was only to be expected. This is a terrific scene in its intensity and swift punishment. But the tender scenes between Ruth and her husband are none the less tender because of it. The bravest are ever the most tender, though in passion they may overshoot the mark.

John Banks, the Broadway manager, is ably impersonated by Frank Belcher, and Herbert Hayes sustains the part of Herbert Lyle most creditably. The remaining members of the cast are in worthy keeping.

The release date was Feb. 2, throught George Kleine's offices.

"The Writing on the Wall" Is Finely Acted—Maurice Costello Does Good Work in "The Crown Prince's Double."

"The Writing on the Wall."

THE title of this drama, admirably produced by Tefft Johnson from a scenario by William J. Hurlburt, is appropriate in more ways than one. An audience reads "the writing on the wall" quite as clearly as do any of the characters and is fully prepared for the denouement of the story—the fire in the dangerous tenement where the children of the slums are congregated, also the narrow escape of the son of the man responsible for the tragedy. This much appeared inevitable long before its occurrence, but it should not be gathered that the picture loses interest on that account. There is no clumsy, premature revelation of the plot, in this instance, rather a deft handling of the story that gains in strength because of the hints at what is to happen.

Far more than most productions, "The Writing on the Wall" reveals the possibilities for powerful character delineation when the roles are entrusted to suitable actors. It is not the introduction of unusual people or situations that gives the picture distinction, but the really convincing handling of material that might almost be termed old. For his central character, Mr. Hurlburt uses a wealthy man, immoral in his personal life and unmindful of his obligations to society, as manifested in his refusal to replace the useless fire escapes on his tenement property. His wife is a woman of fine instincts, devoted to their son and willing to forgive almost anything rather than bear the humiliation of a public scandal. Then there is the wife's brother, married to a woman, who in earlier years had an affair with the unscrupulous Irving Lawrence.

Bringing all of these people under the same roof the author evolves an intimate tragedy of domestic life in which the performances of Virginia Pearson as the wife and Joseph Kilgour as Lawrence, the husband, stand out by reason of their lifelikeness and emotional force. Naomi Childers and Robert Gaillard are almost equally effective as the second married couple, whereas the little boy is played by the ever lovable Bobby Connelly. The production is brought to a thrilling climax in the tenement house fire in which Lawrence meets death in the trap he left as a menace to others.

"The Crown Prince's Double."

The first reel of this five-part Vitagraph production indicates a story laid in one of the mythical kingdoms of Europe, so popular with writers of picturesque romance, but the scene soon shifts to America where the crown prince is allowed to work out his problems in democratic surroundings. There is enough royalty in the first reel, however, to establish Maurice Costello's right to a cream-colored, gold-trimmed uniform and to account for his wearing a monocle, as becomes the son of the King of Ostrau. During his American experience he discards the uniform, but retains the monocle and with it the bearing of princely dignity. Mr. Costello makes a very engaging Prince Oscar and easily assumes the personality of a humble American bookkeeper, who chances to be his physical double.

If an exhibitor wants a wholesome, entertaining picture, one entirely free from questionable sex disturbances and likely to appeal most strongly to young women whose dreams of ideal romance have not been dissipated, "The Crown Prince's Double" is just the thing. Gilbert Patten wrote a story for the story's sake and made an altogether palatable mixture of love and adventure, the spirit of which is best summed up in the concluding statement that "the love of a true woman is more precious than a crown."

A revolution in Ostrau drives the king and the crown prince into temporary exile, and Prince Oscar, visiting at the home of a friend in America, is indiscreet enough to marry an American girl, although his royal father has planned an alliance with the princess of a neighboring kingdom. When efforts are made to return the prince to Europe, he has the good fortune to meet a penniless clerk, his duplicate in appearance and willing to obey instructions as long as expenses are paid. As a result, the emissaries of King Gustave trail the wrong man and cause complications in two love affairs. The plot is so diverting that one does not stop to question its plausibility.

Norma Talmadge is winsome as the sweetheart of the clerk, who has wealth thrust upon him, and Anna Laughlin makes a very likable person of the prince's wife. Other able performances are given by Anders Randolph, Thomas Mills and Howard Hall. Director Van Dyke Brooke took advantage of opportunities for picturesque settings in the first reel and for the rest supplied a production of even merit. Although Mr. Costello played a dual role, scenes were so arranged that only one double exposure was necessary.

"When Love is King"

Romantic Photoplay in Which American Money Triumphs Over European Royalty—Kleine-Edison Feature.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

FOUR parts romance, one part comedy, is a fair estimate of this Edison production, introducing a king whose blood is red as well as blue. During four reels the picture is romantic drama, of the kind made possible by the fiction writer's own geography, showing how Europe is divided into a great number of small kingdoms, always open for revolutions and royal alliances. We expect costly trappings, sentiment and adventure in a photoplay called "When Love Is King" and presenting Felix, King of Wallonia, but there is no reason to anticipate such a humorous glorification of Yankee aggressiveness, at the expense of aristocratic snobbery, as enlivens the concluding reel.

The story is such a frank exaggeration, at times almost on a par with a musical comedy plot, that criticism on the score of probability is disarmed. To say that things don't happen that way would be quite as much beside the point as to question the existence of the kingdoms of Wallonia and Trebizond. Moreover, there is a suggestion of American methods in the deeds attributed to J. P. Morton, the wealthiest man in the United States.

This multi-millionaire, who, to meet particularly large expenditures, merely raises the price of oil, gets what he wants with unfaltering directness. It happens that his daughter falls in love with a king and that the king is not free to marry her because state policies require his alliance with a neighboring princess. Morton has never heard of either of the kingdoms before, but, having located them, his course is simple. He buys the kingdom which stands in the way of his daughter's happiness and, having given the deposed ruler a check for five million dollars, sends him to Paris or Monte Carlo. An audience may find a satirical quality in these scenes, or accept them as the inevitable triumph of downright Americanism.

Preceding reels offer an acceptable narrative of a king's adventures, when, traveling incognito in the United States, he falls in love with an heiress. He is trailed by men engaged to kill him, hence an opportunity for moments of physical excitement with which to vary the sentimental passages. Richard Tucker, in appearance, carriage and manner is just about the most kingly actor that we recall, and his authoritative acting gives genuine individuality to the character. Carrol McComas brings spontaniety and grace to her interpretation of Marcia, whereas Morton is made entirely lifelike by Bigelow Cooper. The important role of Baron Tarnow, the king's companion, is exceedingly well presented by Harold Meltzer.

"Silas Marner"

Seven-Reel Thanhouser, Adapted from George Eliot's Novel —Released Through Mutual Program.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

ARTISTRY of treatment, sense of what is both appropriate and attractive to the eye, is fast becoming a Thanhouser characteristic, a general quality to be highly appreciated, especially in view of the fact that the regulation old studio director, the kind that drifts from one studio to another, usually lacks both imagination and good taste. Besides its charm for the eye, "Silas Marner" shows consistent and careful work in the scenario. Because of its many lapses of time, the story is not an easy one to tell on the screen, and it presents many other difficulties of contsruction, those of an involved plot, but the author of the screen version has done his work with rare skill, and a very interesting story is the result.

The greatest pleasure one experiences in watching this portrayal, however, lies in what is commonly known as "atmosphere." We are taken out of the life we are living and transported, as on a magic rug, to other lands and other times, and then our intelligence is assumed—we are not carefully informed that Cupid is the God of Love, as is done in another release shown at the same time. From the beginning of his career in motion-picture production Thanhouser has assumed the intelligence of Americans, and he has won out on those lines. Any example that aims below that intelligence does not on that account satisfy the mentally weak, while it only dis-gusts millions of refinement and education, including the young generation, brightest of any America has ever known. The Thanhouser company is to be congratulated on this successful adaptation.

"Hell's Hinges"

Five-Reel Triangle Kay-Bee, Featuring William S. Hart, on Triangle Program.

GOOD enough actor not to require a perpetual repetition of the Western Bad Man, desperado, outlaw or tough, reformed through the sweet and humanizing influence of a pure-minded girl from what is vaguely known as the East, William S. Hart should try himself out in some other role, or, at least, in some more decided variation of story in which he quite regularly appears. Then, too, he might well be a little more human and less heroic with no loss of sympathy in the average audience. The old fashioned theatrical hero fails to win with a large percentage of the modern audience. Hart is a fine type and capable of picturing imperfect man as he really is and long has been, a composite being, "the riddle of the world."

"Hell's Kitchen" could not be a failure, coming from the versatile Gardner Sullivan and resourceful Tom Ince. Brilliant in subtitle, strong in treatment, with occasional notes of true pathos, the marks of creative ability and sure craftsmanship are there, but more of the material is outworn—the genius of author and director barely save it—and the fire scenes, elaborate as they are, finally cause interest to flag from too much repetition. The cast is without flaw. Every one of the principals: Clara Williams, Louise Glaum, Jack Standing and Alfred Hollingsworth, utilizing every atom of opportunity given them to the utmost. Ince wins through selective ability. He gets the plays, the best that is in them and the right actors for their clear and effective interpretation. He is at his best when holding close to revelations of the human mind and heart.

"The Strange Case of Mary Page"

"The Trial," "The Web" and "The Mark," Three Episodes of the Essanay Serial Which Bring New Factors into the Story and Keep the Interest at the Fever Point.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"The Trial."

TO RECALL, even in the most casual manner, the first four episodes of "The Strange Case of Mary Page" is to be impressed with the fact that the author has realized the importance of keeping undiminished the interest of the story. By every device known to the skilled dramatist, he has maintained his hold upon the attention of the spectator, without sacrificing the natural order of events or giving a false dramatic value to any of the scenes or incidents. If it will be possible to write of the remaining episodes of the serial in the same terms of praise, the scenarioist of the Essanay serial will have established an unique record for photoplays of this class.

The second episode of "The Strange Case of Mary Page" is given over mainly to scenes at the accused girl's trial. The events brought out by the testimony are those which took place on the evening of the murder, the scenes being acted out so as to recall vividly the damaging nature of the evidence against the actress. As Mary's lawyer, the manner in which Langdon conducts her defense shows that the man is putting forth every effort that his keen brain and his love for the girl can suggest. In this installment no hint is given as to how Mary escaped from the room after the murder. The leading man of her company, and also her maid, are put on the stand, and the testimony obtained from them by the prosecution goes far to establish the fact that the crime was the result of premeditation.

The excellent judgment shown by the director in his choice of groupings and the use of "close-ups" during the trial deserves a word of praise. Courtroom scenes are among the most difficult problems a director is called upon to solve.

"The Web."

The third episode of "The Strange Case of Mary Page" contains an inkling of how the actress got away before the officers could arrest her, on the night of the murder. Most of the action is devoted to the trial, and the fact is brought out through the testimony of a reporter that the girl, still attired in the costly evening gown of the night before, had passed the night in a police station, her dazed condition being mistaken for drunkenness. Mary is unable to recall anything that happened during her wanderings, and the reporter takes her to Langdon, who has her give herself up to the authorities.

"The Mark."

The mass of evidence submitted at the trial during the fourth episode of the story is along new channels and of great interest. The motive for Mary's hatred of the murdered man is shown. Her father, after forging David Pollock's name to a check, promises to use his influence with Mary in Pollock's behalf if he (Pollock) will not prosecute him. In order to save her father from prison, Mary consents to dismiss Langdon and accept Pollock.

Another important fact is brought out. Mr. Page is abdicted to liquor, and while under its influence, goes into paroxysms of rage. Just before Mary's birth, he returned home one night, maddened with drink, and began to abuse his wife. When the child was born the print of a hand showed on her left shoulder, and, in after life, she was subject to violent outbursts of temper. Another important point: Mr. Page assaulted his wife shortly before the murder, and Mary flew to her rescue. As her father seized her by the left shoulder she became dazed, acting in the same manner as when found by the reporter at the police station. It is also shown in this episode that she was overheard declaring to Pollock that she could kill him! With such highly spiced food for reflection, the spectator's interest in Mary's fate becomes stronger than ever.

The acting if Edna Mayo, Henry B. Walthall, Sydney Ainsworth, Harry Dunkinson, Thomas Cummerford and their associates, and the work of Director J. Charles Hayden are sustained at the same high level that marked their efforts in the opening episode.

A touch of nature, which will appeal to all feminine beholders, occurs during the trial. A lady in the front row of spectators calmly opens her vanity box, takes out a powder puff and puts it to its proper use. If the ruling passion be strong in death, will not the parting injunction of the present day slaves of the puff soon run after this fashion: "Give my tango pumps to sister Sarah and be sure, when you lay me out, not to forget to powder my nose!"

"The House That Jack Built"

A Three-Reel Photoplay, Produced by the New York Central Lines as an Object Lesson in Their "Safety First" Campaign.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THAT a great railroad system like the New York Central, with its vast experience and resources, would be able to produce a superior quality of railroad wreck, was a foregone conclusion. The smash-up shown in "The House That Jack Built," the three-reel moving picture drama written by Marcus A. Dow, the General Safety Agent of the road, goes far beyond anticipation and sends a real thrill through the beholders as the two trains meet and the wreckage is sent flying in every direction. This is the most dramatic episode of the photoplay, which is intended as an interesting object lesson and a means of education to the general public and to the employes of the road, in connection with the Central's safety campaigns.

The first picture used in this way was "Steve Hill's Awakening." An old dining car was fitted up as a traveling theater and the picture was shown from one end of the line to the other. The same method has been pursued with "The House That Jack Built," and the working forces of the company have been given a well acted, technically correct railroad drama which tells a good "heart" story and illustrates by forceful examples the many dangers that railroad employes needlessly subject themselves to by not obeying the common-sense slogan, Safety First.

Mr. Dow has made a brakeman, Jack Foster, the hero of the story. Foster is happily married and the father of two children, but his lack of caution while following his dangerous calling is a constant source of worry to his wife and also to his close friend Jim Stevens, a conductor. The risks that Jack is continually running are pointed out to him by Stevens, and pictured in detail on the screen. Scenes are introduced showing what leads up to the wreck, how the brakeman lost his leg, another man an eye, and how a third man was knocked from the roof of a box car when making a coupling. The lessons work the desired effect upon Jack, and he becomes a model of caution and efficiency.

The picture is a creditable example of the art of the screen, and was produced by Charles E. Davenport. Al Thomas, George Henry and Iva Shepard have the leading roles and all the characters are played by professional actors. Playing before spectators made up largely of experts, the fact that the cast has invariably earned their respect speaks volumes for the ability of its members.

Biograph Comedy Reissues

Mack Sennett, Fred Mace, Mabel Normand and Charles Murray Figure in Productions Made Several Years Ago.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

FOUR or five years ago the Biograph Company had more than its share of photoplay comedians. At that time the names of Mack Sennett, Mabel Normand and Fred Mace, among others, were just beginning to mean something to the public. Mr. Sennett was directing, not quite in his Keystonian manner, to be sure; but always with a sure sense of comedy values, and the pictures he made are as good today as they were at the time of production. They are in many moods, from mild humor to out-and-out burlesque, and, judging from the batch selected for redistribution, and shown for review, they are well worth reviving.

Having several hundred subjects from which to choose, it was possible to exclude all save the strongest of the comedies. In making the selection, the Biograph officials were dealing with known quantities, for the popular appeal of the pictures chosen had been proven during earlier runs. And apart from intrinsic merit, there is reason to expect an additionally keen interest in these productions, owing to the vogue of Mr. Sennett and several of his players. An exhibitor advertising a Sennett picture with Mabel Normand and Fred Mace in the cast, or perhaps Ford Sterling and Charles Murray, is bound to attract attention.

Short, snappy comedies were in favor when these productions were made, consequently most of the reels contain two subjects. In bracketing the pictures the policy was to combine a light comedy, in which story and characterization predominate, with a rapid farce, or burlesque. "The Fickle Spaniard," acted with fine spirit by Miss Normand and Mr. Mace, has as a companion piece "Because of a Hat," featuring Mr. Murray in a prolonged fight, starting in a theater and terminating in a boxing club, where the combatants give a ludicrous exhibition of pugilistic prowess unrestrained by rules.

Mr. Murray again predominates in "A Ten-Karat Hero," issued with "Their First Divorce Case," a cleverly devised story presenting Messrs. Sennett and Mace as burlesque detectives, unsuccessful disciples of Sherlock Holmes. A story more subtle in its suggestion and Frenchy in tone is "An Evening with Wilder Spender." This picture occupies a full reel and deserves every foot of it. Miss Normand and Mr. Sterling are the particular attraction in "An Interrupted Elopement." Mr. Murray is thoroughly amusing in "Skelly's Skeleton," whereas in "The Speed Demon," made during automobile races at Santa Monica, Mr. Mace gets plenty of fun out of a ridiculous car driven by hand power. In this picture we see Jack Pickford as a small boy. Considering the shortage of good comedies, new prints of these worth-while negatives should be welcome.

"Seeing America"

The Greatest Miracle of Motion Picture Photography—The Author Is Edward S. Curtis, Famous for His Films of Indian Life and Lore.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

IT IS not in the power of words—it certainly is not in my power—to describe the glories and beauties of these pictures according to their deserts. They are nothing less than a revelation in motion picture photography when applied to the artistic depiction of marvelous natural scenery. The maker of the pictures, Edward S. Curtis, is, of course, no stranger in the motion picture field. His picture "In the Land of the Head-Hunters" and his screening of Indian lore and Indian life have won for him the grateful admiration of all friends of screen art and screen beauty.

In these pictures he has applied his unequaled skill to new topics. He has transferred to the screen the living, breathing, eternal beauty of Yellowstone Park and of the Valley of the Yosemite. He has thus widened the appeal of his pictures and has brought the miracles of Nature to the eyes of the whole world. Forget, if you please, any previous effort to film these silent sermons of the Almighty. There can be no comparison. You, dear reader, will understand what I mean when I tell you that in photographing the glories of America's wonderland not a jot of the original has been lost. Indeed, I venture to say that something has been added. So happy have been Mr. Curtis' selections, so skilful has been his work that we see what is most wonderful and most entrancing portrayed in a manner which suggests that the maker has been "thinking the thoughts of the Creator after Him."

Mr. Curtis is the master of light and shade. I must compare his eye to the lens which the Creator puts in the eye of the artist and the poet. He seizes the beauty of a scene and then makes you see it. A small but highly critical audience sat through the running of the two thousand feet of film and they were quickly charmed into the profound silence of admiration. Now and then a half broken exclamation of wonder and delight would make itself heard.

How can I tell of the marvels that I saw? There were the immortal trees, among them standing forth the "Grizzly Giant"; there were the cliffs and canyons; there were the scenes of bewitching beauty caught in the majestic solitude of the forest; there were the glorious rocks, which have stirred the fancy of the Indians and the early explorers and upon which old legends have bestowed such picturesque names as "El Capitan" and "The Three Frogs"; there are unforgetable sunsets, there are exquisite and priceless pictures of cloud and sky and of the animals that now roam the grand solitudes under the protecting hand of Uncle Sam; and there are the waterfalls, the cascades with their pearly showers and the mighty geysers and strange craters. The way the waterfalls, cascades and geysers have been made to live on the screen is a miracle of photography. Whether we look at the sparkle in the geyser's crater, with every drop bewitchingly beautiful in its crystal roundness, whether we look at the gushing of the mud-crater, suggesting the vivid picture of Dante's "gente fangosi," whether we look at the young pelicans, withdrawing in babyish bashfulness and distrust from the presence of the camera and its alarming click, whether we watch the noble herd of buffalo fording the stream with the playful calves flanking the line of guard, whether we gaze upon the volumes and columns of steam that come spouting, hissing and trembling from the troubled bosom of the earth—we meet the same art, the same skill, the same inspiration, which makes all past performances look puny and awkward. It is the water, which in its various shapes and motions gives the author a rare opportunity for the display of his art. Now we see the water churned into a thick white mass like buttermilk driven by invisible forces, next we see it hanging like huge curtains of spray upon the steep and pendant rocks, and again we see it like floods of liquid silver suggesting to the simple poetic mind of the Indian the apt name of "Silver Apron."

One picture of undreamed beauty follows another in bewildering succession and every scene is a climax. Who can paint the flight of the birds? Imagine hundreds of prettily marked and graceful birds now soaring in swift flight and now poised and resting in the air; imagine these wild yet dainty creatures sailing through clouds, shot through with the beams of the sinking sun; imagine the quickly alternating contrasts of light and shade and you have what? But a very faint idea of the surpassing beauty of the original. Of all the beautiful things I have seen—including the mass of heavenly color in the Duomo at Milan and the serene, sublime over-powering beauty of Capri—none was more inspiring than the painted flight of these birds at sunset.

There is a place in the Valley of the Yosemite called Inspiration Point. It is well named. A mind as keenly sensitive to the lines of beauty as that of the author must have drunk deeply of the precious font. Here his art was justly spurred on to its greatest efforts. Verdi walked past a plain blacksmith shop; transmuted by the alchemy of genius the strokes of the hammers were fashioned into the most popular of melodies. Wagner was caught by the winds that sweep the Swedish fjords and he translated the music of the storms into articulated music. The maker of these films wandered through America's wonderland and has enriched the world's possessions by the sweetest symphony in films.

Mr. Curtis calls these pictures "Seeing America." He has just touched the edges of his great subjects. He is entitled to the thanks of every exhibitor and to the lasting gratitude of the American public.

"Madame La Presidente"

Anna Held in Amusing French Farce Written by Maurice Hennequin and Pierre Veber—Produced by Oliver Morosco Photoplay Co.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

AFTER a model plainly cut out by a pair of sharp French scissors "Madame La Presidente," a five reel farce offered by the Paramount people and produced by Oliver Morosco Photoplay, can safely be called a diverting picture. Especially toward the end, when the situations become more broadly farcical, it will bring laughter from any audience. The story develops slowly giving play to the kind of humor that appeals to the intelligent and experienced rather than to the simple minded and leads to a climax in which the human embarrassment will be open to the appreciation of the one equally with the other. It is not exactly the kind of a farce that makes American audiences roar with laughter; but it will easily make one forget the time and leave in him the feeling that he has been entertained. Most people, I believe, will be glad to see it and will say that they got their money's worth from it.

Anna Held comes into the picture as an actress en tour and in a smaller French city. The wife of the chief magistrate of the place has gone to Paris to ask the Minister of Justice to advance her husband who, and this is continually harped on, is a man of scrupulous moral integrity. But the minister, passing through, has stopped off to visit the chef magistrate. The three subordinate magistrates have got their names in print as being uproarious in a cabaret while entertaining the actress. The chief berates the three and then orders the police to put her out of the hotel. She comes to demand that the chief find a place for her and the three conspire to have her secreted in the room of the chief's wife. The Minister comes and to save his reputation, the chief says that she is his wife. There are bits of amusing business strung through these scenes that get over sufficiently. The Minister is quite taken with the charming wife of the city's chief magistrate who promises to visit him in Paris. What happens when both the real and the supposed wife reach the office of the Minister of Justice and the husband too gets there is certainly amusing. The picture has a well chosen cast and as a production is very praiseworthy.

MATTERS IN THE COURTS.

Judge Julius M. Mayer of the United States District Court dismissed the suit in equity filed by Richard Watson Tully against the Triangle Film Corporation and others for alleged infringement of the play, "A Bird of Paradise."

Justice Neuberger of the Supreme Court of New York has denied a petition for an injunction against the American Correspondent Film Company to prevent it from exhibiting "The Warring Millions."

The Cort Film Corporation has commenced a suit in the Supreme Court against Leo Rosengarten over the "Melting Pot." The complaint alleges that the Cort Film Corporation was to receive 60 per cent. of the net receipts of the exhibition of the picture for three years from June 10, 1915, and that an improper statement was sent them; also, regarding the agreement covering the New England territory it is alleged that a statement of recipts up to January 15, 1916, has been refused. The plaintiff demands an accounting and an injunction preventing Rosengarten from showing the picture on account of the alleged violation of contract.

The Amercian Bank Note Company has commenced an action against the Universal Film Manufacturing Company in the Supreme Court for $2,575, alleged to be due on a contract for printing tickets to be delivered to the Robyn-Kander Movie Ticket Corporation.

FLORENCE ROCKWELL IN NEXT PALLAS OFFERING.

What is considered to be one of the best photoplays yet produced by Pallas Pictures will be released on the Paramount Program on February 17, when Florence Rockwell will make her debut under this trade-mark in "He Fell in Love with His Wife," an adaptation from the novel of the same name by E. P. Roe and dramatized on the stage by H. S. Sheldon.

In a sympathetic part that also demands more than ordinary dramatic ability, Florence Rockwell is given unusual opportunities to assert herself as an artist, and one of the chief reasons attributed to the high merit of this production is the success with which she has portrayed her role. Supporting Miss Rockwell is an exceptional cast, including the popular Forrest Stanley, who appears at his best in this subject, Page Peters, Lydia Yeamans Titus, Howard Davies and other artists.

This is the initial Pallas subject produced by William D. Taylor, the well-known director of the West Coast.

BUSTED HEARTS (Vim), Jan. 28.—"Babe" Hardy enacts the plump and beauteous maiden that fractures the hearts of Pokes and Jabs in this one-reel farce. Bobby Burns and Walter Stull find a worthy confrere in "Babe" and the trio hop friskly from one bit of funny business to the other. Vim is the watchword for every one concerned in the farce.

SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 9, 1916 (Selig), Jan. 31.—Ice yachting on Mystic Lake, Mass., starts this number. Other items: Snowplow at Mohawk, Cal.; students drilling at Harvard; bathing in snow, Truckee, Cal.; fatal accident, Buffalo, N. Y.; Boosters Club, Portland, Ore.; Sioux Indian policeman, Washington, D. C.; flood, Phoenix, Ariz.; shipping horses to Europe from Watertown, N. Y.; searchlight near Paris, France; trench gun, Hazebroucx, France, U. S. troops, Corpus Christi, Tex.; Indian chief kills buffalo with bow and arrow (feature picture); Boy Scouts, Washington, D. C.

JANE'S BASHFUL HERO (Vitagraph), Jan. 31.—Edith Storey once more demonstrates her versatility and her disregard for fine frocks by appearing in this one-reel comedy as a simple village maiden whose friends would never advise her to enter a beauty contest. Miss Storey is capital and Donald MacBride is equally amusing as her bashful beau. Billy Bletcher and Edward Elkas are excellent in character parts. Paul West is responsible for the scenario.

ARTFUL ARTISTS (Kalem), Feb. 1.—Ethel Teare, Bud Duncan, Jack MacDermott and Gus Leonard keep the comedy ball rolling in this one-reel photoplay. Bud, as usual, is the underdog of the plot, a scarcity of coin causing him to sell his body for five dollars. When it comes to delivering the goods, he rebels, and that which is death to him is fun for the spectator. William Beaudine made the production.

DREAMY DUD LOST AT SEA (Essanay), Feb. 2.—Another Wallace A. Carlson cartoon comedy, the adventures of Dud & Wag in the good ship "Wow" are wonderful to behold. Mr. Carlson's skilfully drawn pictures are full of humor and make an amusing half reel. The remaining five hundred feet are devoted to scenes around Albuquerque, New Mexico.

SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 10, 1916 (Selig), Feb. 3.—Elephants at work piling logs in India is the feature picture of this number. Other items: The old battleship "Constitution"; petition for an embargo on arms, Washington; Senator Kenyon of Iowa; anti-aircraft guns, Sissons, France; Helen Hays Gleason decorated by the King of Belgium; Equestrian Carnival, Washington; James Whitcomb Riley and Col. Henry Watterson at Miami, Fla.; horse racing at Juarez, Mexico; President Wilson in New York.

A STICKY AFFAIR (Vim), Feb. 3.—"Babe" Hardy and Billy Ruge impersonate a pair of comedy cops in this one-reel farce and make love to the hired help of the inventor of a wonderful glue. The picture lives up to its title, when a large quantity of the adhesive liquid is spilled on the floor. The supply of "rough house" comedy does not run short during the reel.

THE LURKING PERIL (No. 15 of the "Ventures of Marguerite" Series) (Kalem), Feb. 4.—Another instalment of the Howard Irving Young contribution to the Marguerite series is contained in this one-real drama. The Wolf and his accomplices keep up their endeavors to secure the code book, and Zarth becomes the butler in Marguerite's house. Excitement aplenty fills the reel. Marguerite Courtot, Richard Purdon, Arthur Albertson, Robert Ellis, H. G. Hockey and Florence Pendleton are in the cast.

THE WRONG MR. WRIGHT (Vitagraph), Feb. 4.—Fred H. James has written a one-reel comedy of errors that contains a number of ludicrous situations, and the picture is played right merrily by Garry McGarry, Charles Wellesley, Harry Fisher and Jewell Hunt. C. Jay Williams made the production.

THE BROKEN WIRE (No. 65 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), Feb. 5.—The stunt that Helen performs in this one-reel drama is novel to a pronounced degree and lands her in a heap on a flat car of a moving train. She also foils two thieves, during the action of the picture, and keeps the interest on a keen edge from start to finish. Franklin Hall, Robyn Adair and Clarence Burton are Miss Gibson's associates in the cast.

THE ELECTION BET (Lubin), Feb. 5.—Starting with a capital idea, Mark Swan's one-reel comedy is quite the best thing that Billie Reeves has appeared in for some time. The situation where Billie is forced to roll a walnut along the street, makes excellent moving picture material. He apparently enjoys himself hugely, and is aided by James Cassaday, Arthur Mathews, Pete Lang and Carrie Reynolds.

THE DESERT CALLS ITS OWN (Selig), Feb. 5.—This one-reel drama, written by W. E. Wing and produced by Tom Mix, has the genuine western flavor. It deals with an outlaw, the sheriff who runs him down, and a girl who is loved by both men. The story is handled in a dramatic manner and the desert is used to bring about the climax. Pat Chrisman, Sid Jordan, Victoria Forde and Ethylyn Chrisman constitute a competent cast.

General Film Company Specials.

DIAMONDS ARE TRUMPS (Selig), Jan. 31.—The title of this three-reel drama suggests a "crook" play, and such is the case. The author has the thieves rob the sweetheart of a detective, which complicates matters in a most interesting fashion. The young woman proves that she is the right wife for a sleuth, by tracking the principal crook and recovering her diamonds herself. The picture was produced by Wm. Robert Daly and is well acted by Fritzi Brunette, Earle Foxe, Edward J. Piel, Lillian Hayward, Frank Clark and Wm. Hutchinson.

THE CHAIN OF EVIDENCE (Biograph), Feb. 1.—With scenes pleasing in their rural atmosphere and some good character drawing of village types, this two-part drama has more to offer than the usual picture constructed around a plot presenting the danger of circumstantial evidence. The parts are well carried by Jack Drumeir, Jack Mulhall, Vola Smith and Claire Macdowell.

THE ROUGH NECK (Essanay), Feb. 1.—This two-reel photoplay is a well constructed story of a young fellow who lifts himself above the sordid environment of his early life and makes a great sacrifice for the woman he loves. Matters come out right at the final situation. Harry Beaumont Alton Goodrich and Ernest Maupain have the leading roles. Miss Goodrich is somewhat inexperienced but is pretty and earnest. Messrs. Beaumont and Maupain act with their customary skill.

THE MOTH AND THE STAR (No. 11 of the "Stingaree" Series) (Kalem), Feb. 2.—The instalment opens with "Stingaree" in jail, shows his escape, his attending a concert at which Ethel sings, and closes with him safely behind the bars again. Such a series of adventures results in plenty of action and gives True Boardman, Paul C. Hurst, Marin Sais, Edward Clisbee, Thomas Langham, Frank Jonasson and Ollie Kirkby excellent opportunities for acting. The picture is in two reels.

A MODERN PAUL (Lubin), Feb. 3.—The subject of this three-reel drama is the application of Christ's teachings to daily life. The leading character in Julian Louis Lamothe's work is an evangelist who goes among the fallen and preaches to them and helps them in every possible way. The evangelist is also a healer and gives a demonstration of his power when the child of a dance hall woman is badly hurt. Several Biblical tableaux are used to illustrate the story. The production reflects credit upon Melvin Mayo, but his make-up as the evangelist fails to be impressive owing to a badly-fitting wig. The picture is very well acted.

BILL PETERS' FIGHT (Vitagraph), Feb. 5.—This three-part subject, which was reviewed in the issue of Jan. 22, is a story of the west, of the desert. It will make good entertainment. At the head of the cast are William Duncan and Mary Anderson. Rollin Sturgeon is the producer.

THE CRIME OF CIRCUMSTANCE (Knickerbocker), Feb. 4.—There is a strong, well worked out plot in this three-reel Star Feature photoplay, in which Louis J. Cody has the leading character. It is written as a plea against convicting a man upon circumstantial evidence and the author presents his theme with a great deal of force. The production and the acting of the cast are of excellent quality.

THE PRIMITIVE STRAIN (Essanay), Feb. 5.—The striking contrast of characters in this three-reel drama is one of its best features. The scenes are laid in the North, a minister, a saloonkeeper and a dance hall girl who turns out to be the minister's sister, form a strong dramatic trio, and are ably acted by Edward Arnold, Jack Meredith and Nell Craig. The situations are powerful and the climax seems the only answer to the author's problem.

Fox Film Corporation.

THE RULING PASSION (Jan. 31).—A five-reel picture of India. The story will hold interest; but it is neither novel nor brilliant. The direction and most of the acting put grace and beauty in many scenes. Claire Whitney plays an European woman in the East, wife of a British officer. William Shay plays an Indian prince endowed with hypnotic ability. He gets the white woman into his power; but once in his harem she rebels and in a rage he has her shoulders stripped and lashed—hardly a good scene for the South, though we don't see the strokes. It seemed, as a whole, to take pretty well at the Academy of Music in New York.

Metro Pictures Corporation

MAN AND HIS SOUL (Quality), Jan. 31.—Although the moral of this picture is made very plain, it is not allowed to overshadow the story, which is frequently dramatic and well told, under the direction of John W. Noble, with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in the leading roles. The principal character is called John Conscience, a man who dares to put Christian teachings into practice. The picture closes with some stirring scenes of a factory fire.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 57 (Mutual), Feb. 3.—Among the interesting items of this number are Harvard's crack Hockey team in action, the burning of the absinthe crop in France, Truckee, Cal., almost buried in snow, "Old Ironsides" at Boston to be saved from destruction by fund raised by school children, and the opening of the Portola Cafe ice rink at San Francisco.

FICKLE MADGE (Vogue), Feb. 6.—An indifferent sort of farce comedy, neither very good nor very bad, in which Madge discovers that she likes the paperhanger better than her first love. A good deal of slapstick business exists in the picture.

BOOMING THE BOXING BUSINESS (Falstaff), Feb. 8.—An amusing farce comedy in which a couple of men conspire to attract pupils for their boxing academy. This comedy has been very well handled and will be found very acceptable.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 21, "A Trip Through Duluth, Minn." (Gaumont), Feb. 6.—Showing a panoramic view of Duluth, and also the iron mines of Hibbing, Minn., where hydraulic lifts and steam shovels convey ore from mines to flat cars. These carloads of ore are then taken to the harbor and dropped into track hoppers which precipitate the ore into the holds of the Great Lake steamers. On the same reel with "Keeping Up With the Joneses."

KEEPING UP WITH THE JONESES (Gaumont), Feb. 6.—In this number Pa McGinis tries his pen hand but finds it impossible to create anything that censorship does not "can." On the same reel with the above.

SNOW STORM AND SUNSHINE (Falstaff), Feb. 10.—A comedy number, relying more on pictorial effects than plot. Two tramps witness a young man taking a bath amid snow and ice. This is the best feature; it has been done before, but is astonishing and unusual. The contrasting scenes are taken in the South. A fairly strong novelty.

PADDY'S POLITICAL DREAM (Vogue), Feb. 10.—A hodcarrier dreams that he has become a political boss, collecting graft from saloonkeepers, poor widows and others. The action seemed jerky and somewhat disconnected, though some of the scenes are quite interesting.

JERRY'S MILLIONS (Cub), Feb. 11.—This farce comedy will be found very amusing to the majority of audiences. Jerry arrived at the point of expulsion from his boarding house on account of non-payment of rent, receives notice that he is about to become the possessor of a fortune amounting to three millions of dollars. The picture's climax depicts the arrival of a telegram stating that he is the wrong Jerry, and that the right Jerry has been found.

BILLY VAN DEUSEN AND THE VAMPIRE (Beauty), Feb. 13.—John Steppling and John Sheehan appear in this smart comedy as the "Bon Ton Bromides." They become rivals over a girl, whose lover poses as a professional vampire and shows them up as common flirts. This is unusually well presented and contains some amusing situations.

IGORROTES, CROCODILES AND A HAT BOX (Vogue), Feb. 13.—An eccentric comedy number, featuring Paddy McGuire, Priscilla Dean and others. Beach and bath house scenes are shown. The one-piece bathing costumes worn by the women and still scantier attire of the Igorrotes gives a breezy character to the production, though there is no actual vulgarity in the action.

RUTH'S REMARKABLE RECEPTION (Falstaff), Feb. 15.—A bachelor girl of charitable heart gives a party to a large number of children from a settlement house. They proceed to have a high time, breaking statuary, getting into the flour and the like. The subject is one that will probably appeal to children, though it leans a little too strongly toward the mischievous.

ELLA WANTED TO ELOPE (Beauty), Feb. 16.—No matter how amusing this picture might be to the mature mind, it could not be recommended for a program to be presented before young people. Ella, filled with the romantic idea of eloping with a real man, is easily persuaded to run away with her mother's lawyer, who has previously conspired with the girl's mother in order to cure her of this foolish idea. The lawyer leaves the girl alone over night at the hotel and in the morning the mother comes for her. The girl's lover has also been on hand to have the lawyer arrested.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

THE SOUL'S CYCLE (Mutual Masterpicture de Luxe—Centaur, No. 7), Feb. 12.—A production in five reels, made at the Horsley studios. This picture is rather tiresome because of its containing an ancient and a modern version of the same story, a story which, although it is based on a conceivable idea, does not carry sufficient interest in its outline or incident. The first part of the picture contains many beautiful exterior scenes, and a commendable attempt at the artistic. Margaret Gibson in the feminine lead handles a role that would require the services of a competent teacher of classic pantomime dancing to enable anyone to do it full justice. The production is at the same time a move in the right direction, and gives evidence of attention paid to the old adage, "Hitch your wagon to a star."

THE MODERN SPHINX (American), Feb. 15.—A very attractive three-reel offering, featuring Winifred Greenwood and Edward Coxen in what is called a "love story of the ages." The Egyptian settings at the beginning are artistic, and in fact the settings and costuming all through are exceptionally pleasing. The photography is of the best and the story one of an engrossing sort. It pictures a young Egyptian girl whose father puts her to sleep for 3,000 years until her cold, scheming nature is redeemed by the power of love. This contains imagination and feeling. A strong offering.

OUTWITTED (Thanhouser), Feb. 16.—A three-reel production, written by Lloyd Lonergan. The Thanhouser dog, which has appeared so often in pictures, is featured in this. He twice saves his master from disgrace in handling the company's money, and exhibits a well-trained canine intelligence of great appeal. The story is well-constructed, of simple elements, and is one that will be enjoyed by old and young.

WHEN THE LIGHT CAME (Mustang), Feb. 18.—An excellent three-part western production featuring Anna Little, Jack Richardson, and Frank Borzage. An interesting story of a young woman who becomes entangled with an actor who is on a vacation in the west. The story is worked out nicely, and is not guilty of unclean suggestion. The matter of the girl being lured to the east on a pretense that her singing will make her a fortune, is merely the outcome of a rivalry between two men for the hand of the girl.

SILAS MARNER (Mutual Masterpicture de Luxe—Thanhouser—No. 70), Feb. 19.—This seven-part adaptation of Silas Marner arranged for the screen by Philip Lonergan and made at the Thanhouser studios, is an especially commendable one. The picture follows the story remarkably well, the detail has been carefully attended to, and as a visualization of George Elliot's novel can be relied upon by exhibitors and educators as being authentic and entirely worth while. Frederick Warde plays the role of Silas Marner, doing an excellent piece of work.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

THE RAGAMUFFIN (Lasky), Jan. 20.—An entertaining drama by William C. DeMille, in which Blanche Sweet plays the title role. The story is a trifle conventional, but profits by a most artistic production, capable acting and effective human touches in the presentation of the scenes. Miss Sweet, as a girl rescued from the life of a thief, is supported by Tom Forman, Minnette Barrett and Mrs. Lewis McCord.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

NEW YORK (Gold Rooster Play), Feb. 4.—This play marks the initial contribution of A. H. Woods to the Pathe Gold Rooster Program. The play, which is a Broadway Success by William Hurlbut, makes a splendid screen production. It is a daring production, and in its first two reels rather shocking to the ordinary mind. Its last three reels bring with them a moral balance and the splendid screen personality of Florence Reed. Others of the act are Fania Marinoff, John Miltren, Forrest Winant and Jessie Ralph.

THE RED CIRCLE, NO. 8 (Balboa), Feb. 5. "Peace at Any Price" proves to be an interesting episode with a grain of comedy in its make-up. June meets two newly-married friends who are having a dispute over the feathers on the bride's hat. The husband, who belongs to the society for the protection of birds, objects to the plumage used as a hat decoration. This incident takes place on the seashore, and while the bride, leaving her parasol and hat on the sand goes to seek her angered husband, June, under the influence of the "Red Circle," buries the offending hat in the sand. The hunt for the "Red Circle" girl continues with her help.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE NEWS, NO. 8, 1916 (Pathe), June 26.—Interesting items of this issue show a visit paid by a number of Episcopal ministers to Sing Sing, 3,000 horses from Massachusetts to be shipped to France for use in the army, scenes of ice yachting, and also illustrations of the barefoot dancing that has become a fad in certain social circles throughout the country.

MOVEMENTS THE EYE MISSES (Photocolor), Jan. 31.—Another interesting and instructive treatise on the parts played by the various muscles of arms, legs, and back in walking, running, climbing the rope, leaping the bar, climbing a rope ladder, etc. A remarkable illustration made possible by the use of a rapid camera. On the same reel with "Glimpses of Java."

GLIMPSES OF JAVA (Globe), Jan. 31.—Showing its people, costumes and habits. An interesting study of a valuable possession of Holland. On the same reel with "Movements the Eye Misses."

LUKE, THE CANDY CUT-UP (Phunphilms), Feb. 2.—An exceedingly amusing slapstick farce comedy, in which Luke makes havoc in the candy kitchen. A considerable amount of taffy, caramels, flour, pulverized sugar, etc., is utilized in the making of the comedy.

Signal Film Corporation.

THE GIRL AND THE GAME, NO. 7, Feb. 7.—This chapter of the serial, "The Girl and the Game," is not quite as praiseworthy as some of the earlier chapters have been. There is evidence of forced circumstances in the development of the story, especially where the pursuers of Helen for the purpose of gaining possession of certain papers belonging to Rhineland, board the train and chloroform her. This is all too easily accomplished to be impressive.

Triangle Film Corporation.

HE DID AND HE DIDN'T (Keystone), Jan. 30.—Fatty and Mabel in new and exciting adventures. This lively team have never had a better vehicle for their antics.

ACQUITTED (Fine Arts), Feb. 6.—A very strong story of a noble husband and father driven, by injustice and force of circumstances, to a desperate sacrifice, one which carries him to the edge of death, from which he is relieved by the invisible hand of destiny and restored to deserved happiness.

HIS PICTURE IN THE PAPERS (Fine Arts), Feb. 13.—One of the most popular stories of its kind yet shown on the screen. Douglas Fairbanks, in the leading part, excels any impersonation hitherto attempted.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 5 (Universal), Feb. 2.—Chief in interest in this number are scenes taken on President Wilson's trip, views being shown in New York and Pittsburgh. The peace pilgrims in Europe are also pictured and there are other entertaining features.

WHEN THE LOSER WON (Nestor), Feb. 14.—A comedy number, by Warren and Mae Frost, featuring Betty Compson, Eddie Lyons, Ethel Lynn and Lee Moran. The guests at the house party try to make the young married couple jealous, but the tables are turned on them at the masquerade ball. A good light subject.

CINDERS (Imp), Feb. 15.—Edith Roberts appears in this number as a girl waif, who is adopted by an elderly man. She shocks his callers and later, when the old fellow pretends to die, supersedes his relatives in his affections. The plot, while not entirely new, has a clever twist in it. The number is pleasing.

AS FATE DECIDES (Laemmle), Feb. 16.—A new version of a familiar plot, in which an escaped convict, returning home to find his wife in love with another, is shot and killed by a gun on which an inventor is working. There is a touch of the dramatic in the main situation and the picture is quite well presented. Rupert Julian, Elsie Jane Wilson and others are in the cast.

FLIVVER'S DILEMMA (Nestor), Feb. 18.—This features the English comedian, Chas. Evans, in an amusing number. His father and the curate find him entertaining half a dozen girls in his apartments. He flees and returns only to discover that his visitors have fallen victims to the feminine charmers. Well handled and quite laughable in numerous places.

UNCLE SAM AT WORK, NO. 9, "Bureau of Weights and Measures" (Powers), Feb. 19.—This number is strong in educational value. In fact it would be hard to collect a more enlightening and instructive series of views than these taken in the bureau of weights and measures at Washington, D. C. Everything in it is worth seeing and remembering.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials.

HIS MAJESTY, DICK TURPIN (Bison), Feb. 12.—A two-reel offering of the romantic type, featuring Francis Ford, Grace Cunard and Jack Holt. The story is entertaining, though not staged with any great care. Francis Ford plays the part of a young prince who masquerades as a bandit and terrorizes the countryside. He is finally rounded up after an exciting chase. The death of the old king comes at a cruel moment, making the prince king. The story is worthy of a more artistic presentation in some respects.

FIRING THE BUTLER, OR THE BUTLER'S FIRE (L-KO), Feb. 13.—A two-reel farce comedy, featuring Dave Morris, Gertrude Selby, Reggie Morris and others. This is well constructed and enjoyable throughout. The home settings are particularly attractive and the low comedy free from offense, though the kissing scene seemed inappropriate considering the difference in make-up of the two characters. The plot itself is clever and a step ahead of this company.

THE SPHINX (Red Feather), Feb. 14.—A five-reel number, featuring Herbert Kelcey and Effie Shannon, two of the best known legitimate actors. They are assisted by three interesting juveniles, Charles Compton, Louise Huff and Beatrice Noys. The production is a comedy drama of the better type, well-constructed and artistically handled throughout. It pictures the way in which a father and son fall desperately in love with an actress known as the Sphinx. She accepts the father and rejects the son. Charles Compton does a good piece of work in depicting the mental agony of the youth whose love affair goes so hard with him. In the end, through the sympathetic understanding of the actress, he returns to his own love. The production is an enjoyable one.

THE HARBOR TRANSPORTATION TRUST (Universal Special Feature), Feb. 14.—No. 10 of the "Graft" series. This number, in which Bruce and Tom Larnigan join forces in fighting the shipping trust, makes another exciting instalment. Dorothy and Kitty are made prisoners in the basement of an animal store, and have an unexpected visit from some young lions. Tom is shanghaied and Bruce almost meets death in his work of rescuing the girls. Fisher, head of the trust, is killed in the lions' den. A strong production of the sensational type.

ELEVATING FATHER (L-KO), Feb. 16.—A two-reel knockabout comedy, featuring Louise Orth, Roy Griffith and Dan Russell. The first reel does not develop much plot. The second is better and contains some amusing moments. On the whole this is only fairly strong. The elevator scenes make the best feature.

IN THE NIGHT (Victor), Feb. 17.—A three-reel subject, by Helmar Bergman, with Harry C. Myers, Rosemary Theby and L. L. Hall in the cast. There is a fine unity of action in this, all of the scenes being taken in a single night. The story is accordingly well knit and continuous. The plot concerns a busy, but trusting, husband who enters his home to find his wife about to elope with another. The other man is hiding behind some curtains and there is a thief behind an adjoining one. The husband fires into the curtains, hits the would-be home-wrecker, and a good dramatic situation results. This is an absorbing story throughout, well-constructed, well-acted and convincing.

PLOT AND COUNTERPLOT (Imp), Feb. 18.—A two-reel offering, featuring Matt Moore, Jane Gail and Howard Crampton. It is an office yarn and pictures the way in which a crooked broker tries to get his clerk in trouble because he will not stand for his methods. He has the clerk imprisoned for forgery, but the girl in the office succeeds in getting her lover out. This is hardly strong enough to be called drama, but it makes an entertaining production of a lighter sort.

A RECOILING VENGEANCE (Bison), Feb. 19.—A three-reel number, by Edward Ferguson, featuring Edward Hearn, Rositta Marstini, Betty Schade and others. The story is one of intrigue in India. Sufficient care has been taken with the costuming and settings to give a pleasing atmosphere. The story itself is unevenly developed, containing much that is enjoyable and certain scenes that are merely ordinary. The escape of Helene from the harem, aided by Martha, a former opera singer, is an entertaining feature. Wild animals are employed in the latter part. Loosely constructed, but still quite strong.

Bluebird Photoplays.

SECRET LOVE (Jan. 31).—Helen Ware gives an excellent characterization of an English pit girl in this six-part adaptation of Frances Hodgson Burnett's "That Lass O'Lowries." The picture was well staged and ably directed by Robert Leonard, who had a first rate company at his disposal, including Harry Carey, Ella Hall and Jack Curtis. "Secret Love" is a meritorious offering.

UNDINE (Feb. 7).—A five-part adaptation of the fairy story of the same name. Much attention has been given by Director Otto to the nymphs who disport on shore and in the waters. There are many charming scenes finely photographed. A review will be found in another column.

V-L-S-E, Inc.

THE CROWN PRINCE'S DOUBLE (Vitagraph), Feb. 7.—In this pleasing romance, Maurice Costello plays the crown prince of a mythical European kingdom, also an American clerk, who happens to be his physical double. The first reel contains some attractively staged court scenes, after which the action shifts to America. Mr. Costello is ably supported by Norma Talmadge, Anna Laughlin, Thomas Mills and Anders Randolph. The picture makes consistently good entertainment of a wholesome character.

THE WRITING ON THE WALL (Vitagraph), Feb. 14.—The strong emotional acting of Virginia Pearson and Joseph Kilgour is of great value to an interesting domestic drama, written by William J. Hulburt and given a fine production by Tefft Johnson. For a stirring climax there is a thoroughly realistic fire in a tenement building. Naomi Childers and Robert Gaillard are important members of an excellent cast.

World Film Corporation.

THE WOMAN IN 47 (Equitable-Frohman), Feb. 7.—This five-part feature opens with prettily staged scenes representing a picturesque part of Italy where the principal characters are introduced. The action soon shifts to America, and we follow with interest the adventures of an Italian girl, played by Alice Brady. Well acted and carefully staged this production will make a safe offering.

THE YELLOW PASSPORT (Shubert), Feb. 7.—Clara Kimball Young has opportunities for effective emotional acting in this story of Russian life. She plays a Russian Jewess, who rather than leave Kiev, remains there under the sanction of a permit issued to unfortunate women. The picture has many dramatic moments and Edwin August's production is adequate.

Miscellaneous.

THE LOTTERY MAN (F. Ray Comstock), State Rights, February.—A fairly amusing version of the popular stage comedy of the same name, in which Cyril Scott was starred. In the photoplay, Thurlow Bergan plays the character of Jack Wright with considerable spirit, and he is given adequate support by Elsie Esmond, Carolyn Lee and others. The picture should appeal to audiences not over particular about the artistic qualities of a production.

BLANCHE SWEET IN "THE BLACKLIST."

The Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company has just completed an elaborate feature production on the subject of capital and labor. The play is entitled "The Blacklist," suggested by the system under which certain big industrial firms exercise an unfair advantage over discharged employees by interchanging information between the companies, and was written by Marion Fairfax and William C. De Mille.

The production was directed by William C. De Mille, who also directed Blanche Sweet in her recent success, "The Ragamuffin." Much of the material used in "The Blacklist" as a photoplay was obtained by Marion Fairfax at first hand.

Just as the light of publicity in newspapers and magazines exposed the innermost workings of the capital and labor organizations in Colorado during the strike, "The Blacklist," as a result of Marion Fairfax's exceptional information and investigation, will go a step further in exposing the cruel misunderstandings which existed at that time and which in various forms still exist in different parts of the country.

There will be practically reproduced on the screen the series of frightful incidents which led up to and included the massacre of innocent women and children in the camps of the striking miners in the green hills of Colorado.

In support of Miss Sweet, the cast includes Charles Clary, Ernest Joy and Billy Elmer.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"POLITENESS PAYS" (Essanay).

On the theme of the poor young man wedding the heiress, "Politeness Pays," Essanay three-reeler, is constructed. But it departs from this track to give the lad a fortune of his own and to guess how he and the young lady of wealth will make out. Of course he marries her in spite of his wealth and her own.

The daughter of the town's wealthy citizen decided to do charitable work. This leads her to the slums and she is insulted frequently by gangsters. The same gang torments an old recluse, "Santa Claus."

Scene from "Politeness Pays" (Essanay).

After the girl accidently steps into the home of the young man and sees him ill and cold, they become great friends, and it is he who protects her from the hoodlums. That he protected the recluse also was incidental, but when the gang killed the old man it was discovered that he owned most of the tenement buildings in that side of the town and had left everything to the boy who was polite to him. There is more action than is usually crammed into three reels. John Junior is the juvenile lead.

KLEINE'S WATSON COMEDIES PROVE GENUINE INNOVATION.

"The Mishaps of Musty Suffer," a series of ten one-reel comedies, featuring Harry Watson, Jr., of Bickel & Watson, which George Kleine is offering a list of better class theaters for exclusive advance of release date showings, has more than lived up to the expectations of the manufacturer. Already a considerable number of the most representative houses in America are playing the series, the list including the Strand and Biltmore, New York; the Scollay Square and Gordon Olympia, of Boston; Kunsky's circuit of beautiful Detroit houses; Alfred Hamburgher's Chicago circuit; the Strand, at Hartford, Conn; the Tabor Grand, at Denver, and many others.

Critics everywhere hail the series as most novel and unusual comedies, an opinion apparently well attested by the sudden increase in bookings and the numerous letters received at the Kleine offices lately from pleased exhibitors.

Harry Watson has developed a brand new style of fun-making, according to the critics, which seriously challenges the Chaplin laurels. The films themselves are noteworthy examples of a very evident determination on the part of George Kleine to insinuate a new idea into the manufacture of one-reel comedies, producing them on an elaborate scale and revolutionizing in many ways all former notions of the humble one-reeler. The result has been the completion of material in one-reel form offered by the best picture theaters in the country as a feature attraction. They have been in course of making since the second week of last June, which fact should furnish sufficient evidence of their extraordinary character if proof were needed.

"We are offering these subjects for preliminary showing to a few of the big houses," said George Kleine. "They represent a great deal of work on the part of the entire staff, not to mention a costly outlay of money. In a way, they are experimental, and will demonstrate just how far the single reel subject can go. I am much gratified at the splendid showing in such theaters as the Strand, Scollay Square and Tabor Grand, where audiences are apt to be coldly skeptical and ultra-critical in matters of comedies bordering on the slap-stick. Also I am glad to say that these Watson pictures are the only comedies of their kind that ever played so high a class of houses. That's pretty good evidence that we were right in believing the public likes slap-stick when they can get it without vulgarity."

"THE SHRINE OF HAPPINESS" BEAUTIFULLY COLORED BY PATHE.

"The Shrine of Happiness," the Pathe release for February 18, is the second Gold Rooster play to have been colored, "The Beloved Vagabond" having been the first. Judging from the reception which the latter received, "The Shrine of Happiness" will attract widespread attention. The play was produced in Southern California by Balboa, and the locations chosen were so beautiful as to lend themselves particularly well to Pathecolor. Jackie Saunders is featured in the kind of a part which she has always preferred—that of an unsophisticated, ingenuous country girl.

PRESIDENT COMPLIMENTS SELIG-TRIBUNE.

President Woodrow Wilson has personally complimented the Selig-Tribune, the news film issued twice weekly by the Selig Polyscope Company. On Tuesday morning, February 1, just before the President and Mrs. Wilson left Chicago, Jack Wheeler, editor-in-chief of the Selig-Tribune, was granted an exclusive interview by the President. Mr. Wheeler has known President Wilson for years and has accompanied him on past tours. They chatted together for five minutes while not another news writer or cameraman was permitted to intrude.

President Wilson mentioned the enterprise of the Selig-Tribune and complimented the attractiveness and worth of such an educational film.

"Mr. President," said Editor Wheeler, "after your present tour is over The Selig-Tribune will present you with a complete film showing every detail of your present journey." The President and Mrs. Wilson both expressed their thanks and spoke of the value of such a gift.

Jack Wheeler.

A special cameraman representing the Selig-Tribune accompanied President Wilson on his recent tour. This cameraman was Lewis J. Simons and his work was praised by President Wilson to Editor Wheeler.

The Selig-Tribune filmed thousands of feet of exclusive film of President and Mrs. Wilson, and of scenes in connection with their recent tour of the Middle Western States.

"THE BIG BROTHER" (Knickerbocker).

The Knickerbocker Star Features offers an unusual release for February 11 in its Three-Part Drama, "The Big Brother," in which Henry King is to be featured. The story united the East and the West; Virginia and a distant Island kingdom in the Pacific. The "Big Brother" is a U. S. Consul, whose younger brother at home is his rival in love. A vacation trip home for the "Big Brother" ends tragically for him. Troubles develop for the Big Brother, who permits the younger brother to accompany him to his Island Consulate. The girl left at home, engaged to the younger brother, has her heart struggle as she thinks only of the "Big" brother, whom she loves.

On the Island, the brothers have their increasing problems; with the younger boy, it is a case of love affairs with the native girls. During a crisis, when the younger brother is about to marry a native, the big brother is subjected to a severe temptation; to let the boy marry the native, clears his way to the girl left behind. The brother proves his mettle, marries the native himself, sends the young brother home. The deed of brotherly devotion proves no tragedy, and all ends with gain for the big brother. Supporting Henry King is Margarette Nichols, a woman of strong personality and convincing dramatic ability. The younger brother is taken by Eddy Peters, who does excellent work.

"THE DEAD ALIVE" (Gaumont).

Miss Marguerite Courtot, a star in Gaumont Mutual Masterpictures, now playing under the direction of Henry J. Vernot, has added another success to her long list of screen triumphs through her unusually keen, clear-minded delineation of dual roles in the five-reel feature, "The Dead Alive," just completed as a Mutual release of February 17. Miss Courtot plays twin sisters in the story, and makes each character a distinct personality. As one of the sisters, the pretty star is called upon to enact scenes on the stage as a member of the chorus of a musical comedy, also to suffer as the subject of a wicked hypnotist's art. As the other sister, she appears as a young girl madly in love with a wealthy young mother, who was buried at Los Angeles on January 28th.

man. Through her marriage to him with the sudden aquisition of great riches, she loses her head for a while.

Two big court room scenes, one five years later than the first, employed the services of over a hundred extra people in Jacksonville, Florida, recently, where the five-reel Masterpicture "I Accuse," is being made. The feature is a Gaumont production under the direction of William F. Haddock.

The work of the extra people required more than the usual duties of the filler-in, for a great many of the same people were used in both court room scenes. The story and trial are laid in the small village, where the same people would naturally be present on both occasions. Each extra was required to appear with two distinct styles of dress, one for each period.

The make-ups, many of them tellingly clever, promise to cause favorable comment when "I Accuse" is released February 24. Alexander Gaden and Helen Marten play the two leads, with Charles A. Travis appearing in a strong dramatic character role.

"A LAW UNTO HIMSELF" (Horsley).

Crane Wilbur's second appearance in a five-reel Mutual Masterpicture de luxe edition, is scheduled for February 28 when "A Law Unto Himself," a David Horsley production, will be released.

The story of this picture is the work of Miss Lillian V. Brockwell and is laid in the West. The central figures are Allan Dwight, a sheriff and Jean Belleau, a French Surveyor, whose resemblance is so close that one can hardly be distinguished from the other. The two characters are portrayed by Crane Wilbur, who gives further evidence of his rare versatility by interpreting the two distinct types with an understanding that brings out his work as one of the outstanding features of the production.

While essentially highly dramatic, the play has a fine blending of pathos and quaint humor and the interest is well sustained throughout.

A production well in keeping with the locale has been given the story and the scenes of the Western villages, and in all their uniqueness, reflect an expenditure that adds to the entertainment of the viewer.

In the cast besides Mr. Wilbur are Carl von Schiller, Louis Durham, E. W. Harris, Francis Raymond, Steve Murphy and George Clare, Jr. The production was made under the direction of Robert B. Broadwell, who has displayed uncommon ability in staging film plays by his efforts in the last three Crane Wilbur releases.

SELIG PRODUCTIONS UNDER WAY.

A rollicking single-reel comedy from the pen of James Oliver Curwood, entitled "The Beauty Hunters," is now in course of production at the Selig Zoo studios. James Bradbury, Martha Mattox and Cecil Holland all have exceptional opportunities. William Robert Daly is the producer.

Producer T. N. Heffron is making extensive preparations for the forthcoming production of Hallie Erminie Rives' remarkable story of Southern life, "The Valiants of Virginia." The wonderful book has been picturized in five reels, and an all-star cast has been selected.

Plans are progressing for the production of the Selig spectacular drama, "The Crisis." Producer Colin Campbell is knee deep in Civil War atmosphere. Costume prints and books dealing with the days of '61 are being carefully studied to insure absolute correctness in every detail.

Al Green's friends at the Selig Pacific Coast studios sent many large and beautiful floral tributes to the funeral of his

"Bullets and Brown Eyes"

William Desmond Does Some Daring Stunts in New Triangle-Ince Play Starring Bessie Barriscale.

WILLIAM DESMOND, who was Billie Burke's leading man in her first film play, "Peggy," made by Thomas H. Ince for the Triangle, has developed into a stunt performer in his newest role, Prince Carl in "Bullets and Brown Eyes," with Bessie Barriscale. In many of the scenes Desmond leads a company of cavalry against a squad of motorcycle militia. Both horsemen and cyclists made the thrilling falls in which they are expert, but it remained for Desmond to outdo them all in reckless daring. Known always as a courageous rider, he surprised the entire Inceville colony when he leaped from the ground to the back of a horse, knocked the rider from the saddle and rode away out of range of a volley of shots.

Scene from "Bullets and Brown Eyes" (Triangle-Kay-Bee).

All this will be shown in the new Ince-Triangle play. Another feat that possibly saved his star from serious injury was not in the scenario and will not be preserved on film. Through a mistake Miss Barriscale had mounted a horse that has a considerable reputation as a bucker and for becoming unmanageable at times. Desmond discovered Miss Barriscale's error and started in pursuit. The young woman cleverly kept her seat in the saddle until Desmond reined alongside and ended her unpleasant ride by a clever twist of the bucker's bridle.

"Bullets and Brown Eyes" was really named by the star. That was her suggestion after reading the scenario. J. G. Hawks, the author, has placed his story in the mythical kingdoms of Bothalia and Marsow and tells of the romantic quest of the reckless prince of one for the beautiful countess of the other. Ince has assigned the principal parts to Wyndham Standing, J. J. Dowling, J. Barney Sherry and Roy Laidlaw.

PRISON REFORM MOVEMENT IN PICTURES.

Harley Knoles, along with Lionel Belmore, who is the director in the big feature "To Him That Hath," Robert Warwick and other members of the Premo Company recently journeyed to Sing Sing and made some of the most intimate prison studies which have ever been taken.

They went into corridors, in the cells, took the men at work, at mess, took close-ups of "lifers," murderers, burglars, went into the death house—all this was to bring out a point of the story "To Him That Hath," which treats the prison reform question in an unprejudiced manner.

"To Him That Hath" serves as a vehicle for the eminent star, Robert Warwick, who, as in few other pictures of his career, has had the opportunity given him here to depict such varied emotions which carry him from the tremendously wealthy man to the convict in disgrace. In the cast supporting Mr. Warwick is included Miss Anna Neilson.

"HAUNTS FOR RENT" (Bray-Gilbert).

With all the charm of fantasy and fairy tale visualized in living form on the screen, "Haunts for Rent" follows "Inbad the Sailor" as the second release of Bray-Gilbert Films, through the Paramount Pictures Corporation, February 9.

L. M. Glackens, the animated cartoonist, who is connected with Mr. Bray in the production of his cartoon comedies, made the drawings in connection with this combination of penned and real character.

The story deals with two gentlemen, not colored—born black—who love the same girl. She agrees to marry the one who shows the fewest ill-effects after a night in the haunted chamber of a road house. Each engages the aid of a spirit expert in frightening the other.

In the end, after many an adventure, Jim wins Lilly and Sam is left to his fate of batchelordom.

OCEAN FILM COMPLETES "DRIFTWOOD," AND GOLDBURG WILL VISIT EXCHANGE MEN.

The third release of the Ocean Film Corporation, "Driftwood, or The Wrong Way," adapted from the stage play of the same name, written by Owen Davis, has been completed by Marshall Farnum, one of the producing directors of that company. At the first running of the picture, after the print of all the takes were assembled in consecutive scenes and before the final cutting, a favored few were admitted to view the production, and it was pronounced to be one of the most entrancing and interesting features ever made.

"Driftwood" follows the releasing of the second production of the Ocean Film Corporation, entitled "The Fortunate Youth," adapted from the popular novel written by William J. Locke. "The Fortunate Youth" is to be released February 7. "Driftwood" will be released February 15.

Following out the recently announced policy of the Ocean Film Corporation of disposing of its productions in certain territory on a percentage basis and in other territory on a state rights basis, Mr. Jesse J. Goldburg, vice-president and general manager of that company, will leave next week, visiting the principal independent exchanges in every state of the Union, disposing of "Life Without Soul," "The Fortunate Youth" and "Driftwood," the three feature releases of that company. Contracts have already been entered into for certain territories; the productions will be sold outright on a state rights basis in the remaining states.

Mr. Goldburg's trip, it is expected, will consume about six weeks, and upon his return, dependent upon his report of conditions throughout the country, the policy of the Ocean Film Corporation with respect to the character of future releases will be definitely determined.

"THE WRONG DOOR" (Bluebird).

Carter De Haven, with his wife, Flora Parker De Haven, as his leading lady, will be the star in the Bluebird release for Feb. 21, under the caption of "The Wrong Door." Not only does Mr. De Haven enact the leading role, but he furnished the scenario and directed the production. The feature will be in five parts, and is promised to reveal a thrilling detective story of keen interest.

Flora Parker De Haven has been happily cast in the role of a musical comedy star, a line of work which brought her fame upon the stage. In her present screen-acting she is courted by a young millionaire steel operator (Mr. De Haven) and this attachment forms the principal thread of sentiment running through the action of "The Wrong Door."

The unraveling of a mystery that involved a job of safe-cracking by a band of yeggmen who successfully operated on the young millionaire's strong box constitutes the detective work involved in the film. Spirited scenes of a most sensational nature show a raid upon the secret den of the yeggman, with an attendant rough-and-tumble conflict that makes exciting photoplaying.

Other sensational incidents include the safe-cracking episode, the covert operations of the robbers in the steel plant itself, and there are pretty scenes of life upon the stage, behind the footlights and in the dressing rooms, that lend an added charm and will excite public interest in the sensational release.

Scene from "The Wrong Door" (Bluebird).

Carter De Haven has a role in "The Locked Door" that brings to light the many talents that made him a favorite in vaudeville and musical comedy, and revealing some hitherto undiscovered abilities as an athlete that will be a surprise to those who have known him only as a light comedian.

"THE BLACK ORCHID" (Selig).

"The Black Orchid" is a Selig multiple reel drama released through General Film Service on Monday, February 14th, and exploits an all-star cast, including Kathlyn Williams, Wheeler Oakman, Edith Johnson, Harry Lonsdale and Lillian Hayward.

"The Black Orchid" exploits British army life in India. There is a strong and unusual plot dealing with a charmer of men who applies her talents in a British army post. How finally her toying with love proves her undoing, is convincingly portrayed in this drama. There is a wild animal punch in this story, which will be found most unusual and most exciting.

Miss Kathryn Williams performs one of the best character roles in her career, and in the character of Viola Morton, she becomes a victim of her own plot, and a Royal Bengal tiger is the medium of revenge which justly comes to the woman who causes disaster and sorrow. There is a series of beautiful scenic backgrounds proper to the environment in which this drama is cast.

ADVANCE BOOKINGS ON "A FOOL'S PARADISE" BIG.

Impelled by the success of "Forbidden Fruit" as a box office attraction, the Merit Film Corporation, the exchange distributing Ivan Feature Productions in New York, reports a large number of bookings on "A Fool's Paradise," the new Ivan feature, in advance of its release. Prominent among the owners of circuits of theaters who have booked this feature in advance are the Marcus Loew and William Fox houses.

"CINDERS" (Universal).

"Cinders" is the title of a wonderfully clever one-reel comedy drama written and produced by Robert Hill with Edith Roberts in the leading role, very ably supported by William Courtleigh, Jr., which will be released shortly on the Universal program.

This picture gives Director Hill opportunities to show Miss Roberts, the new little leading lady of the Universal, and who, by the way, is now the Universal's youngest leading lady, to her best. Although in pictures but a comparatively short while, Miss Roberts has shown to good advantage in several wonderful photoplays produced by Director Hill, especially in "The Trail of the Wild Wolf" and her work in "Cinders" has convinced her director that the Universal made no mistake in signing this young lady to appear in her own company, making a specialty of one and two-reelers for the eastern studios.

"COOKING HIS GOOSE" (American).

Orral Humphrey is very fond of well roasted goose. This clever actor, who made a big name for himself in "The Diamond from the Sky," never loses an opportunity to enjoy a well prepared goose dinner—but he had a sore disappointment recently.

He appeared in a convulsing "Beauty" comedy directed by Nat Watt, entitled "Cooking His Goose," where he saw a rare opportunity to satisfy his keen appetite. It was necessary for the actual operation of cooking a goose to be performed in this play and Mr. Humphrey saw to it that a well fattened and prepared goose was supplied by the local butcher, and cooked purposely for the play. After he had completed his scenes, he immediately repaired to the improvised kitchen and dining room to devour the bird.

But he had been forestalled. Nat Watt had just completed the job, assisted by a number of his friends. Mr. Humphrey now says that the next goose used in a Watt-production will be chained to the table.

VIVID SCENES IN KLEINE'S "THE SCARLET ROAD."

Competent judges who viewed George Kleine's "The Scarlet Road," featuring Malcolm Duncan, Anna Q. Nilsson and Della Connor, pronounce it one of the best, if not the very best production of the big Bronx studio. There is no time lost in arousing interest—action begins with the first scene flashed on the screen, and there is no let-up until the final picture fades. The titular role in "The Scarlet Road" required an actor of great strength of character, remarkable poise, coupled with unusual dramatic ability, and Malcolm Duncan supplies all these requisites, and his achievement in this particular picture will stamp him as one of the best in the film world. His co-stars, Anna Q. Nilsson and Della Connor, are credited with adding much to the picture.

A New Year's Eve cabaret scene in a palatial Broadway hotel, requiring the services of more than three hundred men and women, is one of the features in "The Scarlet Road," and will certainly attract attention because of its accuracy and vividness in presenting the festivities that generally attend he ushering in of a New Year.

There are many other situations fully as dramatic as the above in "The Scarlet Road," adding to its power and fascination. It is scheduled for release February 16.

GERMAN WAR PICTURES WITH THE OFFICIAL STAMP.

The Kulee Features Company, which is handling the German war pictures known as "Germany on the Firing Line," says that of all the war pictures showing the progress of the struggle in Europe none has displayed the intimate view of the great conflict that is shown in the six thousand feet of pictures under the title mentioned. Kulee company also says that every foot of "Germany on the Firing Line" is authenticated by the German government, who have given with these pictures the vise of their official character by cards signed, sealed and stamped by the German General Staff. This mark of identification cannot be shown by any other war picture dealing with the German side of the war. Their pictures are not official, and in consequence, cannot have the official recognition that is given only to those films that were taken by the German Government itself.

The pictures have been shown so far outside of New York as Minneapolis and St. Paul, under the auspices of the Minneapolis Tribune; in Cleveland at the Colonial theater under the auspices of the Cleveland News; in Pittsburgh at the Pitt theater under the auspices of the Pittsburgh Press; in Baltmore in connection with the Baltimore News; in Newark, N. J., under the auspices of the Newark Star; in Buffalo under the auspices of the Buffalo Times; in Paterson, N. J., under the auspices of the Paterson News; in New Haven, Conn., under the auspices of the Courier; Bridgeport, Conn., under the auspices of the Post.

Any purchaser or exhibitor of a German war picture should insist on being shown the Kreigsausgabe or war cards. Without these, the films are not official, the Kulee Company says.

THE BIOGRAPH PROGRAM.

"The Indian," a spectacular three-reel drama, is the feature of the Biograph program for the week of February 28. The action of the piece shifts from Washington society to the government reservation, where the Indian makes his last stand against civilization's forces. The unusually strong story abounds in military scenes and is admirably interpreted by a brilliant cast.

One of the most remarkable Biograph Reissues is scheduled on this program. "The Burglar's Dilemma" is a striking presentation of the abuse of the police method known as "the third degree." Robert Harron plays the role of a burglar's tool who is trapped in a room with a dead body and subjected to a severe ordeal before the supposedly dead man comes to life. Henry Walthall is splendid as the craven who stands by and hears another accused of his "crime." Lionel Barrymore and Lillian Gish complete the unusual cast.

"What Happened to Peggy," the two reel Biograph, is a breezy romance centering about a girl who, on her way to meet her appointed husband, is caught in the police net spread for a daring adventuress. Vola Smith, Jose Ruben and Claire McDowell head the cast.

"A CORNER IN COTTON" (Metro).

Three distinct parts of the United States, in as many different directions, were used for the locales in the production of "A Corner in Cotton," a forthcoming Metro feature produced by the Quality Pictures Corporation. The first scenes were photographed in California, the interiors made in New York, and the final scenes made in and near Savannah, Georgia. Marguerite Snow, the charming Metro artist, has the stellar role in this production, and is supported by an all-star cast including Frank Bacon, Lester Cuneo, John J. Goldsworthy, William Clifford and Helen Dunbar.

"A Corner in Cotton" was produced under the direction of Fred J. Balshofer, one of the most capable producers in the country. Howard Truesdell cooperated in the direction. This production will mark an innovation in Metro's policy of releasing one five-reel feature every week. "A Corner in Cotton" will be a special release, and will be presented to the public for the first time the same week that "The Price of Malice" is shown.

TOPNOTCH MOTION PICTURES, INC.

In a great many quarters recently curiosity has persisted among exchange men and exhibitors concerning the Topnotch Motion Pictures, Inc., and numerous questions have been asked relative to the activities of this new company.

It will not be betraying a trade secret to mention that a picturization of Alexander Dumas' greatest play of human emotions, "Denise," will be the headliner of the first offering. A great many others that will be welcome because they are "different" will follow at regular intervals.

The Authors' Film Co,, Inc., 1432 Broadway, is the sole and exclusive agent and distributor for the Topnotch Motion Pictures, Inc.

THRILLER IN METRO'S "THE PRICE OF MALICE."

There are scores of big scenes in "The Price of Malice," the forthcoming Metro wonderplay in which Hamilton Revelle is starred and Barbara Tennant is featured, but perhaps the most spectacular will be the sinking of a large yacht after it crashes into an iceberg in the waters of the frozen north. The setting for making these scenes was off the coast of Labrador, where the entire company of Metro palyers were transported by special steamer.

WATSON, WELL AGAIN, RETURNS TO WORK.

Harry Watson of Bickel & Watson, featured in George Kleine's comedy de luxe, "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer," has returned to work and will be busy during the next few weeks completing this much talked about picture. Watson, six weeks ago, was seized with illness that necessitated a surgical operation. This took place in a Montreal hospital and since then the noted comedian has been recuperating at his parents' home near Montreal. He has entirely recovered and is as enthusiastic as ever over "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer," which he regards as the crowning achievement of his professional career.

ANCIENT BABYLON SHOWN IN "THE SOUL MARKET."

More than half a score of artists and experts were employed in the making of a Babylonian scene which will be one of the features in the forthcoming Metro feature, "The Soul Market." Mme. Petrova, the gifted Polish actress, is starred in this production, and others in the notable cast include Wilmuth Merkyl, Arthur Hoops, Gypsy O'Brien, Evelyn Brent, Fritz De Lint. It is being produced by Popular Plays and Players.

While the Bluebird Photoplay, "Undine," is being shown at the Moss & Brill theaters in Greater New York, Ida Schnall, the famous athlete and swimmer, who played the name-role for the photoplay, will appear as an added attraction, introduced by M. B. Haas. Following the display of the five-reeler, Miss Schnall will do an appealing little vaudeville "stunt," showing her dimensions in skin-tights and demonstrating the benefits of physical training, and pointing out the particular good that follows swimming when pursued as an exercise.

RELEASE DATE OF KLEINE-EDISON FEATURE CHANGED.

"The Martyrdom of Philip Strong," the remarkable Edison drama announced for release on the Kleine-Edison program February 9, has been changed. In its place the romantic drama "When Love Is King," recently completed by Edison, will be released February 9. "When Love Is King" features Carrol McComas and Richard Tucker.

NEW ONTARIO THEATER.

A company is being organized in London, Ontario, with a capitalization of $100,000 of local money, for the purpose of building a large moving picture theater on a site which has already been secured. The plans call for a seating capacity of 1,350 and there will be no balcony or gallery of any kind. Although the frontage will be 110 feet, no posts or pillars will be necessary. Two stores will be constructed on each side of the entrance to the building, which is to be erected at Dundas and Wellington streets, opposite the federal square.

John Nelson Booking for Mutual.

John Nelson, formerly manager of the Grand Opera house at Sudbury, Ontario, is now a member of the road force for the Mutual Film Corporation in North Ontario.

On Road for General Film.

C. Wilber, previously manager of the Picture Players Film Company, Toronto, a feature film exchange, is now on the road for the General Film Company. He is working out of Toronto. Mr. Sault, formerly with Kleine, is also now with the General Film Company's road staff.

E. A. Fenton to Distribute Triangle.

E. A. Fenton, of Montreal, has made arrangements to become the Canadian distributor for the Triangle. Branch offices are to be established in Toronto and other Canadian cities, it is understood.

Blue Birds Come.

An important event in the history of the moving picture business of Toronto was the first local visit of Mr. N. H. Spitzer, of New York, as special representative of Blue Bird Photo Plays, Inc., recently. Mr. Spitzer brought with him the first three features to be marketed by this company, namely, "Jeanne D'Or," in which Sarah Bernhardt appears in the leading role, "Secret Love," and "Undine." Exhibitors in the Toronto territory were invited to private views of the features which are to be sold through the branches of the Canadian Universal Film Company, Limited.

Among Managers in Ontario.

Ed. Butler, manager of the Griffin theater, Chatham, Ontario, has moved to Owen Sound, where he takes command of the theater on the Griffin circuit in that place. Mr. Hutchinson, of Toronto, replaces him at Chatham.

It is repotred that the manager of the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., Montreal, has just closed with the Imperial theater of this city, the largest and handsomest picture house in Canada, for two Paramount Pictures per week, for one year, at what is said to be the largest price ever paid for film service in the Dominion of Canada. The Imperial has a capacity of 2,000 and charges admission of 10c. and 25c. They are organizing an extensive Moving Picture Campaign on Paramount Pictures. Paramount Pictures will be shown in this house commencing February 13th, 1916.

Mr. H. Hackett has purchased the Cosmopolitan theater, one of the long established downtown houses of the city.

Mr. J. Hill has purchased the Queen's Palace, College street, from Mr. S. Gang.

The Regal theater, Bloor and St. Clarens avenue, has been closed temporarily, pending a new managerial arrangement.

Recall of Passed Films

Toronto Has Interesting Censor Case—Censors Passed Picture Two Months Ago—Member of Appeal Board Sees It in a Theater and Disliking a Scene, Orders It Cut Forthwith—Trying to Get Privilege Revoked.

By W. M. Gladish, Toronto Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

TORONTO, ONT.—An early instance of employment of a new privilege under the amended moving picture law of Ontario was seen recently by the manager of a Toronto theater when a member of the Theatrical Appeal Board ordered a further cut in the stabbing scene of the Fox "Carmen," after viewing the picture as a spectator in the theater. This particular picture had been passed by the censor board at least two months before and the photoplay had been seen by thousands of Toronto people in a dozen or more local houses. Yet, at this late date, a government official decided that further trimming of the film was necessary. The question has arisen as to whether the member of the Board of Appeal has the power to chop a film at any time—particularly after the censor board had formally approved the picture. One of the new clauses in the act governing the showing of moving pictures provides that the censors may recall any film at any time after it has been passed by them, but the members of the appeal board are not censors, it is pointed out, and have power to act only in case an exchange manager makes an appeal from a decision of the censors, it is argued.

The privilege of recall, as now provided, has already aroused Toronto film distributors to action. Hon. T. W. McGarry, the provincial treasurer, has already been interviewed on the subject and further efforts are to be made to have the objectionable amendment revoked at the earliest possible moment.

EXHIBITORS HELP RAISE FUND.

To assist the Toronto and York County Patriotic Fund Association to raise $2,000,000 in four days for the benefit of dependents of soldiers who have gone across the sea to fight, Mr. W. A. Bach, publicity manager of the Canadian Universal Film Company, Toronto, made arrangements for the showing of two slides and for the display of posters and banners in each of the local moving picture theaters without cost to the managers thereof. Practically every Toronto exhibitor permitted his house to be used in this way to help the campaign and a Boy Scout with a collection box stood at the entrance to each theater on the four nights. To relieve the theater managers of all trouble or inconvenience, the campaign decorations were delivered and collected afterward by representatives of the fund association. Thousands of people were reached in this way and the picture houses proved a great help in collecting the money, the total amount of which was $2,350,000.

AT THE NEW V-L-S-E OFFICE.

When the Toronto representative of MOVING PICTURE WORLD paid his first visit to the new Canadian headquarters of the Big Four, V-L-S-E, Mr. W. C. Gookin, the recently-appointed Canadian general manager, had just taken his seat at a table around which were gathered the officials and employes of the company. The latter included H. E. Feldstein, for four years with the General, Mutual and United companies in Canada; H. W. McCollum, formerly manager of the Universal branch exchange in Montreal; L. H. Watrous of New York; T. G. Cassels of New York, and Sam Harris, formerly of the General Film Company's branch in Montreal.

Although the offices, which are located in the Hermant building, 15 Wilton avenue, had been occupied only two days and no announcement of their occupation had been made, Mr. Gookin showed the business cards of nine exhibitors who had already taken the trouble to seek him out.

Announcement was made that a second Canadian branch would be opened in Montreal in the near future and H. W. McCollum will probably be placed in charge of that office.

Another visit from Mr. J. Partridge of the New York office of the V-L-S-E is expected very shortly when further arrangements will be made for the permanent establishment of the Toronto headquarters.

V-L-S-E. Official Visits Toronto.

A flutter of excitement passed through moving picture circles in Toronto on January 10, when the announcement was made that Mr. J. Partridge, of New York, assistant general manager of the V-L-S-E, was looking over the ground with a view to opening exchange offices in Toronto for his company. Mr. Partridge knows the Canadian field because he was formerly a prominent officer of the General Film Company for Canada. Mr. Partridge was accompanied by Mr. W. Goshen, another official of the V-L-S-E. It is the intention of Partridge to return to Toronto in a few days, it is declared.

CANADIAN PARAMOUNT MOVES.

The headquarters of Canadian Paramount Pictures, Incorporated, capitalized at $2,500,000, are being transferred from Calgary, Alberta, to Toronto, Ontario, and the two chief officers of the company, Messrs. J. and J. J. Allen, have already taken up residence in the Ontario capital in order to look after the affairs of the concern. The Allens own and operate a number of large theaters in the Canadian West, but whether they intend to start another wheel in the East is not yet known.

The third floor of the office building at 12 Queen street East, Toronto, has been remodeled throughout to provide accommodation for the office requirements of the Canadian Paramount. This accommodation consists of two private offices for the Allen brothers, a board room for meetings, several film and storage rooms and an accounting department.

EXHIBITOR CHILTON DIES.

Mr. W. Chilton of Brantford, Ontario, a pioneer exhibitor of Canada, died suddenly on January 26th after a short illness. At the time of his death, the late Mr. Chilton was manager of the Apollo theater, Brantford, which has been temporarily closed pending new arrangements.

A Gross Receipts Tax

Massachusetts State Senate Has Most Astonishing New Tax Measure to Apply to Moving Picture Theaters—Would Levy Two and One-Half Per Cent. on Gross Receipts Regardless of Whether House Were Losing or Not.

By William M. Flynn, Boston Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

BOSTON, MASS.—The attention of the moving picture men of Massachusetts is centered this week upon an expected battle in the state Senate over the admission of a bill providing for a tax of two and a half per cent. upon the gross receipts of admission at all theatrical or moving picture exhibitions in Massachusetts except those held for charity.

A Legislative Bomb.

The bill is one of the most far reaching legislative bombs that has ever been hurled at the moving picture interests of this state and its only redeeming feature from the film men's standpoint is the fact that it is not likely to get by.

Practically nothing was known of this bill until it came up for a hearing at the State House last week before the joint legislative committee on taxation as it had escaped the notice of many of the followers of film legislation on Beacon Hill. The bill went before the legislature on the petition of Frederic T. Fuller, who for a long time was prominent in the ranks of the Progressive Party in Massachusetts. Mr. Fuller was also one of the dissenting members of a special recess commission appointed to revise the taxation system of the Commonwealth

The petitioner was the only person who appeared before the committee in favor of the measure and although he made a strong appeal the committee reported the petition "leave to withdraw." When the question of accepting the report of the committee came up in the Senate, however, Senator Charles L. Gifford of the Cape, requested that consideration of the matter be put over for a week and the request was granted. It is believed that influence has been brought to bear from some source which will probably precipitate a verbal war in the Senate, with the fate of the measure hanging in the balance.

The Bill as Heard.

The bill which accompanies the Fuller petition reads as follows:

"Section 1. Proprietors of theaters, and proprietors or agents of other public exhibitions or shows where moving picture films, productions or theatrical scenery are used and a charge of admission is made, shall, unless the entire proceeds of such charge is devoted to charitable or religious purposes, pay for the use of the commonwealth a tax equal to two and one-half per cent of the receipts of admission, deducting from such tax all local taxes paid by them upon the real estate and tangible property employed in such exhibitions and also deducting any local or state tax upon the income derived therefrom levied under the provisions of any law for the general taxation of business incomes.

"Section 2. This act shall take effect on and after the first day of January, 1917."

Films Escape Taxation?

In urging favorable action on the petition Mr. Fuller told the members of the committee that it had been introduced for the purpose of reaching the hundreds of valuable films that annually come into Massachusetts through the various exchanges, which are escaping taxation. He said it was impossible to estimate the value of those films as some are worth only a few dollars and others several thousands of dollars. The best way to get at it, he thought, was through the medium of the box office in the houses where they are shown. He said the same rules would apply to scenery in theatres.

The petitioner told the committee that he had been talking with the assessors of Boston and they had informed him that they could not tax films on account of the great difficulty they encounter in trying to find them. Mr. Fuller stated that films and theatrical scenery come under the head of personal property and that the assessors told him they tax them as such on April 1 whenever they can find them.

All Amusements Involved.

Mr. Fuller was subjected to a cross-examination by members of the committee and Representative Charles F. Rowley of Brookline, a member of the committee, told the petitioners that if his bill became a law a tax would have to be levied on all baseball games, boxing matches, bicycle races or any other sport or amusement that the public was charged an admission to witness and Mr. Fuller admitted he would not object if it did.

The bill was opposed by James H. Devlin, Jr., Assistant Corporation Counsel of the City of Boston and Judge J. Albert Brackett, who appeared at the hearing as counsel for several theatrical interests. Attorney Devlin stated he appeared before the committee as the representative of the city of Boston and it was part of his duty to protect the interests of its citizens and business men. He said he was doing this in spite of the fact that the attitude of the theatrical managers was none too favorable to the existing municipal administration.

Mr. Devlin opposed the bill principally on the ground that it was giving the state more money to spend and exhausting one of the outside revenues to increase the general fund and not some special fund. He said the argument advanced by Mr. Fuller that the increased income from this source would reduce the tax rate and the state debt was untenable as statistics have shown that in spite of the direct tax and the collateral tax the state debt has climbed from less than $2,000,000 to $10,000,000 in ten years.

Running at a Loss Even Now.

The corporation counsel told the members of the committee that although he had not put his foot inside of a theater for four years he understood from comment in the papers that some of the theaters in Boston were running at a loss and he doubted the advisability of putting any further burdens upon them. Representative Allison G. Catheron of Beverly asked Mr. Devlin if he would object to the bill if it provided that the taxes obtained in this manner should go to the various cities and towns in which the theaters were located and the attorney replied that he had not given that phase of the question any thought.

What If Each Spectator Were Taxed?

Representative Drury, of Waltham, another member of the committee then started a lively discussion as to what would happen if every person who entered a moving picture house or a theater should be called upon to pay an excise tax according to the amount he paid for a seat. Representative Catherton stated that this was a common practice abroad where in some of the countries the theaters are an integral part of the government and the government has the right to tax the public in that manner whenever money is needed for specific purposes.

Judge Brackett delivered a masterful argument in opposition to the bill, covering every feature of the theatrical and moving picture industry which the provision of the bill touched unjustly. He explained in detail the manner in which the big theatrical productions come into Boston, what the per centage system was and the small profit the Boston theaters were deriving this season. He told of the general condition of theatrical affairs throughout the country and applied his same line of reasoning to films and moving picture houses.

Judge Brackett declared that one Boston house last year that handled gross receipts amounting to $300,000 lost money and said that 90 per cent. of the productions in New York last year also went behind. He cited an instance of another Boston theater that did a gross business last year of $200,000, and at the end of the season was $8,500 in the hole. He said if such a law as the one proposed by Mr. Fuller had been in effect at that time the owners of the theater would have been compelled to pay the tax and their losses would have amounted to something like $16,000. The attorney stubbornly maintained that taxation where it meant a loss was manifestly unfair. He said that if any tax was levied at all it should be levied upon the profits of a theater or moving picture house and not the gross receipts as it is often the case that the margin of profit to the owner or person running the house is practically nil.

Continuing his same line of argument Judge Brackett showed the members of the committee where the Boston theater proprietors were paying taxes to the city of Boston on real estate and other property, to the state in the shape of a corporation tax and a war tax to the United States. He then explained how difficult it was to fix the value of a film or the scenery of a theatrical production. Scenery which may have cost $100,000 for one production may not be worth $20 for any other purpose, he said, and the same is true of films. A film today, he declared, may be worth thousands of dollars, but in a few weeks from now it may not be worth anything.

A gross receipt tax, Judge Brackett declared, would be a burden upon the manager or owner of a house and a tax upon the public, who attend theaters and moving pictures shows, would be extremely hard to handle and decidedly unpopular.

Not In Sympathy With Measure.

"A tax is always unpopular with the person who has to pay it," commented Rep. Catheron and the remark brought a laugh from those gathered at the hearing. From the outset it was apparent that a majority of the members of the committee were not in sympathy with the measure and shortly after the hearing was over they went into executive session and voted it down. The surprise came in the Senate the next day, however, when Senator Gifford hung up the sign of impending trouble by asking for a postponement.

The Other Bills.

There is considerable mystery concerning the whereabouts and the delay upon the thirty and twenty-five minute intermission bills. These were among the first bills to be referred to the joint committee on mercantile affairs, but that is as far as they have gone. No action has been taken on either of them, and up to this week a date had not been fixed for a hearing on either one of them. The legislative committee of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of Massachusetts has been on the lookout for these bills and the opposition is so strong and so safely entrenched behind facts that it is not at all unlikely that both of these bills will be withdrawn.

A CHURCH THEATER.

St. Peter's at Dorchester Opens Picture House.

St. Peter's Roman Catholic Church, Dorchester, Mass., one of the largest parishes in the archdiocese of Boston, has opened a moving picture theater. The house is under the immediate direction of the Rev. Mgr. Peter Ronan, pastor of St. Peter's, and has proved to be one of the most successful enterprises of its kind in Boston.

Since the theater was opened a few weeks ago the attendance has grown from nothing to nearly 2,000 at each performance, and this, it is claimed, without interfering with private enterprises of the same kind in the same neighborhood. Father Ronan started the enterprise to furnish clean entertainment for the boys and girls of the parish on Saturday afternoon and the idea became so popular that it was decided to run a show in the evening for the benefit of the adults.

The films were carefully selected. The latest releases were shown and the grown-ups became as enthusiastic as the youngsters. As a result the Roman Memorial, a large auditorium erected a year or two ago by the parishioners of St. Peter's, is filled every Monday and Wednesday evening, and it is now planned to run a show every night.

The enterprise has attracted a great deal of interest in and about Boston and the pastors of churches of all denominations are watching the experiment of creating and solidifying a parish spirit through the medium of an amusement enterprise run on business principles under the auspices of the church authorities.

NEWARK NEWS LETTER.

By Jacob Kalter, Newark (510 Century Bldg.) Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Arrest in Jersey City.

For opening his place last Sunday in defiance of the Blue Laws of New Jersey, Manager Aaron Lowenthal, of the moving picture theater at 131 Brunswick street, was arrested.

Up to Lodi's Chief.

Lodi, N. J.—A request for permission to run Sunday moving picture shows at the Star theater, Lodi, N. J., from the St. Joseph's Catholic Church, was referred to the police committee.

Glauber with Universal.

Lee Gainsborg, manager of the local Universal Exchange, announces the appointment of Samuel Glauber as chief roadman for northern New Jersey. Mr. Glauber already reports excellent bookings.

Theater Incorporation.

The Newark Heights Theater Corporation, Inc., with an office at 53 Fairmount avenue, Jersey City, filed articles of incorporation with the county clerk last week. William C. Mundt is named as resident agent. The capital is $10,000, of which $1,000 is paid in. The incorporators are Charles C. Moskowitz, Leopold Friedman and Henry J. Hoebel. The company will run theaters and other amusement enterprises.

New Theater for Hackettstown.

The old Star theater, Hackettstown, N. J., is being torn down, and in its place will be constructed a modern up-to-the minute moving picture theater seating 650. The population of the town is only 2,715, but the owners, Klotz & Ackley, expect to make it a paying venture. They will either operate it themselves, or lease the house when it is completed.

Hoboken's New Theater.

The new Liberty theater, the pretty little moving picture house now in construction at corner of First and Grand streets, Hoboken, N. J., will be ready for occupancy about March 1. The building is very attractive, and although the house seats but 350, it has a small balcony. The house has been built under the direction of F. Tiscornia, the owner.

Newark Salesman Leads.

William Osborne, the salesman for the Newark branch of the General Film, 16-18 Beaver street, led the list of film salesmen for the last two weeks, according to "General News," the publication of the General Film. The Newark man is exceedingly proud of his feat, and says that it will be quite a time before he will relinquish his first-place position.

Lyceum, Orange, Closed.

The Lyceum theater, Main street, Orange, was recently closed because of alterations, and the installation of new opera chairs.

Another Paterson House.

The beautiful new playhouse, now in course of construction on Main street, Paterson, will be opened March 1. The new showhouse has contracted for World and Equitable programs.

De Luxe Changes.

The De Luxe theater, 404 South Orange avenue, is now under the management of L. Miller, formerly manager of the Ridgewood Opera House, Ridgewood, N. J.

Observes First Anniversary.

The U. S. Palace, Main street, Orange, N. J., of which D. J. Shepherd is the manager, observed its first anniversary during the week of Feb. 7. The Palace is owned by the U. S. Amusement Company, Frank G. Hall, president.

Singer Secures Features.

Samuel Singer, new manager of the Royal Feature Film Company, has secured the exclusive New Jersey state rights to two well-known features, "The Waif," a five-reel Aurora Film, and "Life Without Soul," also five reels, of the Ocean Film.

G. W. ERDMANN PROMOTED.

By Billy Bison, Buffalo Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Jan. 29.—Film men will be interested to know of the appointment of G. W. Erdmann as manager of the Cleveland, O., office of the Victor Film Service Company.

G. W. Erdmann.

Mr. Erdmann is a well known film man, having served in the capacity of manager of the Bijou Dream in Buffalo during the early days of motion pictures. Later Mr. Erdmann was chosen to open and manage the Elmwood theater, Buffalo's beautiful neighborhood house. Mr. Erdmann severed his connection with the Elmwood last summer and since that time has been acting as road man for the Buffalo office of the Victor Film Service, selling Broadway Universal Features (now Red Feather Features).

Mr. Erdmann has already assumed charge of the Cleveland branch and his many friends in Buffalo and throughout [illegible] be glad to hear of his advancement.

More Censorship Arrests

Norristown, Pennsylvania, Managers Charged With Exhibiting Picture Not Approved by State Board of Censors Deny the Accusations—Will Vigorously Defend Themselves—Censors Playing With Dangerous Rope.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—The State Board of Censors have once more resumed activities in this section of Pennsylvania, with the result that the proprietors of five moving picture theatres in Norristown, Pa., are defendants in an action charging them with exhibiting pictures not approved by the Board. The exhibitors have denied the accusations to a man and are preparing to vigorously defend themselves against the charges. We simply must hand it to our great board of censors, as they are on the "job" at all stages of the game, and in fact, they are all over the "job." It is a scientific fact that poison counteracts poison and maybe some day these uncalled for activities will porve to the public at large what a joke our board of censors are proving themselves to be.

KLINE POSTER CO. MOVES.

The Kline Poster Rental and Booking Office, George Kline, manager, has moved from 1305 Vine Street to 1307 Vine Street. The new office is decorated in a most elegant and elaborate manner and is at present the talk of the moving picture industry in Philadelphia.

In addition to the poster rental business, a vaudeville booking office for theatre circuits, banquets, clubs, hotels and the like, is conducted in conjunction with the picture trade, George Bennethum, a well-known moving picture man, handling this end of the work. A vast opportunity is presented to this concern and it would not be at all surprising if it expanded until it became one of the largest offices of its kind in the country. Messrs. Kline and Bennethum have the good wishes of the local trade.

Swaab Has Speer Carbons.

Mr. Swaab, of the Swaab Film Service, 1327 Vine street, wishes to announce to the exhibitors of this locality that he is now the agent for Speer carbons.

Wilmington, Del., Has New Theater.

Mr. J. N. Ginns, of the Wilmington Amusement Company, was a recent visitor in this city and announces the opening of a new theater in Wilmington. While here he paid a visit to the Swaab Film Service and before departing purchased a quantity of equipment, including several 6 b motor driven projecting machines.

New Theater at Pleasantville, N. J.

Exhibitor Zimmerman, well known in local moving picture circles, has recently opened a new theatre in Pleasantville, N. J., which he has christened the Pleasantville theater. He purchased much of his equipment from the Calehuff Supply Company of Philadelphia.

Bill Wert Finds Business Good.

Bill Wert, of the Calehuff Supply Company, 1301 Race street, returned recently from an extenedd trip throughout the coal regions of Pennsylvania. He reports business as being of an entirely satisfactory nature with exhibitors in Wilkes-Barre, Shamokin, Hazelton, Shenandoah, Bloomsburg and adjoining towns and declares that he transacted considerable business while on the trip. He placed several projecting machines in some of the theatres in that region along with several thousands of dollars' worth of other equipment. Local moving picture supply houses are now encountering a decided scarcity of good carbons, the German supply being practically exhausted and it is common knoweldge that domestic carbons are of a decidedly inferior quality.

Hopewell, the Magic City

Big Virginia City Built With Aladdin-Like Rapidity by the Du Pont Powder Company and Recently Burned Springs Up Again—Nearly a Score of Picture Theaters Projected—Many Already Doing Business.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—H. E. Friedman, traveling representative of the Washington office of the World Film Corporation, has just returned from a trip which took him into Maryland, Virginia and North Carolina. Mr. Friedman states that there is a slight but very noticeable improvement in business conditions throughout that section. He speaks particularly of Hopewell, Va., which is fast getting into shape after the fire which destroyed the motion picture theaters there. He states that there are nearly a score of new motion picture houses projected for Hopewell, although many of these are thus far paper propositions. However, there will be several new ones opened during the coming few weeks.

The Marcelle is the name of a new house for which ground has just been broken on Broadway, which is to be erected at a cost of about $8,000 by a corporation of which S. A. Xippas is a leading member. It is to have a marble front, while the interior will be done in Dutch style of decoration. This is to be a very attractive theater.

There is still another house for which ground has already been broken on property owned by E. H. Witten. This theater is to have seating accommodations for about 350 people. It is stated that Mr. Witten will lease the theater when completed to some one having a knowledge of the business.

A house for which no name has yet been selected is to be opened within a very few days by Paul Niewman. This will also have a seating capacity of about 350.

Mr. Harris, formerly manager of the Superior theater in Richmond, Va., has associated himself with a Mr. Harris, a prominent attorney of Richmond, under the firm name of Poindexter & Harris. They are to open a feature house in the very near future. It is said that some little trouble was experienced in getting material and equipment for this house by reason of the railroad embargo, which has greatly embarrassed the movement of all kinds of freight.

Still another new motion picture theater which will be ready for opening some time in March is that being erected for D. Saltzman, on Railroad avenue, which will have an accommodation for about 400 people.

Hampton, Va., Notes.

The Dixie theater in Hampton, Va., a house catering to the colored trade and managed by S. A. Webb, is being enlarged to accommodate about 400 people. The Alhambra is the name of another colored house which is being erected by a Mr. Anderson and which the latter hopes will be ready for opening within the next two or three weeks. This house is opposite the Dixie theater. It will have a seating capacity of about 360.

The Savoy theater, in Hampton, formerly operated by a Mr. Lindsey, was recently abandoned and dismantled. The fixtures, etc., were purchased by Mr. Anderson and will be set up in the Alhambra theater.

Preparedness Film in Norfolk.

At the Strand theater in Norfolk, Va., during a showing of "The Battle Cry of Peace," the demand for admission was so great that it is said that about two thousand people were turned away. There was no advance sale of reserved seats, but tickets were sold based on the capacity of the house. Tickets purchased for matinee performances assured their holders to a seat if presented before 2:30 p. m., while tickets for the evening performance were required to be presented before 8:30 p. m. The holder neglecting to do so had to run the risk of standing up to see the photoplay.

Virginia Notes.

It is rumored that the Wells interests in Richmond, Va., are negotiating for the control of the Strand theater, in that city.

The Little theater, formerly operated by H. W. Robertson in a store in Covington, Va., has been removed to the Masonic Hall, where a larger seating capacity is available. It is said that the erection of a modern theater building is contemplated by the operators of this house.

E. D. Hines, of Roanoke, Va., who recently took over the Paramount theater in that place, has changed the name of the house to the Jefferson and is now running a picked program of features with an admission charge of fifteen cents.

The Wells interests in Richmond, which recently took over the Superior theater, have renamed that house the Odeon. This house reports an exceptionally heavy attendance at the showing of "Damaged Goods." A rather strange feature in this connection was the fact that the matinee performances eclipsed those of the evening and were largely attended by women and girls.

A. J. Harlow, owner of the Wilber theater, at Orange, Va., in addition to conducting a first-class moving picture theater, has an ice plant, an electric plant, is an undertaker and a parson, conducts an ice cream, candy and cigar store, and has a lunch room.

Interesting Notes from National Capital

What Emergency War Tax on Theaters Brings In to Uncle Sam—Customs Rates on Pathescopes—Exhibitors and Exchange Men—Notes.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—During the month of December, 1915, the Federal treasury was enriched by $15,852.84 by the collection of the tax on theaters, concert halls and museums assessed under the provisions of the so-called War Emergency Revenue Law of October 22, 1913. During the period from July 1 to December 31, there was collected from this same source the sum of $340,294.98.

In December, 1915, circuses paid in $79.17 and "all other exhibitions" $805.26. During the six months' period ending with December 31, the former paid $5,079.35, and the latter $19,362.88.

Pathescope Customs Rates.

The assistant attorney general at New York has been instructed to file in the name of the secretary of the treasury, an application with the United States Court of Customs Appeals for a review of the decision of the Board of United States General Appraisers wherein certain motion picture machines, known as Pathescopes, which had been assessed with duty at the rate of 35 per cent. ad valorem under paragraph 93 of the Tariff Act of October 3, 1913, "for optical instruments and frames and mountings for the same," were held dutiable by the board at the rate of 25 per cent. ad valorem under paragraph 94 of that law as frames and mountings for projection lenses.

E. R. Hass to Travel for World Film.

E. R. Hass, who was formerly connected with the Times-Dispatch, of Richmond, Va., has recently accepted a position with the World Film as traveling representative of the Washington office. Mr. Hass is now making a very successful trip through North Carolina for this concern.

Local Fox Exchange Grows.

Extensive improvements are under way at the local Fox exchange on Ninth avenue. The business at this office has grown to such an extent of late as to necessitate enlarging the present quarters. The shipping department particularly has been overcrowded and to remedy this condition, work has been commenced on the upper floor of the building to make it suitable for use as a poster storeroom and shipping department. Huge racks are being put up for the accommodation of the posters and a stairway is being erected from the rear of the film shipping department. In addition to this an elevator is to be installed for the prompt movement of paper.

In commenting on the several changes in the office, Manager Carl F. Senning stated that the removal of the posters and heralds and other advertising matter to the floor above would greatly lessen the fire risk, in addition to giving the much needed additional room. In addition to this improvement, he has caused the lighting system to be remodeled, and motors are being installed on the rewinding tables.

S. J. Mayer Goes to V-L-S-E.

S. J. Mayer, formerly traveling representative for the World Film, has severed his connection with that firm and joined the forces of the V-L-S-E in this city in a similar capacity.

Earle E. Reese with Metro.

Earle E. Reese, formerly of the Exhibitors' Co-operative Booking Agency, is now with Metro, and will travel through the West Virginia territory.

A. J. Nelson Heads Local G. F. Exchange.

A. J. Nelson, who has been connected with the New York office of the General Film for the past five years, three years of which he spent as traveling representative, has succeeded J. A. Koerpel as manager of the Washington exchange of that company.

Cunningham's Good Batting.

Manager Cunningham, of the local Mutual exchange, is considerably elated by reason of the fact that his office leads all others of that company throughout the country in booking "The Girl and the Game."

Distributes the Castles Film.

The Metro Film Service Company, Inc., with offices in the Strand building, at Ninth and D streets, Northwest, is greatly extending its activities. It has secured the rights of distribution in Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia for "The Whirl of Life," with Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Castle starring, and for West Virginia and the South on "Virtue." This company announces that it is about to add a number of other features which it will handle in connection with the regular Metro output.

Big Run of "Peace" Film.

All sorts of records have been broken in Washington by "The Battle Cry of Peace," and so great was the business done by Tom Moore at the Strand during the two weeks' running of this production that he is going to give it another week there. There has been an awful rush for this feature, for it is declared to be the most successful one ever shown in the National Capital. The fact that it is so much in demand made it impossible for Mr. Moore to get it for three continuous weeks, so that he had to allow one week to elapse after the completion of the first two weeks. Heretofore, a week's showing of a photoplay was the limit, and even with respect to the legitimate stage no production has ever had so extended a run. Another remarkable thing about this extended exhibition is the fact that the white population of Washington is limited to about 250,000 people and ordinarily a theater manager would hardly take a chance of a three weeks' run with so limited a number to draw from.

Crandall's Theater Not Affected.

The fact that the property which houses Crandall's theater at Ninth and E streets, Northwest, has recently changed hands, will have no effect upon the management of that house, according to a statement made by Harry M. Crandall, president of the Crandall Amusement Company, to the Washington correspondent of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD. This company has a lease on the property at a rental of $7,500 per year, which will run some time in 1918, at which time of expiration it can be renewed for another five-year period at an annual rental of $9,000 per year.

Mrs. Lena Haga Leases the Raphael.

The lease of the Raphael theater, at Ninth and O streets, Northwest, has been transferred by James Holloway to Mrs. Lena Haga, who will hereafter conduct the business. The present lease will run for about two years more, but it contains a clause providing for an extension upon its expiration. The theater was erected about four years ago and has a seating capacity of approximately 500.

Pittsburgh Ball Ready

St. Valentine's Day, February 14, to See Biggest Event of Filmdom's Social Year—Many Film Players and Directors Have Accepted Invitations to Be Present—Men Who Have Charge of Arrangements.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—All is in readiness for the biggest event in years in moving picture circles of this territory—the first ball of the Pittsburgh Screen Club, to be held in Motor Square Garden, St. Valentine's Day, Feb. 14. With daily meetings of the various committees and weekly sessions of the entire organization, the members of the Club have left nothing undone which will insure a brilliant success from every standpoint.

H. R. Kester, president of the Club, announces that acceptances have been received from a majority of the leading directors, managers and film actors, and the indications are that the greatest gathering of moving picture stars ever brought together in Pittsburgh will be here. The list of patrons is headed by Daniel Frohman and includes many of the most prominent theatrical producers, public officials and business men of the country. It has been decided to give a portion of the receipts to the Actors' Fund of America.

The hall has had widespread and very effective advertising, not only in the city but throughout this entire territory, and the sale of seats has reached large proportions. The following film men had charge of promoting the affair in the various sections: Downtown, J. G. Long; Northside, A. H. McClelland; Southside, Clarence Mathias; Hilltop, Harry Megowan; Wylie and Center, M. Feitler; Lawrenceville and Bloomfield, W. J. Bernardi; outer Fifth avenue, R. Stolz; Oakland, G. E. Ainsworth; Washington, Pa., and Wheeling, W. Va., G. E. Ainsworth; Beaver Valley, H. Goldberg; Kane and Cory, Pa., John Smith; Steubenville, O., Mr. Pulaski; Greenburg, Pa., Mr. Remaley; Uniontown, Pa., Louis Sitnek; Altoona, Pa., Jake Silverman.

M. C. HUGHES HEADS EXCHANGE.

A. S. Davis, manager of the Independent Film Exchange, owned by the Universal, has resigned his position with that company and will retire from the film field to look after other business interests. Mr. Davis sold the exchange to the Universal on July 1, of last year, but was prevailed upon to continue as its head until a suitable man could be found to succeed him. His withdrawal from the moving picture industry, where he has been a familiar figure for many years, is viewed with regret by exhibitors throughout western Pennsylvania.

Mr. Davis' successor is M. C. Hughes, who has taken over the management and is continuing the exchange under the same policy and with the same force of employes as heretofore. Mr. Hughes was with the General Film Company for four years, and was manager of the office at Atlanta, Ga., during the past year. Although a young man, Mr. Hughes' wide experience in the film business assures for him the fullest measure of success in his new connection.

BUYS BIJOU AT BRUSHTON.

The Bijou theater 7707 Frankstown avenue, Brushton, Pa., has been sold by V. L. Marks to Peary E. Lee, who took over the house last week. Mr. Marks bought the Bijou about a year and a half ago and transformed it from a losing proposition to a money-maker. While it is a rather small theater, the big picture shown, including Metro and Fox productions, enable the owner to do a nice business at 10 cents admission. Mr. Marks will open another house in that section in the near future.

Want To Stop Film Show Nuisances

Cleveland Exhibitors to Be Rid of "Obnoxious Patronage"—First Offender Caught and Fined—Action Against Stores That Sell "Stink Balls."

By Hubert Persons, Cleveland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—The war which motion picture proprietors in this city have commenced to rid their houses of disorderly and obnoxious patronage, came to a climax this week in the Juvenile Court, when Judge Addams fined La Vern Buell, sixteen years old, 3389 West 99th street, $10 on a charge of disorderly conduct.

Samuel Bullock, a member of the executive committee of the Exhibitors' League, testified against the youth, declaring that Buell drove patrons from his theater last Sunday by throwing a vile smelling chemical compound about the place. Bullock traced Buell from the theater, followed him on the street and caused his arrest.

Now Managers Bullock, H. A. Rosenberg, of the Cosy theater on Loraine avenue, and President Sawyer of the Exhibitors' League, are preparing for a crusade on storekeepers who sell chemical compounds under the pleasing name of "stink balls." Evidence is to be presented to the county prosecutor.

According to Sawyer, an Ohio law makes the sale of such articles a crime, rather than a misdemeanor, and the law has rarely been enforced because of the severity of the punishment stipulated in the statute. However, the picture men declare they intend to end forever the sale of such compounds in Cleveland.

League and Pay-in-Advance Policy.

The film committee of the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League has taken under advisement action on a recent demand of local film exchanges for weekly payments in advance for films. Members of the League discussed the matter at a recent meeting and were divided as to whether the exchanges were entitled to such protection or whether the business as a whole would not be benefited by an advance payment rule.

A Big Hit.

The Metro film, "Man and His Soul," which opened last Sunday as the feature at the Alhambra, was screened seven times on the opening day, before a total audience of more than six thousand. The picture has drawn crowds all week.

Another attendance record has been made at the Strand theater with the World photoplay, "A Price for Folly."

At Work on a Film.

The staff of the new Reserve Photo Plays Company, of which Robert McLaughlin, former manager of the Colonial theater, is president, is at work on its first film Johnny Ray and Mrs. Emma Ray are the "stars" of the company, with Ralph Cummings, formerly of the Kalem Company, as director. The company's present studio is at 717 Superior avenue.

A larger studio is to be built at Rocky River, a suburb of Cleveland, in a few months. Rocky River has scenery especially adapted to the making of outdoor pictures.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

Business Notes and News Briefs.

J. B. Buchanan, chief cameraman of the Universal's Animated Weekly in the Pittsburgh section, has arranged to take pictures of the forthcoming reception, entertainment and dance of the Pittsburgh Screen Club, February 14. He will have two cameras on the job.

The Palace theater at 859 East Ohio street, Northside, Pittsburgh, has been closed by its owner, A. J. Hanna, who is now looking for a new location in that section of the city in which to install his equipment.

The Century Family theater, East Ohio street, one of the newest theaters on the Northside, has signed up for the Gold Rooster Plays. The Lincoln theater, Boggs avenue, has also contracted for the Gold Rooster Plays. Harold Gauding is the manager of this house, which is one of the finest in the Pittsburgh district.

The Star theater, at Kane, Pa., recently installed a Style R. Wurlitzer Orchestra Organ and last week held a very successful dedication of the instrument.

Application is being made for a state charter of incorporation for the "Squirrel Hill Amusement Company," one character and object of which is to operate moving picture theaters in the Pittsburgh district. The applicants are B. Wise, M. Biowawsky and J. Biowawski.

Watchful Waiting

Kentucky Taking Note of Legislative Activities, Both in State Capital and in Washington—Louisville Photoplay Association Holding Regular Meetings—Amendment to Child Labor Law—Federal Censorship.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

LOUISVILLE, KY. — The Louisville Photo Play Association has been holding regular meetings during the past few weeks, and is watching very closely the developments in the state legislature and also in Congress. It is interesting to note that no censorship bills have been introduced in the present state legislature. The organization has received copies of the insurance code, applying to motion picture houses, and has the matter well in hand.

Amendment to Child Labor Law.

Exhibitors throughout the state are considerably interested in a bill which has been introduced into the legislature and which recently received its first reading before the state senate. This bill is a measure providing an amendment to the child labor law so that children under 16 years of age may be permitted to perform in theaters and picture shows when attended by their parents or adult custodians. In the past the exhibitors have been closely watched by the State Labor Inspectors in order that young children should not appear on the stages in amateur affairs or in fact any kind of theatrical productions. Last season the local authorities gave Eddy Foy a good deal of trouble when the latter appeared with his troupe at the Keith house.

Censorship Protest in Owensboro.

Moving picture men of Owensboro, Ky., are strongly opposed to the measure now before Congress for National Censorship and for making a charge of $1 for each 1,000 feet of film so censored. Manager Bleich, of the Empress and Queen theaters, and one of the leading motion picture men of the state, has gone on record as opposing such a bill, stating that in his opinion such a law would be in direct opposition to liberty. Manager Bleich said: "Imagine a system of justice under which every business man was compelled to come into court, before entering upon any transaction, and to pay the cost of a proceeding to prove that he was guiltless of any illegal intent, on a purely arbitrary summons, unsupported by a shred of evidence. That is what censorship by statute does to the moving picture producer.

Manager Tim Pedley, of the Grand theater is equally opposed. He said: "Censorship belongs to monarchies, not to republics. Any action taken to censor any business which is legal within itself is unjust. The business of showing motion pictures is a legitimate business. It is conducted, in virtually every instance, by men of character and uprightness. Why surround the motion picture business with a system of censorship like mail of a warring nation. The public expression is the best censorship in the world and the picture men know it." The moving picture men of Kentucky are bombarding their Congressmen with letters in which the Kentucky representatives are asked to use their influence against the proposed measure.

STRAND HAS $100,000 CAPITAL.

The Strand Theater Company has filed articles of incorporation listing its capital stock at $100,000. The company operates the Strand theater, formerly the Masonic theater, at Louisville. The stock is divided into 5,000 shares of common and 5,000 shares of preferred with a par value of $10 per share. The company places its debt limit at $50,000.

The incorporators are W. D. and Roy V. McRae, each with 1,337 shares of common and 1,337 shares of preferred, and Milton A. McRae, with 1,336 shares of common and an equal number of shares of preferred. The incorporators are all residents of Detroit, Mich., but W. D. and R. V. McRae came to Louisville several weeks ago to open the theater which has been in operation now for a little over a month. The company proposes to operate other theaters besides the Strand, and will conduct theatrical exhibitions, concerts, lectures and moving picture exhibitions.

VALUE OF FILM INSTRUCTION.

Dean John L. Patterson, of the University of Louisville, has been requested by the Government Bureau of Commercial Economics and the National Bureau of Education to make a test among the students in the local college. Fifty volunteers from various classes in the university will be divided into three sections. One section will hear the reading of a lecture on "Farming with Dynamite." A second section will see the film illustrating the lecture, while a third section will both hear the lecture and see the film. No section will be allowed to take notes. Twenty-four hours afterward the three sections are to take the examination questions issued for that purpose, and ten days later a second section of questions and three months later a third set.

The object of this test is in the first place to determine which records more permanently, the eye or the ear, to those who are accustomed to ear memory; secondly, to determine how much is forgotten, from the psychological viewpoint, in twenty-four hours, ten days and three months.

A similar test is being made for the Department of the Interior, at Washington, by several of the prominent institutions of learning in the country.

SAID HE WAS JACK PICKFORD.

Louisville exhibitors have been trying to figure out the "game" of a young man who recently visited some of the local houses and endeavored to impersonate Jack Pickford, of the illustrious Pickford family. The man had a number of personal cards reading "Jack Pickford, Riverside Drive, New York." Upon visiting one of the exhibitors he stated that he, his sister Mary, Owen Moore, Alice Joyce and Tom Moore had stopped off in Louisville for a day while en route from California to Jacksonville, Fla., and that while in Louisville a few scenes would be taken for a picture known as "Evidence." Upon inquiring at the Seelback Hotel, where the impersonator stated the party was stopping, it was found that the official of the hotel had no record of the party, and would have recognized any member of the party who might have registered under another name. According to one of the exhibitors the impersonator was harmless and apparently hopeless.

Stunt to Boost "Spirit of the Poppy."

A novel stunt was recently "pulled" at the Casino theater during the showing of the Chinatown picture, "The Spirit of the Poppy." Bunks were arranged on both sides of the lobby and a number of supes were hired to "lay up" in these bunks. Other supes took parts of Chinamen, and cooked pills and passed the pipes. The pipes were borrowed from the city officials who obtained them in raiding some of the former opium dens in the city. Myriads of small lights, of various colors, were arranged in the lobby, and a super dressed as a Devil flitted backward and forward from bunk to bunk. The lobby display attracted a great deal of attention and the first day's run of the picture was so good that it was continued for two or three days, other pictures being laid on the shelf. In fact the first two days business handled with this picture made the best two days' business handled by the theater in months, in spite of bad weather conditions.

Chosen Local Notes of Interest.

The Alamo Theater of Louisville is using reams of newspaper just now in advertising "The Strange Case of Mary Page." Full page and smaller advertisements have been run. The publicity is accompanied by many cuts made from scenes in the picture.

The Thomas Opera House of Horse Cave, Ky., has been re-opened and is now showing the Paramount features on Friday and Saturday nights, two shows being given each of these evenings.

Commissioner of Agriculture Matt Cohen, of Frankfort, Ky., has announced that his appointments have finally been approved by Gov. A. O. Stanley. One of these appointments is that of Mrs. Charles H. Musgrove, of Louisville, as chief woman labor inspector. Mrs. Musgrove succeeds Miss Madge Nave. Miss Nave, while in office, broke up all amateur performances in local moving picture shows, threatening prosecutions if such performances were allowed to continue.

The Clifton theater in the Eastern part of the city recently began publishing a community paper which is known as "The Clifton Truth." The paper will be devoted to the interests of the theater, but will carry a few advertisements of neighboring merchants.

Arrangements have been made whereby the serial, "The Girl and the Game," has been transferred from the Novelty theater to the Orpheum theater. Judge W. A. Kinney, of the latter house, has made arrangements whereby a miniature steam locomotive, formerly used to pull a miniature train at one of the public parks, will shortly be placed in front of the theater, and an engineer will be employed to operate this engine which will be run on a sort of treadmill. This idea should attract a world of attention and draw good attendances. The Orpheum has been playing railroad pictures with marked success.

TENNESSEE NEWS LETTER.

By G. D. Crane, Chattanooga Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Tennessee Realty & Leasing Co. Elects.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn.—At a recent meeting of the stockholders and directors of the Tennessee Realty & Leasing Co., of Chattanooga, Tenn., R. L. Watkins was elected manager of the Majestic theater to succeed himself and Howell Graham, who for several months have jointly managed the playhouse. The former board of directors was re-elected. The directors are H. L. Sperry, of Nashville; Leo Brock, of Nashville; R. L. Watkins, of Chattanooga; Howell Graham, of Chattanooga; L. M. Price, of Nashville, and D. P. Henderson, of Chattanooga. The officers are H. S. Sperry, president, and R. L. Watkins, secretary-treasurer. Mr. Graham, until recently, was interested in the operation of several moving picture theaters in addition to the Majestic.

New Programs in Memphis.

C. F. Bridges, of the Majestic Amusement Company, of Memphis, Tenn., recently announced that the company had closed a deal whereby the Majestic Amusement Company would show Triangle films in certain houses of the big Majestic string in Memphis. Majestic theaters Nos. 1 and 2 will be devoted to the big features, and Old Majestic No. 1 will be used for varied bills of shorter films. On Sunday, Majestic No. 2 will show short bills, however. The Majestic Amusement Company is now showing Triangle, Paramount, Metro, World, Mutual Masterpictures and Fox features at its houses besides numerous short attractions.

Prices at Majestic in Chattanooga.

The Majestic theater, of Chattanooga, which shows vaudeville and pictures, and pictures in the summer, has just announced that prices at the popular Market-street house have been raised, due to higher cost for films and plays at the theater. Matinee prices have been raised five cents for the orchestra and balcony, and ten cents for the boxes. Night prices have been raised ten cents for the orchestra, five cents for the balcony and fifteen cents on box seats.

Business Notes in Tennessee.

W. A. Sheets, manager of the Vendome theater of Nashville, Tenn., held over the film "The Birth of A Nation" for a second weeks' run, the first week having proven very satisfactory, and upwards of 20,000 people having seen the play. On January 31, the first day of the second week's run, every Confederate soldier in the vicinity of Nashville was invited to attend and see the play as a guest of the company. Two shows were given daily during the engagement, one starting at 2:30 in the afternoon, and the second show at 8:15 in the evening.

The Strand theater, the new Main street theater of Chattanooga, employed a special orchestra during a one day showing of "Anna Karenina," one of the superb photo play events of the season. The play was well advertised in the local newspapers and drew capacity attendance.

REEL PLAYERS IN ATLANTA.

By A. M. Beatty, Atlanta Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

"Silent Bill" Haddock and Many Others Appear at the Lyric.

ATLANTA, GA.—This city had the opportunity Monday to observe reel actor folks. The stage fright they betrayed on the boards of the Lyric when "Silent Bill" Haddock, the Gaumont director who produced the night's main offering, "As a Woman Sows," introduced them with bits of studio banter, was enough to show they are just plain, genuine human beings.

It was the first time that a collection of screen stars had ever appeared in the city. Despite the rain, a packed house greeted them. An ovation was accorded "Silent Bill" Haddock as he strode before the "foots."

He prophesied a huge success for the Lyric with its policy of Mutual Masterpictures de Luxe, and then called upon Miss Marguerite Courtot, the pretty little heroine of the "Ventures of Marguerite," a series of film adventures written around a girl's escapades. She was wan and trembling and held the director's hand. She spoke a few words and gave way to her leading man, Sidney Mason.

Lucille Taft and Ida Sheppard, Gertrude Robinson and Lillian Martin, came from the wings in their turns, blushing and bowing.

Then came one, John Reinhard, a villain of the deepest dye, side-burns, an insidious mustache and a wicked gleam in his eye. The house recognized his type the moment it laid eyes upon him. Some wanted to hiss. Others wanted to voice protest, but all succeeded only in giving him a healthy "hand."

If the Lyric continues in the manner in which it embarked Monday night, it should be one of the south's most successful picture theaters. "The Thoroughbred," a five-part Mutual picture, was shown Tuesday as the main offering, with special program of diversified features. The Lyric symphonic orchestra furnished special adapted music.

The Alcazar, Birmingham, Ala., had wonderful success of the "Battle Cry of Peace" last week. This prompted Manager Griffin to bill it for another week. All house records were broken and many turned away disappointed.

On Health Dept. Warrant

Cincinnati Exhibitor Held Responsible for Unsanitary Condition of Theater by Chief Sanitary Inspector—Requirement of 1,200 Cubic Feet of Air for Each Spectator Not Found—Washroom Not Clean Enough.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CINCINNATI, OHIO.—That the health department of this city meant business recently when it announced that there would be careful tests of the air in theaters, and that prosecutions would follow delinquency in the matter of proper ventilation, was proved with extreme adequacy last week when William H. Wilson, manager of the Coliseum, at 404-408 Pearl street, was arrested, charged with violation of the sanitary laws.

The warrant was issued on the affidavit of W. C. Folsom, chief sanitary inspector of the health department of Cincinnati, and set forth that Mr. Wilson had failed to provide the required 1,200 cubic feet of air for every auditor, and, furthermore, that the theater is not sanitary, in that the washroom is not kept as clean as could be desired. The prosecution was the first instituted under the health department's crusade against unsanitary conditions in theaters, and while it came as somewhat a surprise, exhibitors for the most part have put their houses in order, and have no fear of the visits of inspectors.

C. & M. AMUSEMENT ELECTS.

The C. & M. Amusement Company, of Marietta, Ohio, operating the Hippodrome in that city and the Strand at Cambridge, Ohio, held its annual meeting last week, the report of President Weber showing that 1915 was the best year the company ever had, in spite of adverse conditions. The election of officers resulted in the re-election of T. C. Weber as president, the other officers being as follows: C. A. Frantz, vice-persident; C. C. Middleswart, secretary, and O. J. Sybert, treasurer.

MUST PAY FOR BURNED FILMS.

A jury at Hamilton, Ohio, recently found a suit against Burton Leeds, a Middletown exhibitor, a hard nut to crack. The exhibitors' Feature Film Company filed the suit, asking damages for injury to three reels in a fire in Leeds' theater. The trial lasted two days, and a considerable amount of expert evidence concerning exhibition methods, film values, and the like, was necessary in order to inform the jury on the subject. A judgment of $317.50 against Leeds was finally awarded.

GRAND AT IRONTON OPENS.

The Grand theater, at Ironton, O., the newest photoplay house in that thriving town, opened its doors recently, with Clara Kimball Young in "Marrying Money" as the opening attraction. Manager Myers gave his personal attention to the details of decoration, fittings and the like, in connection with the finishing of the house, and the result achieved justifies the trouble he took. Heating arrangements are especially good, and the way the Grand started indicates that it is to have a prosperous career.

Films at Mechanicsburg Opera House.

Mechanicsburg, O., now has a regular attraction at the opera house, as Manager Guckert, of Marysville, O., has taken charge of the house to give moving picture exhibitions, with an occasional vaudeville act. He intends to redecorate the house and otherwise to make it more attractive than ever before, being much encouraged at the way the town turned out to see the open-in performance.

C. E. Whitlatch Running Show at Superior, O.

C. E. Whitlatch, of Superior, O., has opened a picture house in that town, assisted by M. C. Wilson, and has so far done an excellent business, he reports. Mr. Wilson, who was a candidate for sheriff last year, recently took pains to announce that he is not permanently interested in the picture business, as he intends to go after the sheriff's job again next year. In the meantime, however, he is giving his best attention to the work of making the Superior house a success.

New Gold Rooster Electric Sign.

Manager Holah, local Gold Roster man, last week supervised the installation on the building in which the office is situated of a new electric sign. This sign, like the painted signs referred to, shows the name of the latest Gold Rooster release, and in view of its fine location is going to be extremely useful to the office and to exhibitors. A Pathe office in Charleston, W. Va., is the latest branch under the supervision of the Cincinnati office. It will be opened shortly, with a stock of about 100 subjects suitable for use in the mining district, and is expected to handle a big business.

Triangle Notes.

Among the well-known exhibitors visiting the Triangle offices in Cincinnati last week were M. Switow, of Louisville, C. J. Gross, of the Columbia, at Dayton, Ohio., C. Williamson, of the New Strand, at Shelbyville, Ind., and Ed. C. Clifford of the Clifford, at Urbana, O.

The last named completed arrangements for the use of Triangle releases at his popular house, Urbana having the distinction of being one of the smallest towns in the state to handle Triangle service, on account of its cost and the provision in contracts requiring not less than a ten cent admission charge. Mr. Clifford was particularly anxious to secure this service, and when he finally landed it was not slow to spread the news around Urbana.

Other houses in Central Ohio showing Triangle films include May's, at Piqua, the Majestic, at Springfield, and the Grand, at Columbus; and if Manager Hite keeps up his present pace there will soon be need for fresh fields in order to give scope for his activities. He visited Cleveland last week for a conference of Pathe executives, dropping off en route home to look up a few good prospects among the leading houses.

Dayton's Lyceum Gets Fox Offerings.

The management of the Lyceum, at Dayton, Ohio, is patting itself on the back over securing the exclusive use of Fox releases, for a consideration said to involve $20,000 over the term of the contract. The popularity of such stars as Theda Bara and William Farnum, not to mention the other well-known players featured in Fox films, made the arrangement especially desirable for the Lyceum, and the management was accordingly pleased at its consummation.

Mark Twain Films in Cincinnati.

The second Mark Twain subject seen in film form in Cincinati appeared during the first half of last week at the Strand, the Lasky production of "Pudd'nhead Wilson," featuring Theodore Roberts, being the Paramount release for that period. Marguerite Clark in "Prince and Pauper" was the other Twain film dramatization seen at the Strand, and both drew big houses, the Paramount-Twain combination proving a winning one, especially when shown with popular stars.

Manager Libson is more than pleased with the manner in which attendance at the Strand and his other two big houses, the family and the Walnut, continues to hold up, regardless of cold or wet weather.

Castle Theatre Opens

Bloomington, Ill., Has Fine New Picture House—Seats 1,100 Persons—Interesting Details, Ventilation, Lighting, Decoration of Walls and Ceiling—Entrances and Exits—The Booth—Personnel of the Staff.

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL.—William R. Lyon and Delmar Schnepp have opened their new Castle theater in the C. V. Williams building on East Washington street in Bloomington, Ill. That it is a welcome addition to the photoplay houses in Illinois is evidenced by some of the following features: It has a seating capacity of 1,100 persons. The floor space is 100x115 feet. The screen is larger than any in the state outside of Chicago. The air is changed every three minutes without causing a draft in the room. A pipe organ will "play the pictures." A few seats along the sides of the gallery will be reserved for the benefit of those who want reserved seats.

The building is six stories high, the theater part taking up two full stories. It is absolutely fireproof and contains a terra cotta front with trimmings of green and old oak faced brick.

Lighting and Lamps.

Along the massive columns on either side of the house, both main floor and balcony, are bracket lamps of mission design and art glass harmonizing perfectly in colors with the large bowls and other decorations. The exit lamps are of a novel design, being curved with the art glass and red letters on a white alabastine background. In the lobby is used a Broscolite which gives a flood of light and shows off to excellent advantage the entrance. The fixtures throughout are of special design. There are twelve inverted domes of various sizes, eight thirty-inch bowls taking care of the main portion of the theater. The bowls are of white alabaster with green and coral effects, with amber bottoms, giving out a soft well diffused light, in each bowl is used the powerful type C globes for the high lighting, while two small green globes take care of the low light during the performances.

Wall and Ceiling Decorations.

The ceiling is of a rich gray treatment with the massive beams done in ivory and soft color effects, while the side walls are in coral tint and Tiffany effect. The mosaic and plastic relief figures are done in soft greens, coral tones and delicate browns. The panels about the balcony are of French gray with the coral and relief work giving it a splendid setoff.

The interior woodwork is of Circassian walnut finish throughout. The decorations are of an unusual tone, mulberry and gray with white massive tapestry in design. The Indian faces, about fifteen of which adorn the room and all cornice and mouldings were made here.

Entrances and Exits.

Special attention has been given to the entrances and exits. There are twelve exits entering on the rear and east alleys and street and there are gallery exits on the west side as well as the east alley. It is believed that in the event of an emergency the entire house could be emptied in thirty seconds. The aisles and floor of the foyer are covered with fibrous mastic in colors. This is the same covering that is used on the famous Atlantic City boardwalk.

Plainness and simplicity prevail. The architect has kept away from all objectionable ornamentation and over-elaborateness.

Fire Protection.

The room from which the pictures are projected to the screen is protected in such a way as to make it absolutely fireproof, by the use of doors and shutters over each opening. The machines will be located 105 feet from the screen and the highest type lenses and mechanism has been installed.

The Staff.

Mr. Lyon, one of the lessees of the theater, will be in personal charge and the attaches, who have been with him for a number of years, have been retained. In fact, Mr. Lyon has paid them their full salary every week, ever since the pictures were discontinued at the Chatterton. His staff includes Bert Dillingham, operator, Edward Dimmit, doorman, and Harry Wilson, organist.

NO PROFIT IN RATE WAR.

One of those unfortunate price-cutting wars with the belligerents paying space rates in local papers to tell the public all about it took place in Kewanee, Ill., over "The Battle Cry of Peace." The Majestic had the film booked for January 28 with a top price of 50 cents. The Dreamland booked it for Jan. 31 and advertised a general admission of 15 cents. After the details of the battle are deleted by the censor one result is that the Majestic cut the price on this big ten-reel feature to ten cents and guaranteed its usual steady projection.

New Sullivan, Ill., House.

United States Sub-Treasurer Irving Shuman, of Chicago, has just opened in his home town of Sullivan, Ill., the new Jefferson, a $35,000 theater. While it opened with a musical attraction, it is equipped for moving pictures and a number followed the first program. One of these was a film showing Mr. Shuman in the uniform of a private at the recent military training camp at Port Sheridan, Ill. Cigars were given the men and boxes of candy to the women.

No Use for a Stage.

There will be no more vaudeville at the Strand theater in Farmington, Ill. Jesse Chance, Jr., who operates that house and also the Lyric, has had the stage torn out and has been making plans to increase the seating capacity to 450, making it a real moving picture house. He probably will redecorate this spring.

MICHIGAN NEWS LETTER.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

Kalamazoo Operators Want Licenses.

KALAMAZOO, MICHIGAN.—A petition asking that the city council in Kalamazoo, Mich., pass an ordinance licensing moving picture operators and regulating their employment was presented to that body by thirteen operators of the city. Attached to the petition was a copy of the ordinance now in effect in Chicago. The Kalamazoo building inspector has approved the ordinance.

Public safety demanded strict regulation of the operators, declared the petitioners. Inexperienced operators under twenty-one years old were a menace, they said because of the danger of fire from handling inflammable films.

Michigan Notes of Interest.

Exhibitors of Bay City, Mich., telegraphed to Congressman George A. Loud a protest against the Hughes-Smith federal censorship bill.

Manager Anderson, of the Star theater at Cadillac, Mich., has won the approbation of the women of the Penelopean Club of that city by trying out special children's shows and planning to make them a regular Saturday morning feature.

The Orpheum Theater Company, of Hancock, Mich., which took over the Lyric theater at Laurium, Mich., and redecorated it, reopened it with the Triangle feature, "The Lily and the Rose."

The Garden theater at Flint, Mich., was closed for a week and then reopened as "Flint's Home of Triangle Photoplays." Ernasonic Barbere is leading the Garden orchestra.

"The Birth of a Nation" will not be cut when it is shown at the Post theater in Battle Creek, Mich., in February. Mayor Marsh and the city attorney made a trip to Detroit to see it and decided that the protests of Battle Creek negroes did not warrant any eliminations.

The Calumet theater at Calumet, Mich., will have it for six matinees and nights, beginning March 20. Manager Ed. Butler, of the Ishpeming theater at Ishpeming gets it for three days to be fixed later.

The Princess theater at Benton Harbor, Mich., has installed a new $5,000 pipe organ.

"Ivanhoe" was shown for the benefit of the Ladies of the Maccabees at the Electric theater in Bancroft, Mich.

The Triangle pictures were transferred from the Majestic Gardens at Grand Rapids, Mich., to the Strand theater and a complete Paramount program was offered at the Majestic.

Four hundred children attended a special matinee of "Hiawatha" at the Bradley theater in Tecumseh, Mich.

DETROIT NEWS LETTER.

By Jacob Smith, Detroit Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Semi-Annual Inspection Begins.

DETROIT, MICH.—The first semi-annual inspection of motion picture theaters under the auspices of the state fire marshal's department started in Detroit on February 1st. The work will take from ten days to two weeks. So far the inspectors have found no serious faults, in fact, they have stated that the theaters were never in as good a condition as at the present time.

More Theaters Leased by Triangle.

The Triangle Theater Company, comprising P. P. Craft and Fred M. Randall, lessees of the former Avenue theater, Detroit, have leased the Forest theater, Woodward and Forest avenues, and placed Harry Nichols in charge. He was formerly manager of the Majestic at Washington, D. C.

The Triangle company has also leased the Globe theater, Grand River and Trumbull avenues, where it is playing Triangle films six days a week. Roy Bishop continues as manager.

The company announces the appointment of Harry B. Reynolds as manager of the Triangle theater, Woodward and Jefferson avenues. He has been associated with Mr. Craft for the past six years. Mr. Reynolds has "pulled off" a number of excellent publicity-getting stunts that are bound to be productive of steady patronage. The theater is showing improvement every day as an exclusive photoplay house.

New Pontiac House.

Harry Goldstein, who helped promote the Majestic theater, this city, A. I. Marenette, of the Palace Theater Company, and James O'Donnell, all of Detroit, announce that a new theater costing $150,000 and seating 1,700 people, is to be erected in Pontiac, Mich., about an hour by trolley from Detroit. Preliminary plans have been completed and the contract has practically been awarded to Frank Farrington, of Detroit. The architect selected is C. Howard Crane, who designed the Majestic, Alhambra, Strand and other successful Detroit playhouses. Property has been purchased on South Saginaw street for the new enterprise, and 100 by 160 feet in size. Construction work will probably start within 30 days as the contract calls for the completion of the theater by July 1st. The theater will be Roman hippodrome style and will contain a big organ.

A De Luxe Company Announcement.

Secretary Heinrich, of the De Luxe Motion Picture Theater Company, which plans to erect a large theater at Kercheval and Parkview avenues, Detroit, says plans have practically been completed and that the erection of the proposed playhouse is assured.

Grand Circus Theater Made New.

The Grand Circus theater, 301 Woodward avenue, Detroit, has completed alterations and improvements which have been in progress for several months. New carpets have been laid, new chairs installed, the front remodelled, new equipment added to the foyer and changes for the better made in other directions.

Preparing Plans for New House.

Architect Christian W. Brandt, of Detroit, who designed the New Majestic theater in Wyandotte, is preparing plans for a theater seating 1,000 to be erected on the corner of Mack and Holcomb avenues.

F. Addison Pelley Now in Kalamazoo.

F. Addison Pelley, formerly of Detroit, is now the owner and general manager of the Fuller theater, Kalamazoo, Mich., where he is showing motion pictures on days when he has no legitimate attraction booked.

R. G. McGaw Manages Liberty.

R. G. McGaw, for the past eight and one-half years in charge of ticket selling at the Temple theater, Detroit, has been appointed manager of the Liberty theater, succeeding Harry Irons, who has resigned owing to ill health. The Liberty is owned by John H. Kunsky. Mr. McGaw will make a valuable man for Mr. Kunsky.

Runs Two Wyandotte Houses.

George P. Wilbur, former manager of the Grand Theater in Columbus, Ohio, has been appointed manager of the Majestic and Marx theaters in Wyandotte. The Majestic, a new theater, now under construction, will be ready in a few weeks.

Harry Moier at Empress.

Harry Moier has been appointed manager of the Empress theater in Grand Rapids, succeeding Daniel F. McCoy.

WISCONSIN NEWS LETTER.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

Children's Shows in Milwaukee.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.—The Jackson theater in Milwaukee, Wis., is co-operating with the Parents' Association of the Cass school, and has been planning to inaugurate Saturday afternoon children's shows. Preliminary to this work two night shows were given. One was Mary Fuller in "Under Southern Skies" and "Sonny Jim in the Great American Game." The second included "Jewel" and "Sonny Jim" in "A Prince in Disguise."

James Detten contemplates the erection of an opera house at Stanton, Ia.

Burdette Bossert has opened a moving picture show in the town hall at Archer, Ia.

Frances Turner, of Minneapolis, has purchased the Princess theater building at Ida Grove, Ia. The fixtures have been sold to J. H. Pooler & Son.

Special Shows Succeed

In St. Paul, Minnesota, Special Children's Matinees Have Become an Institution in Many of the Residence District Theaters—These Are Fostered by the Women's Clubs and Are on Paying Basis—Details.

By Grace L. Polk, Minneapolis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ST. PAUL, MINN.—That good moving pictures for children will receive support if the public is educated to their possibilities and their need, has been shown in St. Paul, Minn., where the special children's moving picture matinee has come to be an established event in theaters in all the residence districts of the city.

The movement for better pictures for children was started and has been fostered by the women's clubs of St. Paul, who began their work in a small way nearly two years ago, experimenting with one or two story hours and pictures at a theater in the best residence district of the city. The project met with such success that the field of activity was widened until now every part of the city has its special programs for children, and the attendance at these matinees averages more than five hundred at each matinee every Saturday afternoon.

The rule of the women selecting the films and supporting the shows has been to get the best pictures available. Those which have been particularly successful have included "Alice in Wonderland," "The Wizard of Oz," "Rumpelstilskin," "Little Lord Fauntleroy" and "The Patchwork Girl of Oz."

The high and grade schools have supported the movement loyally and have had their work supplemented by historical tales and films of the noted books of fiction and scenic programs. The object of the entertainments is to furnish recreational and at the same time instructive pictures for the children, with the idea of keeping them away from night attendance and of keeping them in their own district.

The theater managers of St. Paul are enthusiastic about the work and lend all the co-operation possible to the women in getting good films and arranging programs which will attract and hold the interest of the youngsters.

Chief among the movers in this project, representing the theaters, have been Mr. Reisman of the Dale theater; Mr. Granstrom of the Park theater; Mr. Graham of the De Luxe theater, and Mr. Carter of the Venus theater. All of these men say that special programs for children have come to be an essential part of the moving picture business, and are unanimous in their opinion that there is a great need for more production of pictures especially for children. They are urging the producers to pay more attention to juvenile things, and say that the support given to the children's programs in St. Paul warrants a widespread interest in making more pictures for that purpose. Their experience also has been that it is feature pictures of elaborate detail and staging that are wanted, not the short insignificant stuff which is handed out when film houses are asked for something for children.

The children's matinees in St. Paul are all ten-cent affairs. Even the houses which always admit children for five cents charge double that amount for the special matinees, and find no difficulty in getting it.

Another feature which is adding substantially to the interest in the St. Paul children's matinees is the fact that local picures of the children themselves are shown at regular intervals. Local picture men take pictures of the children at their sports, on the streets, and even going into the theater, and these films are shown at the children's matinees later.

THE NEW CALHOUN THEATER.

The Calhoun theater, notable among neighborhood theaters of Minneapolis as the largest and best equipped, reopened January 29, after being closed for a fortnight for enlargement. The enlarged house seats 1,480, and is, with a single exception, the largest motion picture house in the city, the exception being the New Garrick, one of the downtown houses.

The Calhoun interior is in mosaic brickwork, with art glass inserts, Prosper Schwie, manager, declaring that more art glass has been used in the building than in any other building west of Chicago. A foyer thirty feet in depth extends the whole front of the theater and is fitted up for the use of patrons in oriental rugs and specially designed reed furniture. The stage is adorned with pergolas at each side, which are to be decorated each week in a manner fitting the plays being presented. Unusual stage effects are obtainable in the new theater by reason of the unusual free depth in front of the stage, which will permit the simulation of rain storms, odd lighting effects or whatever best suits the plays.

The house has been fitted with the most expensive type of theater chairs.

The Calhoun was opened eight months ago, with a seating capacity not much more than half its present capacity. Mr. Schwie became its first manager and has made special effort to make his house popular in his neighborhood. He has put on several special Saturday afternoon children's programs and expects to continue these. The auditorium will also be used occasionally for neighborhood meetings on days when matinees are not given.

A New Local Film Page.

The Minneapolis Journal now conducts a Sunday moving picture page, it being the last of the papers to come into line. The Tribune and News have had pages for some time, the Tribune on Sunday and the News devoting considerable space on Saturday to film news. The Journal page is in charge of Carleton W. Miles, who has done dramatic writing for the Journal for several years.

New New Orleans Theater

Race to Nail Strand as a House Name—Jac. Miller to Open Theater Early in March and Will Call It That Name—Newman Interests Had Announced a "Strand" to Be Ready in Summer—Hippodrome to Be a Skating Rink.

By George Cheney, New Orleans Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—Another big house, the fourth for New Orleans within a month, has been announced by Jac. Miller, at present managing the Hippodrome. He has taken a long term lease on a three-story building now being constructed at 1008-10 Canal street, and is fitting it up in the most modern fashion for opening some time during February.

He is calling it The Strand, and by opening his new house so soon, beats the Newman interests to the coveted name. The Newman interests recently announced that they would call their projected Baronne street theater, the Strand, but their place will not be ready for occupancy until the middle of the year. Mr. Miller has been a successful exhibitor for years in New Orleans, and, he says, he purposes to make the most advertising value of the name. In backing this up he will furnish the house with the very best in pictures and accessories. It will be conducted as a feature house exclusively. In general, it aims to live up to its name.

The Hippodrome, which Mr. Miller has been operating as a popular price house for some time, will be made a skating rink. The place has been leased to William Parsons, of New York, for the purpose. The skating craze is on New Orleans again, and it is believed that the opening of the rink, set for February 20, will be popular. A number of new stunts are promised by Mr. Parsons, who is a successful rink operator with interests in several cities in this and other countries.

COLLEGE THEATER OPEN.

The College theater, 327 St. Charles street, opened the first week in February. L. Billiet, well known in New Orleans as a real estate man, is the owner and manager. Two Simplex machines have been installed. The seating capacity is 340. Its present policy will be five cents.

SOUTHERN BUYING OFFICE.

The New Orleans office of the General Film has been made purchasing office for the entire Southern territory, according to announcement this week. Memphis was until recently purchasing headquarters for the South. J. E. Farrell, Southern division manager, stated in announcing this that he believed the relative importance of the New Orleans office justified the change. Incidentally, it adds something to the troubles and importance of the position of Manager H. G. Morrow, of the local General exchange. The change means the expenditure of a considerable sum additional to the New Orleans office monthly.

GET-ACQUAINTED PRICES.

On Wednesday, January 19, Ernest Boshringer, manager of the Triangle theater, announced a "get acquainted" policy to last fourteen days, during which time the New Orleans public was invited to any seat in the house for ten cents. The admission price heretofore has been 25 cents, and under the temporary new policy Manager Ernst Boehringer did not skimp any on his program, but showed nine reels of Triangle films. The opening was highly auspicious, but the patronage did not stand up as well as was expected. Mr. Boehringer believes, however, that two weeks' "treat" will get them coming his way—and in droves. Local exhibitors are watching his new move with interest.

FOX SOUTHERN HEADQUARTERS.

New Orleans is now the southern capital of the Fox Film Corporation. This week it was announced at the local Fox office that Southern Division headquarters had been shifted to New Orleans from Atlanta, Ga. This new arrangement was accomplished by Sam Dembow, southern division manager, who recently took a trip to New York City in connection with the shift. Mr. Dembow has taken up a permanent residence in New Orleans, and will handle the details of the southern division from this city. The southern division now includes New Orleans, Dallas and Atlanta, Washington having been put in the eastern division a few weeks ago.

E. E. Barron, from the Los Angeles office of Fox, has been named manager of the New Orleans office. Mr. Dembow states that plans are being prepared for a complete transformation of the Fox's New Orleans offices. The suite of offices in Common street will be refitted and enlarged.

Following the announcement of the shift of headquarters, Mr. Dembow held a conference with his southern division managers in New Orleans last Sunday.

H. R. Thayer with World Film.

From the New Orleans office of the World Film Corporation, more particularly from Manager Ross Hardenbrook, came the interesting bit of news this week that H. R. Thayer, well known in the southern territory, had conencted with World Film as traveling representative in three states, Louisana, Mississippi and Alabama.

E. P. Harris Now Assistant Manager.

Maurice F. Barr, manager of the Blue Birds Photoplays, Inc., announces the appointment of E. P. Harris as asistant manager. Mr. Barr returned this week from a swing over the southern territory which took him as far as Memphis, and he reports that Blue Bird films are going exceptionally strong. In Pine Bluff, Ark., Mr. Barr addressed a number of exhibitors and business men on the subject of "preparedness." The subject matter did not refer especially to the film business, but to patriotism for their country that film men felt.

Special Essanay Representative.

E. C. Kirkpatrick, formerly Paramount manager here, has been named special representative of Essanay in this territory to handle "The Strange Case of Mary Page."

Interesting Gulf States Items.

Three live wires from the New Orleans territory were in the city last week shaking hands and booking pictures along the row. S. L. Taylor of The Cozy, at Pass Christian, has found it profitable to give away a dinner set as a prize each Saturday night. His two friends in town with him were T. F. Ware of the Elk's theater at Demopolis, La., and Lee Lanier of the Pastime theater at Bunkie, La.

G. V. Vivirito, live wire supply man of Baronne street, reported this week to the World man that he had supplied two model B Edisons to the Ideal theater, Cadiz and Dryades, which recently was purchased by Mrs. Henry Lazarus. Mrs. Lazarus has sold her Happyland theater, 3130-32 Burgundy street, to Harry Olsen, who has made a number of improvements.

The Acme, 824 Baronne street, has closed its doors, principally on account of poor location.

Mars' theater, St. Roch and Roman streets, New Orleans, has been remodeled to seat 1,000 persons; new opera chairs have been put in, and Manager G. B. Mars reports splendid success with three serials, "The Red Circle," "Graft" and "Wallingford."

Oak Grove, La., has passed an ordinance making it unlawful to project moving pictures on Sunday. A penalty of both fine and imprisonment is provided.

Leon Hammonds, who has been manager of the Saenger theater since its opening, in Alexandria, last fall, has been transferred to Shreveport to manage the Saenger house in that city, and will be succeeded in Alexandria by Park Moore.

The Triangle program is receiving an enthusiastic patronage in the several Louisiana cities in which it has opened during the past two weeks. In Alexandria it opened on January 18 at the Saenger theater to big houses. From ten in the morning until ten at night the crowds were so great that they became unmanageable. Before six o'clock all past records of the theater were shattered. A number of times the management had to shut down the box office and refuse the sale of tickets.

Donaldsonville, La., got a brand new and modern picture show on January 23 with the opening of Jimmy's theater, owned by James Von Lotten. The initial bill was Clara Kimball Young in "Trilby."

A new gold finished moving picture curtain has been installed in the Princess, Jennings, La., by J. W. Allen of Dallas, Tex.

INDIANA NEWS LETTER.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

Public Opinion for Sunday Shows.

LAFAYETTE, IND.—Public opinion and editorial expression on the subject of Sunday opening of the picture theaters at Lafayette, Ind., all seem to favor the exhibitors, and the issue of the test case now in court is viewed hopefully. Lafayette is the only town of any size in Indiana where the Sunday show is not the rule.

Carl Voorhees Opens Theater at Flora.

The Tokio theater, Flora, Ind., after being closed two weeks for repairs and alterations, has been reopened by Carl Voorhees, the new owner. Besides the improvements, a new picture machine has been added. Voorhees bought the house of Kenneth Piper.

Strand at Shelbyville to Open.

William C. Meloy thinks he will be able to open the Strand, Shelbyville, February 16. New electric signs for the front of the house have arrived and the $5,000 pipe organ is being put in place.

Yes, It Acts That Way.

They have a wolf in the wilds near Medaryville, Ind., and with due regard for all of the possibilities, Charles W. Russell, Ben Turner, R. E. Davis, Frank Hirshman and George Miller have arranged a round-up with a camera man on the job. Some say there are two wolves, but this suggestion has put several fellows under suspicion.

The German war pictures being shown under the auspices of the Chicago Tribune have played a "hang over" engagement at the Palace theater, Frankfort, Ind.

The free matinee has been started for every Wednesday afternoon at the New Star theater, Princeton, Ind., the merchants of the city to the number of nineteen issuing the tickets with purchases. The move being part of a plan to increase the midweek shopping.

Manager Charles of the Moon and Star theaters, Vincennes, Ind., has bought two new Schiller pianos and has installed them in the two houses.

GOLF STICKS AND HOPES.

When "Kid" Nichols returns to Kansas City after placing Blue Bird films, he has one method of resting up—and that is to play golf. Mr. Nichols is widely known as a ball player, and he was one of the best in the country. But lest some moving picture manager or felow-salesman should fear to tackle him on the links, it is revealing no confidence to say that his batting average is not as high with the driver and mashie, as it was on the diamond. But he is like 99.99 per cent. of the golf players—he's always hoping! Mr. Nichols is not as much of a dub as one might infer, however—he has won some prizes in the Swope Park Golf Club, and is a very popular member of that organization. And when the film golf club is organized in Kansas City he will set a stiff pace.

"Kid" Nichols.

Geo. Bowles Will Advertise "U" Films.

George Bowles, for the past five years in the newspaper business, recently a reporter on the Kansas City Star, has been appointed publicity agent of the Universal at Kansas City, succeeding Homer G. Gill.

Homer G. Gill Managing New Office.

The Associated Film Service Co. opened Kansas City offices February 1, at 319-25 Gloyd building, with H. G. Gill in charge, to cover Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa and Oklahoma. The initial consignment of films has arrived, and the office is already engaged in correspondence and booking.

Manager Johnson of Chanute Robbed.

D. D. Johnson, owner of the Princess theater at Chanute, Kan., was held up last summer while carrying home his day's receipts, and robbed, incidentally receiving a shot in the face. He has now purchased a Ford automobile, and can outrun future attempts at robbery.

Apollo Nearly Ready.

The remodeling of the Apollo theater, 33d and Troost, Kansas City, is coming along very rapidly and it is expected that the new balcony the manager is erecting will be completed in a few weeks. This will make the Apollo one of the largest suburban houses in the city. With the completion of this addition, the present girl ushers will be dispensed with and boys put in their places. Another change will be the elimination of the pianist and the substitution of an orchestra.

Ashland to Seat 2,000.

R. Stedman, manager of the Ashland theater, 24th and Elmwood, Kansas City, is remodeling his theater from a seating capacity of 1,000 to one that will hold 2,000 people. When this is completed, Mr. Stedman will have practically the largest capacity of any of the residence district theaters. The Apollo, when its new balcony is done, will also be among the largest, but the seating capacity will not quite equal that of the Ashland.

New Mutual Bookers.

F. L. Kiltz, local manager for the Mutual Company, announces that he is making several changes in his office force, getting some new bookers, shippers, clerks and other employes, and is letting out several of his present help. From Oklahoma City, where he has been with the Universal people, C. A. Maddox comes into the Mutual office as one of the new bookers.

Big Picture in Village

Proof Positive of the Popularity of Moving Pictures in the Rural Communities—Exhibitor Johnson, of Platte City, Missouri Village of 700, Booked "The Birth of a Nation" and Made Good—One Man Walked Seven Wintry Miles to See It.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

KANSAS CITY, KAN.—George C. Johnson, manager of the moving picture theater at Platte City, Mo., a town of 700 population near Kansas City, took a long chance (so his friends said) when he booked the "Battle Cry of Peace." But he knew what he was doing!

The day after he had booked the picture, he was in Kansas City and saw L. J. Scott of the V-L-S-E.

"How does it look?" Mr. Scott asked anxiously.

"Look? Bully! I've sold $40 worth of seats already."

The picture was booked by phone a week before its showing; ten minutes later reserved seats were on sale. Mr. Johnson advertised thoroughly, using 24-sheet posters, 6-sheet, 1-sheet and window cards. The extreme cold weather hit the town that week, frosting the windows—so 600 Heralds were printed, and these with other literature were mailed to each family in a radius of six miles of Platte City. The newspapers received much literature, complimentary tickets, and half page display ads, with cuts for reading notices.

The day of the showing was one of the coldest in several years, and roads were almost impassable. But the matinee was well attended. To that and the night show people came as far as 18 miles, one man walking seven miles to see the picture.

The previous high water mark in receipts in Platte City was at the opera house at a time when weather was fine and roads excellent—and that mark was $110 below the record of the "Battle Cry of Peace!"

The prices charged were 25 cents, 50 cents and 75 cents. There was one row of 25 cent seats, two of 50 cents. The rest of the 350 seating capacity was 75.

Mr. Johnson hired for the occasion five pieces from the orchestra which had played for the same picture at the Willis Wood in Kansas City—the first time an orchestra had ever been used in a moving picture show at Platte City.

The appreciation of the enterprise was indicated when, after the show, several people offered to help make good any loss Mr. Johnson had sustained. He replied to them that he was more than $80 to the good.

Changes in Management.

"Our Opera House," one of the theaters in Eldorado, Kan., is now under different management, E. H. McClintock being the present owner. The house is a very good one, and has a seating capacity of 600.

Dr. Pingree, who, with Mr. Williams, has been one of the owners of the Royal theater, Neodesha, Kan., has sold his interest in the theater to Mr. Wilson, brother of E. R. Wilson, owner of the Snark, at Independence.

Mr. L. W. Bloom, of the White Way theater, Concordia, Kan., has sold out his interest in his show to Mr. McCrary and will be out of the moving picture game for a while. Mr. McCrary is a newcomer in the picture business.

Jesse E. Smith has succeeded Mr. E. E. Parnell as manager of the Hippodrome theater, Springfield, Mo. This house has lately been leased and opened by the Hippodrome Company, of which R. A. Harris, Blytheville, Ark., is a leading director.

New Theaters in Kansas.

It is reported that Mr. C. A. McGuigan, of Topeka, Kan., is now erecting a new theater in that place and will probably handle it under the name of the Gem, which show house he is now running in Topeka. Mr. McGuigan was a recent visitor in Kansas City, coming up on a business trip.

William Conrad, of Arkansas City, Kan., has just opened a new theater in that place, and is operating it under the name of the Strand. Six hundred is the claim made by the owners as to the number of people it will seat.

C. C. Yost, Hutchinson, Kan., is contemplating opening a new moving picture house the first of April in Hutchinson. Present plans include a seating capacity of about 700. The name of this show house is to be the Theater Royal.

Frank Newman, manager of the Royal theater, Kansas City, is contemplating opening his new house, the Regent, on East 12th St., some time the first two weeks in March. Its opening is being delayed on account of inability to get the front completed. Among the features that Mr. Newman will introduce is a ten-piece orchestra.

Fred Savage, of Hutchinson, Kan., will open a new moving picture house in that city the first of April, which will be one of the classiest theaters in Kansas, as well as one of the largest. From 1,200 to 1,500 is to be the seating capacity. It is the plan of Mr. Savage to play moving pictures and vaudeville and he is building it with this object in view.

The Strand theater is to be the name of a new moving picture house to be opened in Salina, Kan., by Herbert Thacher, the middle of March. This is one of the best towns in Kansas for moving pictures, and for that reason a good house will be erected. The seating capacity will be about 1,100.

ASSOCIATED SERVICE MANAGER.

Homer G. Gill, the manager of the Associated Film Service Co. at its newly established office in Kansas City, has had a broad and varied experience in the moving picture business. Starting as an operator, he has now landed as an executive, with good opportunity to show the good equipment secured for such a position in the different branches of the industry. Mr. Gill began as an operator in Nebraska; he later managed houses, the Lyric at Grand Island and the Edison at Hastings. Then he hooked up with R. C. Cropper, in 1912, with whom he served until going to the Associated. This connection was with the Rite Service Film Exchanges of Wichita, Kan. A year later Mr. Gill joined the Universal forces in Wichita, and was later transferred to the Oklahoma City branch. After a few trips out, he discarded the grip and became active in the office, handling publicity work and developing the supply business. He then came to Kansas City for the Universal, where the supply department was placed in his charge; he developed it from practically nothing to a large volume, and then his storehouse of knowledge was again tapped to develop the publicity department, which has rapidly gained considerable momentum.

Put Ban On Useful Film

Dallas Censor Board of Appeals Forbids Showing "The Miracle of Life," a Mutual Offering—Many Medical Men Present at Showing Appreciate Picture's Value—Allow Two Showings to Women Only.

By S. A. M. Harrison, Dallas Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DALLAS, TEXAS.—A special showing of "The Miracle of Life" was made at the Old Mill theater in Dallas, Tuesday, January 25. This was for the purpose of giving the appeals board a second view of the picture at the request of the Mutual offices. The present appeals board is not entirely the same as the one which turned down the "Miracle" under the old law.

The viewing audience consisted of the censor, the entire board of appeals, about a score of physicians, members of the Hulsey organization (owners of the theater), Manager Clegg and others of the Mutual offices and two representatives of the trade press—C. A. Walker, of Motion Picture Journal, and S. A. M. Harrison, of Moving Picture World.

As the audience had divided into groups, the two press representatives agreed to take different portions and pool results. The World representative mixed with the medicos and Mr. Walker took the appeals board. The latter got the best of it.

The conversation indulged in by the gentlemen of the medical profession was not exactly pertinent to the subject, though many laudatory comments were made. All seemed to consider it a fine picture. One said he thought all young girls budding into womanhood ought to see it. Another expressed the desire for its viewing by one of his patients who had already wrecked her health and life by just the methods displayed. They did not talk much, seeming too interested in the picture, and afterward the gist of their words was that it ought to be passed.

But the board took a different view. The censor, Mrs. Finley, and President S. D. Hadley indulged in a very learned discussion of the various methods of checking childbirth and the evils attendant, but they didn't seem to think a public warning would be beneficial.

However, the board finally consented to a couple of special matinees for ladies only, which will be given at the same theater February 14 and 15. It is hoped that the ladies will take such a view of the picture that a demand for a general showing will be considered, in which event Manager Clegg promises to get a new print. This is not entirely necessary, as the Mutual takes mighty good care of their films; Mr. Clegg's idea being merely to give the best showing possible.

FILM MEN TO PLAY BALL.

The film trade will be represented by two teams in the municipal baseball league this year. They will be the Consolidated Film Company team under "Smiling" Jimmy Kelly and the Motion Picture Men's team under "Pop" (E. T.) Peter.

IMPROVEMENT IN OKLAHOMA.

Business in that part of Oklahoma in Dallas exchange territory, seems to be gradually picking up. E. R. McDuffie, special agent for "Mary Page," recently returned from that district and is quite optimistic over the outlook. He says the exhibitors are getting away from the idea that vaudeville must be shown along with the pictures. However, prices are still demoralized. Oklahoma City, the metropolis of the state, shows pictures with a 10-cent top, most of the houses charging only 5 cents for five to seven reels.

John S. Slocum, owner of the Woodman theater at Mangum, does not believe in the 5-cent idea. He was in Dallas this week, and in a conversation with the World representative said he was at present charging 10 cents for regular days and 15 cents for features, and later expected to go on a straight 15-cent basis, and at that he is getting more business than the 5-cent houses. "John" is quite enthusiastic over the "Good show for a good price" principle.

"Excuse Me" Not Apologizing.

Coke Horn, manager of the Queen theater at Waco, recently wired in the Pathe office for his bill for January 7 and 8. In reply Mr. Underwood wired back, "Your bill for January 7 and 8 'Excuse Me.'" Right away quick Mr. Horn called up the Dallas office of the Gold Roosters and asked for his bill. Again Mr. Underwood replied, "Excuse Me." "H—l," said Mr. Horn, "I don't want your apologies, I want to know what I am going to show." Convulsions at this end of the line, followed by explanations. Another laugh for "Excuse Me," and one not on the bill.

After all, there is only one moving picture paper that you really need, and this is IT, conducted by the largest and most experienced staff of editors and correspondents.

"Girl and the Game" Going Well.

The Signal serial, "The Girl and the Game," is going well in this district. The Newport at Dallas will start it February 4 and 5. As a preliminary quite a number of advertising stunts are in anticipation. During the previous week postal card pictures of Helen Holmes are being given to the fair sex at the theater and on certain days every patron receives an invitation in ticket form to witness the opening as the guest of the house. Special Representative Tetrick wants to pull off a parade on the opening day if he can get a good enough showing and may make a special appeal to the railroad fraternity.

Three prints are in use in the territory, and a fourth may be necessary later. The Mission theater at Sulphur Springs, Tex., is one of the three first-run houses, and Manager D. R. Barnes is well pleased.

Goff Will Visit Dallas.

A. W. Goff, assistant general manager V-L-S-E, will visit Dallas for a few days in the early part of February. Mr. Goff is expected to arrive February 4, and will hold a meeting of all the company's salesmen in the district.

Dallas Trade Notes.

The WORLD representative paid a visit January 25 to the Cliff Queen theater, a suburban house run by George M. Blackburn. It is an unusually large house for a suburb, seating about 700, but is light and airy and rather inviting. The projection, too, is satisfactory. Mr. Blackburn is at present using only one machine; says several of his patrons have expressed a liking for the short intermissions as being restful to the eyes. His house being plenty large for the patronage, time is no object.

Ernest C. Leeves, traveling for "The Girl and the Game," was married to Miss Izetta Bonner in Dallas January 11. Mr. Leeves came in off the road, saying he was in on a little personal business and no one in the office knew of the marriage till it was all over.

C. A. Gibson has been added to the selling force of V-L-S-E in the Dallas district.

NEW SAN FRANCISCO THEATER.

1,500-Seat House to Be Built on Mason Street.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—The Mason Street Improvement Company has taken a lease on property on Mason street, near Market, San Francisco, and a theater with a seating capacity of about 1,500 is to be erected shortly at an estimated cost of $100,000. This location is adjoining the lot occupied by the Tivoli opera house at the time of the fire of 1906, and is but a half a block distant from the Empress, Pantages, Tivoli and Market Street theaters. The house will have a large balcony and will be fitted throughout in the most approved style. The corporation which is to conduct the theater is controlled by Irving C. Ackerman, one of the owners of the Hippodrome circuit of houses, and S. H. Levin, owner of the Haight Street theater, and will be under the direct management of the latter.

CUTS CENSORSHIP STAMP.

The management of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit has decided to eliminate the tail notice attached to the ends of films, announcing that the production has been "Passed by the National Board of Censorship." In speaking of this E. B. Johnson, secretary of the firm says: "Exhibitors as a whole are opposed to the censorship of moving pictures, yet at each performance in their theaters they call attention to this blight on the business, and in so doing really create an idea that censorship is necessary. At some performances this caption appears from three to five times and serves to keep the proposition in the public eye. Censorship is not wanted and the easiest way to kill it off is to let it be forgotten."

The executive committee is considering the omission of the word "censorship" from its name and early action on the matter is expected.

G. A. Metcalfe to Open at Seattle.

G. A. Metcalfe, of San Francisco, who recently opened a branch supply house at Los Angeles, is preparing to invade the Northwest at an early date, and as soon as the weather clears will establish a branch at Seattle, Wash. Stock for this is being assembled and will be shipped north soon. This new branch will be in charge of Glenn H. Waring, for five years with George Breck of this city.

To Improve Haight Street House.

S. H. Levin, owner of the Haight Street theater, has arranged to install a balcony in this house to increase the seating capacity, and will make other improvements to represent an investment of at least $15,000. This house will then become known as the Haight theater, and, upon the completion of a downtown theater in which S. H. Levin is interested, will be managed by Alex Levin.

"Ne'er-Do-Well" Making Film History.

Despite the heavy rains that have fallen throughout the past week, the Portola theater, on Market street, has been unable to cope with the crowds desirous of seeing the "Ne'er-Do-Well." On the opening night such a crowd was on hand when the last performance was given that a midnight matinee was offered and the house was well filled, although there had been no opportunity of advertising this special show. Hundreds are being turned away at every performance, even including the first one, which commences at half past nine o'clock in the morning. The two copies of this production which are working in the San Francisco territory are booked solid for months in advance, and a third will probably be sent here. The Turner & Dahnken Circuit has booked this attraction for the opening of its magnificent new house at Reno, Nev., during the second week in February and a brilliant "first night" is predicted.

Producing Company Opens Offices.

The Bibloclassic Film Company, represented by Eric Goestl, has opened offices in the Hearst Building and is planning to engage shortly in the production of feature attractions. A site has been offered for a studio at Redwood City by the Chamber of Commerce of that place.

World Film Corporation Activities.

Denham Palmer, western division manager for this concern, is now visiting all of the western offices, having left for Los Angeles recently. Manager Ralph Clark of San Francisco branch states that the bookings on "Camille" have been wonderful, this production being in demand everywhere in the territory. It recently closed a highly successful run at the Portola theater here and was shown for four days at the Hippodrome in Oakland. It has been booked for presentation again in that city, the Turner & Dahnken Circuit having booked it, thereby breaking its established policy of showing, nothing but first run productions at its house there. "The Rack," with Alice Brady, has just completed a five-day run at the Unique in San Francisco, the policy of this house having also been altered to enable it to be shown for this length of time. The salesforce at the local branch has been augmented of late by the addition of N. O. Turner, who formerly conducted the Majestic at Chico, Cal.

Niles Studio to Reopen.

The Essanay studio at Niles, Cal., which has been closed since the departure of G. M. Anderson for Chicago, is to be opened again shortly under the management of J. J. Roberts, who is expected there soon from Los Angeles with a company.

San Francisco Briefs.

H. F. Charles, of the Southern Orchestra Company of Los Angeles, which represents the American Photo Player Co. in the southern territory, was a recent visitor here.

Another recent visitor here was Mr. Schaeffer, of the De Luxe theater of Los Angeles. He was looking over local houses to secure ideas for a new theater to be erected in that city at a cost of about $150,000.

Harry Leonhardt, district manager for the Fox Film Corporation, has returned from his recent visit to New York, returning to California by way of the Northwest.

J. L. Warner, manager of the New Film Corporation, which recently established an exchange here, is preparing to start out on a trip through California to meet exhibitors and ascertain their needs.

W. M. Roche, formerly with the World Film, has taken a position as booker with the All Star Feature Distributors, Inc.

The La Bonita theater, at Twenty-fourth avenue and Clement street, has discontinued its policy of showing a regular program and will confine its attention to feature attractions.

The Market Street theater has given up its regular service and has become a feature house, showing Mutual Service. Two changes will be made each week and the first attraction for the week of Feb. 6, when the new policy is inaugurated, will be "The Thoroughbred." A Mutual weekly and a comedy will also be on this program.

A new model Motiograph has been installed in the operating room of the Rex theater on Polk street by the new management of this house, the installation having been made by Edward H. Kemp.

California Business Pointers.

S. J. Smith and S. N. Delanoy, of the Park theater, Alameda, Calif., have placed an order with G. A. Metcalfe, of San Francisco, for a new Power Cameragraph No. 6A.

T. G. Morris is one of the lessees and is the manager of the new M. & F. theater recently opened on Twenty-fourth street, San Francisco.

The Francis theater at Corcoran, Calif., is now under the management of A. J. Cates, who has purchased the interests of W. H. Eliget.

W. M. Englehart has opened a moving picture theater in Masonic Hall, Truckee, Calif., and is showing William Fox and Paramount features.

O. L. Barton has opened a moving picture theater at Hobart Mills, a lumbering town in the Sierras.

The Majestic at Porterville, Calif., has been taken over by Gallagher & Stewart, who will conduct it as the New Porterville theater. Road attractions and special feature pictures will be presented.

C. F. Roberts is making plans for installing and opening an airdrome at Hanford, Calif., as soon as weather permits.

Nick Chiuras has purchased the Star theater at Colusa, Cal., from Harry Kufolias.

The Turner & Dahnken theater at Watsonville, Cal., is now under the management of Clyde Earls, who succeeds J. G. Hunter. The latter has been made manager of the new house soon to be opened at Reno, Nev.

G. F. Madsen has purchased the Hayward theater at Hayward, Cal., from Busby & Davis and will feature vaudeville once a week as in the past.

The equipment of the Lyric at Watsonville, Cal., has been taken over by the Turner & Dahnken Circuit and the house has been closed.

The Board of Education of Sacramento, Cal., has purchased a moving picture outfit and is making arrangements with film exchanges for educational films.

Seattle Censors Active

Board Announces That Any Member Can Ban Any Picture Not Approved by National Board—Majority of Five Members Can Ban Any Picture—Big Sociological Offering, "Smashing the Vice Trust," Prohibited.

Special to Moving Picture World from Seattle News Service.

SEATTLE, WASH.—After a time of comparative inactivity, the motion picture censors of Seattle have now blossomed out into full eagerness to do and dare. Hereafter, they announce that any one member of their body will be permitted to place the ban on any picture not approved by the national board of censors. Such pictures as have been passed by the national board will also be prohibited, they announce, by a majority of five members of their board.

A city ordinance, passed by the council, already provides that pictures which have been tabooed by the national board are automatically also prohibited from being exhibited in Seattle. The new policy, however, goes further inasmuch as it will give any member of the board power to pass action on such pictures which have not been reviewed by the national board at all.

Even the presence in the film of Gov. Whitman of New York couldn't save "Smashing the Vice Trust" from the axe of the Seattle motion picture censors. In this play, Gov. Whitman, then district attorney, is shown issuing warrants for the arrest of a number of vice traffickers. The action of the drama, of course, is in the hands of regular players.

Clarence Hill, well known here for many years as traveling man for the Pathe company, but now working independently, had negotiated for the exhibition of this picture at the Melbourne theater. The performance was to begin on a Sunday. It was not until the Friday before the scheduled Sunday that the motion picture censors got their work in. They suddenly called a meeting, reviewed the picture a second time, and on Saturday morning put the ban on it.

"Without reference to the merit of their decision," Hill protests, "they should have at least given more than an eleventh hour notice of their intended action."

THE ALHAMBRA TO REOPEN.

Managers Jensen and Von Herberg, of the Greater Theaters Company, who own a string of theaters in Seattle and Portland, are having the Alhambra theater in Seattle remodeled, and it will soon be reopened as a photoplay and vaudeville house combined.

The Alhambra was for years the most pretentious motion picture house in Seattle. It was the first large theater operated by Jensen and Von Herberg. Since then they have acquired the beautiful Liberty theater and the even more pretentious Coliseum theater here, as well as the Mission. All these playhouses are located in the heart of the downtown district.

ODORS AS HELPS TO PICTURES.

People who have visited the American theater recently have frequently remarked on the pleasing odors that prevail. This is not an accident, but it is accompilshed after a well conceived design. In art there is everything in the proper atmosphere, is the way Manager John Hamrick looks at it. So, when "Camille" was shown, the theater was scented with the odor of the blood red rose. Egyptian incense was used when "A Million Dollars," a tale of Oriental mystery, was shown. For the "Butterfly on the Wheel," hyacinth was used.

The Coliseum's Fine Orchestra.

The new Coliseum theater in Seattle has, without doubt, the highest-salaried orchestra of any photoplay house in the United States—probably the world. With Mischa Gutterson, recently of the Chicago Grand Opera Co., as the leader, a Russian orchestra of eight is interpreting the pictures at the Coliseum, and their combined salaries, according to a contract binding for a year, total $50,000. Mischa Gutterson is also solo violinist. He studied in Kiel, Russia. The other members of the orchestra are: Leon Strashun, first violinist, who studied in St. Petersburg; Liberius Kauptman, pianist, who studied in Geneva; Katharee Wineland, first violinist, who studied in Brussels; Fortunato Nimlas, cellist, who studied in Rome; Phelps Cowan, organist, of New York; Joseph Schilling, until recently organist of St. Paul's Church, Chicago; Charles Fischer, xylophonist, recently of the Chicago Grand Opera Co.; George Gutterson, bas violinist, who studied in Moscow, Russia.

Mischa Gutterson.

Seattle Exchange Notes.

E. R. Redlich, manager of the Northwest exchange of the Fox Film Company, has returned from California, where he spent several days in conference with Harry Leonhardt, western division manager for William Fox. Redlich is back in town now chockful of "pep."

Getting a News Picture

Selig-Tribune Cameraman, E. B. Lockwood, of Portland, Has Romantic Struggle With Deep Snows in Cascade Range to Get Picture of Big Snow Slide on Great Northern Railway at Corea—Overcomes Great Difficulties.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SPOKANE, WASH.—Wallowing through snow from six to fifty feet deep, part of the time on his stomach and at other times on boughs of fir trees broken for the purpose, to keep him from being buried in the snow of the Cascade mountains of Washington, E. B. Lockwood, representative of the Selig-Tribune News Film Service, managed to get moving pictures of rescue work following a big snow slide on the Great Northern Railway, at Corea, near the summit of the Cascades. Eight persons lost their lives in it and many others were injured. Mr. Lockwood arrived in Spokane Thursday, January 27, with his pictures and returned from here to his home in Portland.

He was taking pictures of school teachers in Portland when the news reached him and had but an hour to take train to Seattle en route to the accident, which was between Seattle and Spokane. Telling of his experiences, he said:

"I had an idea that the railway officials would not welcome camera men with open arms, so when our train reached Skykomish I dropped off the side of the train away from the station and cached my camera. I then went to the hotel pool room and posed as a timber cruiser and there became acquainted with the proprietor and through his assistance and that of a Seattle newspaper man I was able to get a guide and two packers. Knowing that we would not be allowed to reach the scene of the wreck over the right of way, we took the trail overland, leaving Skykomish at 4 a. m. Monday. We had only three pairs of snowshoes, and as I was the lightest and carried only the grub, I did without them. The snow was about eight feet deep on the level and we expected to make the 11 miles to Scenic by 3 p. m., but did not reach there until 6 p. m. and our grub was all gone. At one place near Scenic we crossed a big slide and it took us 45 minutes to make 75 feet. Reaching Scenic I again posed as a cruiser and was able to deceive the railway officials and detectives who were in the hotel to prevent camera men from getting pictures. They kept many other picture men several miles back in a car.

"On the way to the wreck Tuesday morning, we struck a bad place and I was carried 250 feet down the mountain before I was able to grab a sapling. Later I fell in the honeycombed snow and was rescued by the packers. We reached the place of the accident at 2 p. m. and I made my first set-up 300 yards from the scene. Between this point and 200 feet of the wreck I made four pictures and each time it was necessary to knock-down pack and set up the machine. Other pictures were made closer, and as I was about to leave they dynamited the snow on the track and I obtained pictures. Two bodies were uncovered in this blast."

Mr. Lockwood suffered many bruises and skin abrasions in his fall and slide down the mountain. Both coast and local dailies tell of other picture men being denied the right to walk on company property or take pictures, and of their being returned to Seattle.

RESULT OF PROHIBITION.

Saloon at Newport, Wash., Becomes Theater.

Coincident with the inception of the prohibition law in Washington, January 1, D. M. Mongone of Newport, Wash., closed his saloon and immediately started the remodeling of the building, which he owned, for a moving picture show. He has now opened a place seating 350 persons, has put in a modern screen, built in a rest room and purchased a Simplex machine and equipment from the Spokane branch Mutual.

Inter-State Office in Spokane.

The Inter-State Film Corporation, formerly the Warner's Features, then the United Film, has established an office at Lincoln street and Main avenue, Spokane. B. F. Hubbard, who originally came here with the Warner's Features, and who later worked for other local exchanges when the United got into difficulties, is in charge of the local branch.

Spokane Film Hits.

Griffith's "Let Katy Do It" had an excellent patronage in Spokane, at the Liberty. Manager Ralph Ruffner arranged a special children's matinee for Tuesday, January 25, and hundreds of school children crowded the theater immediately after school. A Keystone comedy, "The Great Pearl Tangle," completed the program.

"Damaged Goods," which was shown to capacity audiences at the Class A several weeks ago, has been booked for a second run at the Majestic four days, starting January 30. Manager A. H. McMillan also announces that he has arranged for the second run Mutual Masterpictures.

His weekly program hereafter will be: Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, William Fox productions; Wednesday and Thursday, Mutual Masterpictures, and Friday and Saturday, Pathe Gold Rooster plays.

Louise Welch and Lon Chaney in "Stronger Than Death," Murdock MacQuarrie in "Babbling Tongues," and a comedy, "Flivver's Terrible Past," were leading attractions presented by Manager B. W. Copeland at the Rex during the week.

DENVER NEWS LETTER.

By E. C. Day, Denver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Clifford Boyd Managing Tabor Grand.

DENVER, COLO.—Clifford Boyd, named manager of the Tabor Grand opera house to succeed Billy Ireland, has actively assumed his new duties. Boyd was formerly manager of the Walnut theater in Cincinanti. He had been active in the theatrical game in the Ohio city for 12 years, being associated with the Harry Hart interests most of this time.

Dorsey and Briggs Booking Patriotic Films.

L. T. "Doc" Dorsey, former exhibitor of Galesburg, Ill., is touring Colorado and New Mexico with "Guarding Old Glory" for which he has purchased the states' rights. While in Denver he effected a partnership with E. P. Briggs, former owner of the Lyric and Majestic theaters at Cripple Creek and the two will go on the road.

Frank Harris Loses His Mother.

Frank Harris, manager of the V-L-S-E exchange in Denver, was called to Spokane by the death of his mother. He left Denver on receipt of a telegram saying that his parent was very low, but she died before he could reach Spokane. Mr. Harris is well known and well liked here and the sympathy of all the exchange men and exhibitors of this district goes out to him.

Lee Lazelle Manages Cheyenne House.

Lee Lazelle, formerly of Los Angeles, has been named manager of the Amuse theater at Cheyenne, Wyo. This is Karl Ray's house.

C. Kreiling Buys Theater.

The 22nd Avenue theater located at 22nd avenue and Washington streets has been sold by C. C. Priest to Charlie Kreiling, formerly a member of the Universal exchange staff.

L. E. Schaeffer Back from Long Trip.

L. E. Schaeffer, road man for the V-L-S-E, has just returned from a 30-day trip on which he visited Western Nebraska, Wyoming and the Black Hills. Thirty below zero weather prevailed in South Dakota when he was there and Wyoming was under a mantle of snow.

The Pastime moving picture theater at Gehring, Nebr., has been sold by Cross & Cross to Armbruster & Co.

Manager Megahan of the Strand theater, Denver's newest downtown theater, has gone to the Pacific Coast for a much needed vacation and rest.

Mrs. Helen Webster, who as Miss Helen Jones is known to the moving picture interests of the Rocky Mountain region as one of the most enterprising of photoplay exhibitors, has just completed work on a new theater at Wheatland, Wyo. It cost $15,000 and is one of the prettiest and most modern theaters in the State of Wyoming. The new playhouse will be opened on March 1.

MANAGER OF PORTLAND PATHE.

The snapshot herewith is typical of Walter S. Wessling, manager of Portland's Pathe Exchange. Wessling always works with his hat on. "Walt," as all the boys on Film Row know him, has made the Pathe Exchange one of the most hustling film offices in Portland. Until recently, when his other duties demanded his entire time, he was a member of the Portland censor board, appointed by the Mayor as one of the film men's representatives. Mr. Wessling entered his career in the film business as secretary of the Brooklyn Amusement Company, later becoming president of the Northwest Amusement Company. When the Eclectic Film Exchange opened in Portland he took charge of their shipping department and when Pathe took over the exchange he rose to booker, road man, assistant manager and manager.

Harrington Goes to Universal.

Jay Harrington, for the past year road man out of Portland and Seattle for the Mutual Film and who has recently been exploiting "The Girl and the Game" in Oregon territory, has resigned his position with the Mutual to become road man for Universal, with headquarters in Seattle. He will cover the territory served by the Seattle and Portland Universal exchanges.

"Ne'er-Do-Well" at Heilig.

The People's Amusement Company has secured the "Ne'er-Do-Well" for Portland and will show the picture at the Heilig, Portland's largest theater, at 25 cents admission during the week of Feb. 13.

Unger in Portland.

J. J. Unger, special representative of Metro, spent a week in Portland supervising the moving of the local Metro exchange from 72 Broadway to 14 North Ninth street. The new office occupies three times the space of the Broadway room and the comforts of the visiting exhibitor have been considered in fitting it up. Mr. Unger will visit Seattle, Butte and Denver before returning to San Francisco.

Local Items of Interest.

Harry C. Watts, of the Chicago Herald, was in Portland recently arranging with the Oregonian to publish the story of Pathe's "Iron Claw."

Sam Montgomery has opened the Hawthorne theater, Portland.

After being passed up by other exhibitors, the People's theater, Portland, has been showing the Vitagraph serial, "The Goddess," with great success.

John Simpkins has opened a moving picture theater at Aurora, Oregon.

The Opera House, McMinnville, Oregon, W. N. Brown, owner, has closed.

Prohibition and Pictures

Conditions in Portland Under Dry Rule Reviewed—Exhibitors Report Varied Effects on Business—Prohibition Helps Downtown Theaters, But Not Suburban Houses, Is Consensus of Opinion.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

PORTLAND, OREGON.—This state and city came under prohibition rule January 1, 1916, and saloons and breweries were closed to the sale and manufacture of brews and liquors. With prohibition came the many conjectures as to its effect on business and particularly on the moving picture business. A month has passed, and while the severe weather has naturally caused a falling off of business, a review of the conditions for the month of January shows that the closing of saloons in Portland has had but little effect on the moving picture business. The sentiment of exhibitors on the subject shows the effect of prohibition to differ according to the location of their theaters.

Three large theaters are operated in the district where working men congregate and where, prior to prohibition, the working men's saloons flourished. Famous among these saloons was Erickson's once reputed to have had the largest bar in the country, and Blazier's, where, before reform came to the West, the knights of the forest flirted with the games of chance at the green topped tables. A block from the sites of Erickson's and Blazier's saloons are located the Burnside and Casino theaters. George M. Harris, manager of the Burnside, expressed himself on the business conditions after one month of prohibition as follows:

"The first few days after prohibition went into effect I noticed a small falling off in trade. However, things soon readjusted themselves, and offhand I would say that my business has increased 35 per cent. over January last year. While many of the saloons in this neighborhood have become soft drink places, a number of them have closed and men come to my theater who formerly frequented saloons for pastime. I find my audiences more receptive since saloons closed; they are more appreciative and alive to good pictures. There is very little difference between afternoon and evening business. I believe, as far as the moving picture business in this end of town is concerned, prohibition worked a good end."

Across the street from the Burnside is located the Casino, owned by the Portland Amusement Company and managed by H. C. Stevens. A visit to the theater one cold afternoon revealed a crowded house and apparently prohibition is not hurting the Casino's business. Mr. Stevens was of the opinion, however, that since prohibition went into effect there has been less inducement for men to congregate in the old saloon district.

The management of the Mutual theater, a suburban house, stated that since prohibition there has been a notable increase of male escorts coming with the women and children that patronize the Mutual. This is the only instance where any of the suburban managers spoke favorably of prohibition.

William Graeper, Union Avenue theater, a suburban house located in semi-business district in which there had been several saloons, said prohibition had had no noticeable effect on business as yet, and indications were that it would have no effect, one way or the other. J. B. Washtock, of Victoria, in the Alberta district, and D. W. Quimby, of the Derby theater, Kenton, declared the conditions in their localities the same as Mr. Graeper's.

The managers of downtown theaters advised that weather conditions have made it impossible to judge the immediate effects of prohibition, but most of them were of the opinion that time would show prohibition to be a benefit to downtown theaters.

MORE ABOUT FEATURES.

Some Interesting New Angles on a Mooted Question.

Strangely, whenever exhibitors are interviewed on business conditions, their conversations turn to the subject of features. The writer rode out to Al Sather's theater, the Ideal, recenly to alk about prohibition and the snow, but Mr. Sather would talk on neither; the subject of features was uppermost in his mind.

"The small suburban house will have to go back to vaudeville acts for special attractions," said Mr. Sather. "There are too many features. People know if they miss one feature another will come along in less time than it takes to tell about it and features fail to be special drawing cards."

On another phase of the feature question, Wm. Graeper, of the Union Avenue theater, expressed a sentiment that has apparently been overlooked by moving picture censors.

"The continued harping by censors upon the subject of censoring for the children of a community is uncalled for, and I give as a reason for this statement that most of the big features and the plots they contain do not interest children; the average feature goes over children's heads. Since features became the rule instead of the exception, my children's trade has fallen to almost nothing. The increase in adult patronage, however, has made up for the loss of children's trade."

SUCCESSFUL FROM THE START.

W. A. Crank, road man for the Metro Film Corporation out of Portland, Oregon, has enjoyed remarkable success since he became conencted with the moving picture industry. With much experience in the selling game but with little or none in the selling of films, Mr. Crank began his career in the film business with Metro and the first 30 days out secured 30 contracts, a record for this part of the country. He is a versatile young man with a pleasing personality and well liked among Oregon exhibitors.

W. A. Crank.

SALEM CONSOLIDATION.

George Bligh now controls the entire theatrical situation in Salem, Oregon, the second city in size in the state. Mr. Bligh opened the Bligh theater there several years ago and later acquired Ye Liberty. By the deal closed recently Mr. Bligh has assumed the direct management of the Oregon theater, a picture house, and the Grand, formerly the Salem Opera House, until recently a road show theater. By the consolidation Mr. Bligh will close the Grand to pictures and use it only for road shows and vaudeville. A rearrangement of the programs in all the theaters will also be made.

Buys Rights to Castle Film.

I. Rosenthal, of the Sutton Feature Film Company, of Seattle and Butte, was a visitor in Portland en route to California. Mr. Rosenthal recently returned from New York where he purchased the rights to "The Whirl of Life," featuring the Castles, for seven states including Oregon, Washington and California.

NEW VANCOUVER EXCHANGE.

Kean's Canada Film Exchange Opens for Service.

By E. C. Thomas, Vancouver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—Another exchange is ready for business in Vancouver. A. D. Kean, "the cowboy photographer," who for some years has filmed all events of interest in this district, as well as making scenic and special films throughout the province, last week took out an exchange license, and will hereafter book his productions direct to exhibitors, under the name of Kean's Canada Film Exchange. He has formerly booked through local exchanges, but this arrangement has never been satisfactory, and it is expected that in the future many more of Mr. Kean's pictures will be shown in Vancouver than formerly.

One especially valuable section of his stock of films consists of several thousand feet showing the various British Columbia battalions which have gone to the war. These films become more valuable every day, as many hundreds of those shown in them have since been listed as killed or missing.

The correspondent of the Moving Picture World recently inspected Mr. Kean's remarkably complete little laboratory, the equipment of which was installed, and much of it constructed, by Mr. Kean himself. This equipment consists of motor-driven printing machine, titling and enlarging apparatus, developing and tinting facilities, and everything for the complete treatment of film. An Edison projector has been installed for running off pictures, and the local agency for the Bing Home Projector has been secured. A recent addition to the plant is an excellent printing press for making subtitles, etc. Mr. Kean is also putting out his own make of film cement, designated as "Cactus Brand." Kean says it's a sticker. Photographic equipment consists of two cameras—an Ernemann and a Williamson.

NEW CANADIAN V-L-S-E CO.

The most important development in the film industry in Western Canada during recent weeks is involved in the closing of a deal in Vancouver, which gives to a company now being formed the right to handle the V-L-S-E productions throughout this territory, including Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and British Columbia. These pictures have heretofore been imported from the Big Four office in Seattle, under arrangements made with Manager Tom North by W. P. Dewees of the Rex theater in Vancouver, where they were given first run, and then sent east as far as Winnipeg, playing over a regular circuit of independent houses.

Those who have now secured the distribution rights in this territory are W. P. Dewees, head of the Rex Amusement Company, of Vancouver; W. P. Nichols, general manager of the National Amusement Company, Vancouver, and J. A. Schuberg, of the Province Theater Company of Winnipeg. All of these gentlemen have been using the Big Four productions in the houses controlled by them, and so are familiar with the drawing power of these pictures.

Organization of the company is to be proceeded with at once, and an active campaign will be undertaken throughout the Western territory. It is expected that in the near future many V-L-S-E houses will be added to those included in the original circuit.

AT DOMINION FILM EXCHANGE.

The World Film productions, which were formerly handled in British Columbia by the Dominion Film Exchange of Vancouver, are now being sent from the World Corporation office in Calgary direct to Manager James W. Pilling of the Orpheum, who is the only exhibitor in the coast district at present using these features. These are shown for three days with Mutual Masterpictures playing the other three days of each week, Mr. Pilling having turned his Paramount contract over to J. R. Muir of the Dominion theater, who is now using Paramounts exclusively.

Mr. Muir has withdrawn from the Dominion Film Exchange, which is now being conducted by E. R. Fauser, the former manager, and R. A. Scott, formerly connected with the Loew interests and the Pathe exchange in Winnipeg. At present only specials and English topical weeklies are being handled, but it is intended to extend the scope of operations in the near future. "On the Batlefields of Europe" has been put out by this exchange, and has already played several successful engagements.

PROGRESSIVE HOUSE MANAGER.

J. B. Cronk, whose likeness is presented herewith, is one of the principal lieutenants of The Allens in Canada, having been connected with these gentlemen since the inception of their firm in Brantford, Ontario, in 1907. Formerly controlling the Universal product in Canada, they are now Canadian distributors for the Paramount Program, under the name of the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., controlling as well a chain of moving picture theaters in the West.

J. B. Cronk.

Mr. Cronk, though somewhat averse to personal publicity, is a thorough-going exhibitor in every sense, and the esteem in which he is held by his employers may be gathered from the fact that he has opened most of the houses erected by the firm, and has for some time been in charge of the largest and finest of them—the Allen theater, at Calgary, Alberta. This house enjoys a high class patronage, and is doing good business with Paramount features, supplemented with travelogues, topicals and selected comedies. Music is supplied by a three manual and pedal Kimball organ and a ten-piece concert orchestra, which Mr. Cronk considers has no equal in the West.

Mr. Cronk is a firm believer in the value of courtesy, and this conviction is reflected throughout the house by the Allen staff.

B. T. PHELPS VISITS.

B. T. Phelps, Universal road man for Western Canada, has just made his first visit to Vancouver since James E. Finch became manager of the local office. After a few days spent in this city Mr. Phelps started out on a two weeks' trip through the Okanagan Valley and other interior sections of British Columbia, rearranging the schedule so as to save time in transportation between the various houses being served from Vancouver. At the conclusion of his trip Mr. Phelps will proceed to Calgary.

He was formerly connected for a long period with the Mutual Film Corporation, and has also had practical experience as an exhibitor, conducting the Bijou theater in Calgary up to fifteen months ago, when he joined the Universal staff. Mr. Phelps is covering a very wide territory, extending from the Coast as far east as Port Arthur, Ontario. He stated to the representative of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD that the picture business generally throughout Western Canada is considerably below normal, but that conditions in Calgary are probably better than at any other point. This bears out a statement just received from J. B. Cronk, manager of the Allen theater in Calgary, who reports that with few exceptions, all houses there are doing good business.

NEW WINNIPEG THEATER.

Allardt Brothers, of Chicago, present lessees of the Strand theater in Winnipeg, showing moving pictures and vaudeville, are to erect another theater in the Canadian city, according to an announcement made last week by L. F' Allardt.

The new house will be thoroughly modern in every particular, and will seat about 2,000, two seating floors being included in the plans—the orchestra and one balcony. It is expected that ground for the new structure will be broken in the near future.

Although Mr. Allardt stated that the site had been secured, and would be very central, he refused to divulge its exact location. He stated that five acts of vaudeville would be put on, and very probably an exclusive Paramount service.

A Plain Statement of Facts Pertaining To the Development of Your Business

There isn't an exhibitor in the business to-day who has not, at some time, felt the injustice of the demands made upon him in regard to the prices he has been compelled to pay for his pictures, be they good, bad, or indifferent. Such a state of affairs is all wrong! There should be no compulsion regarding what the exhibitor should or should not show, when he is paying good money for his merchandise.

ESSANAY.

A CORRECTION.

In the cast for the Essanay picture entitled "The Primitive Stain," published on page 1012 of the issue dated February 12, it was mentioned that Jack Meredith played the part of Dan McGraw, a saloonkeeper. This is incorrect. Hugh Thompson portrayed that character.

THE MAN IN HIM (Two Parts—Feb. 8). The cast: John Stone (G. M. Anderson); Margaret Houston (Ruth Saville); Harry Gardner (Lee Willard).

John Stone becomes engaged to Margaret Houston much to the disapproval of Harry Gardner, his rival. Determined to ruin Stone in the eyes of society, one night at a party Gardner steals a pearl necklace and a diamond bar-pin. He hides the necklace in his own clothes but places the bar-pin in Stone's pocket when he is not looking. When the loss of the jewels is discovered the guests are searched. The bar-pin is found in Stone's pocket much to his own amazement. He is shown no mercy. He is given a speedy trial and sent to prison for a long term.

Years later he emerges from prison an old and broken man. He goes to a house to beg for clothes. He is met at the door by his old sweetheart, who is now Mrs. Gardner. Failing to recognize him, she gives him her husband's old overcoat. In the pocket he finds a letter which points to Gardner as the thief for whom he has suffered. Swearing revenge, he returns to the house and is about to kill his old rival when he looks up into the eyes of Margaret. His heart is softened and throwing off the overcoat he again plunges into the cold.

THE STRANGE CASE OF MARY PAGE (Episode No. 4—"The Mark"—Two Parts—Feb. 14).—Mary Page is charged with the murder of Dave Pollock. Langdon loves Mary and is her attorney in the trial. Langdon has a chance to save his sweetheart by confessing the murder, but he ignores the opportunity. Insanity is Mary Page's defense.

"If Mary Page murdered Dave Pollock," Langdon announces, "she did it while suffering from 'repressed psychosis.'"

Then he brings witnesses who tell thrilling incidents of Mary's early life.

Mary's father, Dan Page, was a drunkard. Because of a powerful pre-natal influence Mary always had a horror of liquor. At times of great mental stress, upon her left shoulder have appeared the shadowy imprints of heavy fingers, a strange phenomena caused by the fact that before Mary was born Dan Page brutally attacked Mary's mother.

Mary had loved Langdon almost as long as she could remember. Pollock, who lived in the same small town, wanted to wed Mary and Dan—because Pollock knew of shady transactions in Dan's career—favored Pollock's suit.

In a drunken rage, in his home, Dan Page attacked Langdon with a hot poker. A glancing blow struck Mary on the forehead. She was rendered temporarily insane, and she fled into the wood. There Langdon found her and carried her home.

VERNON HOWE BAILEY'S SKETCH BOOK (Feb. 16).—The drawings were made by Vernon Howe Bailey, who has gained a wide reputation in this country and abroad for this particular line of work. Mr. Bailey pictures the Chicago river harbor as it appeared seventy years ago; then pictures it as it appears today, with its improved shipping facilities, modern bridges and monster freight and passenger steamers docked in the river. He also gives an idea of the appearance of the homes of the early settlers and of old Fort Dearborn. The remainder of his drawings show the Art Institute, Field Museum, crowded State street, Chicago University, Lake Shore Drive with its wonderful residences, the Park System, Michigan avenue and the Stock Yards, all as they appear to-day.

The remaining five hundred feet contain scenes taken in the Canadian Rockies.

HEARST-VITAGRAPH NEWS PICTORIAL NO. 8 (Feb. 4).

Thrilling picture showing an Austrian shrapnel shell bursting before a Russian artillery position and directly among the fleeing and panic-stricken Russian troops. Note the two men in the foreground have been thrown from their feet, wounded many times by the hundreds of small missiles released by the shell. Further down the hill the Russian troops, some of the Czar's forces who were driven out of Galicia by the Austro-Germans, may be seen in flight from the oncoming and victorious Teutons.

A Russian dispatch bearer at the moment of the bursting of a shrapnel shell immediately behind him. This picture is an enlargement from motion picture film contained in the Hearst-Vitagraph News Pictorial No. 8. The moving picture shows the bursting of another shrapnel shell hurling the dispatch bearer and his horse to death. An incident of the Russian retreat from Galicia.

This view of a Russian artillery position in Galicia, made during the Russian retreat, is exceptionally interesting as showing the ancient type of big guns used by the Czar's armies. An Austrian shell is seen striking a few yards in front of the gun in the foreground.

Women and children fleeing from a village in Galicia fired by the retreating Russians some twenty minutes before the Austrian advance guard occupied it and proceeded to undo so far as possible the Russian work of destruction. The motion pictures of this scene contained in the Hearst-Vitagraph News Pictorial No. 8 also show the Russian rear-guard and torch-squad fleeing from the village, mingling with the frightened civilian populace.

TOO CLEVER BY HALF (Jan. 28).—The cast includes Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew. Written by H. D. Swinstead. Produced by Sidney Drew. (This picture is released in place of "Peace at Any Price," which was originally scheduled for release on January 28.)

Mr. and Mrs. Newlywed have an awful "first quarrel" and Mrs. Newlywed refuses to kiss her husband goodbye in the morning. With this in mind, Newlywed consents to accompany his friend George and two stunning girlies on an auto trip. They pass Mrs. Newlywed, who recognizes her husband, and his trip is spoiled, while she goes home in aggrieved surprise. George tells him he must have a double! Accordingly, next day at the office Newlywed talks into his dictaphone and connects it with the telephone; then, leaving instructions with the office boy, calls up his wife and tells her he will be kept late at the office. He and George then go home and his friend introduces Newlywed to his wife as a "Mr Dix from Oregon," who is Mr. Newlywed's double. Mrs. N. looks startled, but when she calls up the office as proof and the dictaphone record is turned on, she thinks her husband is at the office. Unfortunately, she discovers the deception later, so when the two men arrive at the house that evening she announces that "her husband has been in bed this last half hour." and, giving Newlywed the key to the garage, lets "Mr. Dix" sleep out there all night.

LUBIN.

A SONG FROM THE HEART (Feb. 14).—The cast: Otto Ritter (Melvin Mayo); Katie, daughter (Eva Kinney); Katie, now a singer (Birdie Priest); Kate, his wife (Mae T. Prestell); Mme. Santos Dore (Verma Whitman); Kate's foster mother (Leone McLead); Milton Massey (L. C. Shumway); Oscar Stein (George Routh). Written and directed by Paul Powell.

Otto Ritter, a musician, is a failure in life from his wife's point of view because he spends his time composing worthless tunes on the organ or playing pinochle in the back room of a German saloon. Mrs. Ritter is obliged to support herself and their daughter, Katie, by taking in washing. Little Katie and her father are very affectionate, and when Ritter composes a song which he calls "A Song From the Heart" he teaches it to Katie. Katie's vocal abilities attract the attention of a prima donna who is visiting at the summer resort hotel. The diva becomes interested and offers to give Katie a musical education and also takes Mrs. Ritter along as maid. Mrs. Ritter, glad of the opportunity to get rid of her worthless husband, accepts the offer and deserts Ritter. She and Katie leave with the prima donna and Ritter is unable to trace them.

Fifteen years pass. Mrs. Ritter dies and the prima donna becomes a foster mother to Kate. She places her in charge of Oscar Stein, a celebrated teacher, who develops a wonderful voice. Ritter drifts to the city. After many discouragements he interests Milton Massey, an impressario, who undertakes to produce his opera. Kate has been brought to the notice of Massey, who is interested in her. When it comes time to select a singer for the leading role in the new opera Massey favors Kate, but Ritter firmly insists on having the role sung by the most celebrated prima donna available. He vetoes the nomination of Kate and succeeds in obtaining Mme. Santos-Dore, a great diva. The rehearsals go on. On the night before the opening Mme. Santos-Dore gives a gay dinner party in celebration of "her forthcoming triumph."

The next day the diva is too ill to appear in public. On the night of the performance Massey and Ritter and the rest are in a quandary when Stein, Kate's teacher, comes with a plan. He has taught Kate the prima donna's part and vouches for her ability. Circumstances force Ritter to accept Kate. Kate has her chance and wins. She becomes famous in a night. After the show Massey gives a supper on the stage to all members of the company. Each is called upon to do a "stunt." When Kate's turn comes, she sits at the piano and, playing her own accompaniment, sings "A Song From the Heart." To Ritter, who is present, it brings back memories, and when Kate tells him the circumstances in which she learned the song he realizes that he has found his daughter.

THE UPLIFT (Three Parts—Feb. 17).—The cast: Jim Ruddy (George Clarke); Peg (Helen Greene); Tot (Helen Weir); Mike (Francis Joyner); Pinky Welsh (Clarence Jay Elmer); Samuel Drew (Walter Law); Grace Drew (Bessie Marmeine); Rex Hall (Arthur Forbes). Written and directed by Clay M. Greene.

John Rudley, a criminal, has two daughters. Peg and Tot have been taught by their father, Jim Ruddy, to become thieves. Peg, at the beginning of this story, has just been released from the Penitentiary. Tot, thus far, has evaded capture. Tot has a sweetheart, Pinky Welsh, a sneak thief, and Peg on her release meets a fellow convict, Mike, the Bat. A sister of Mercy offers to lead Peg in the paths of righteousness, but Peg says that she prefers to work out her own salvation. When Peg informs her father that she has decided to live "straight" he turns her into the street.

In her efforts to secure employment she finds herself hounded by the Detective Sparks. She is on the point of securing a position through an employment agency when the detective interrupts. Other attempts are equally unsuccessful, and after barely escaping arrest for begging Peg becomes a model for an artist. He provides Peg with enough money to clothe herself and they are often seen together in public places. The intimacy between Peg and the artist causes a breaking of the engagement between Grace Drew and himself. The engagement ring is transferred to Peg, although the artist has no intention of marrying her.

In the meantime, Tot's career also receives a setback. Her father is arrested for having burglar's tools in his possession and Tot, hearing of the Uplift Society, secures his release through them. Then occurs the episode which brings about her uplift. As she is about to pick the pocket of a woman she is detected, but instead of handing her over to the police Grace Drew, the woman, takes Tot to the mission, where Tot learns the lessons of forgiveness and redemption. So impressed through Tot's influence, her father and Pinky are finally redeemed, and Tot and Pinky are married at the Mission.

A TEMPORARY HUSBAND (Feb. 19).- The cast: Dr. Robert Graham (Billie Reeves); Amy (Margaret Moore); Mrs. Wheeler (Carrie Reynolds); Mrs. Trott (Jessie Terry); The Angel Child (Mimi Yvonne). Written by Mark Swan. Produced by Earl Metcalfe.

Dorothy Wheeler is poor and helps Minty Hawkins, a dressmaker. Minty remarks "there doesn't seem to be husbands enough to go round." Dorothy has a dread of becoming an old maid. She learns she is regarded already an old maid by the gossips headed by Mrs. Trott, the old maid Miss Gabbleton, and a twelve-year-old kid, Tryphenia Trott. Luck changes for Dorothy; she gets a legacy of two thousand a year and goes to live in New York. Her apartment is opposite the offices of a dentist, Robert Graham, who has no money and no practice.

Remembering the gossips and thinking herself safe, Dorothy resolves to triumph by making them believe she is married. She writes a letter to Minty telling her she is a bride. In due time she gets a letter asking her to tell the "bunch" about her husband. She writes Minty and tells her that her husband is Robert Graham, a wealthy dentist. Dorothy has no idea any of the home town people will come to New York, but Mrs. Trott comes and goes to the offices of Robert Graham to see his wife. Dorothy sees the three gossips in Graham's office. She confesses to Graham and begs him to impersonate her husband for the afternoon. He refuses. She offers him money. Then the landlord makes a call for his rent, and as he must pay up or get out Graham takes the money, pays the landlord, and Dorothy introduces him as her husband. Nellie sees this, and makes an awful racket, but Graham slams her in the chair and holds her mouth open so that she can't talk while Dorothy gets the gossips into her own apartment.

But Nellie gets away from Graham and tells his wife he is pretending to be another woman's husband. Then he locks the two in his office. The gossips hear the noise, but Dorothy tells them her husband is pulling a tooth. Dorothy learns that Graham's wife is apt to give the lie, and he and she plot to secure the gossips, so they will go. He gets a huge knife and walks through Dorothy's apartment until the gossips believe he is a homicidal maniac and flee for their lives.

SELIG-TRIBUNE NO. 7 (Jan. 24):

Rockland, Me.—The new turbine-driven superdreadnaught, "Oklahoma," makes a speed of 21.47 knots, exceeding the best record of her sister ship, "Nevada," by a little less than half a knot.

San Francisco, Cal.—Lillian Russell, the actress, only lady member of the San Francisco Press Club, accepts golden key from newspapermen.

Washington, D. C.—Signor Suarez Mujica, Chilean Ambassador, who has materially aided in cementing friendship's ties between Chile and the United States, plans to return home because of ill health.

Liege, Belgium.—Soup in summer may lose its savory appeal, but on cold wintry days on these bleak fields the soup kitchen is more welcome than the signs of peace.

Chicago, Ill.—"Bundle Day" here gives an opportunity to distribute over 300,000 parcels of clothing to the deserving poor.

El Paso, Tex.—General Victoriano Huerta, deposed president of Mexico, dies here an exile. The body will lie in a vault until such time (if ever) Carranza's officials permit interment in Mexico.

Ottawa, Ont., Canada.—The Duke of Connaught, Governor General of Canada, accompanied by the Duchess and the usual guard, leave the Parliament building after the formal opening of Parliament.

Near Ypres, Belgium.—The campaign in this region has resolved itself into an intermittent rifle fire from the snow-filled trenches.

South of France.—At night along the rural highways of France detachments of German prisoners make their way to the French detention camps.

Portland, Ore.—Miss Pansy Sessions enjoys driving a new and novel motor sled.

New York, N. Y.—Deserting the pleasurable pursuits of "suffragetting," Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst arrives in the city with Cheddomil Miyatovitch to obtain funds for Serbian relief, after a short detention at Ellis Island.

Yosemite Valley, Cal.—The people of Stockton, Cal., in an effort to stimulate interest in the Yosemite Valley, as a winter playground, spend a merry week-end in the Valley.

THE BLACK ORCHID (Three parts—Feb 14).—The cast: Viola Morton (Kathlyn Williams); Captain Warren Hastings (Wheeler Oakman); Alta Wade (Edith Johnson); Lieutenant Jack Peters (Earle Foxe); Eleanor Roberts (Grace Darmond); Major Duncan (Harry Lonsdale); Mrs. Hastings (Lillian Hayward). Directed by T. N. Heffron. Written by Mrs. Owen Bronson.

In India, Viola Morton falls in love with Captain Warren Hastings, who does not entertain a deep attachment for her. While on sick leave in England, Captain Hastings meets Eleanor Roberts, and it is a case of love at first sight, particularly when Eleanor presents Hastings with a black orchid.

Before Hastings leaves for India, Viola tries to induce him to marry her, but failing, she turns her attentions to Lieutenant Jack Peters. In rivalry for the beautiful Viola, army officers become engaged in a struggle at Viola's home during a party. Colonel Wade, commanding officer of the garrison, writes Viola to leave the garrison as her influence over his subordinate officers is not of the best. Then it is that Viola makes her home in the jungle.

Captain Hastings, in the meantime, has returned to India, and while riding with brother officers sees a black orchid in the hands of a child. It revives thoughts of his love, and he penetrates the jungle in search of the black orchid's duplicate. While stooping to pluck a beautiful floral specimen, he accidentally touches a reptile, which sinks its poisonous fanks into Hastings' leg. He is rendered unconscious.

Viola Morton and her native attendant are hunting game in the jungle. They come upon Hastings and remove him to Viola's home just in time to save his life. When he revives, he expresses his gratitude to the woman, but again spurns her love. Enraged she tells him that if he will not marry her she will release a ferocious tiger which will destroy him.

Eleanor and her mother, meanwhile, have left England and have come to India. Hastings leaves. Filled with jealous rage, Viola releases the tiger and follows the beast upon its trail of Hastings. As the unfortunate man wanders, weak with illness, through the jungle growth, the tiger traces its desired prey and Viola follows the beast. In the meantime, officers and friends, including Eleanor Roberts, alarmed at Hastings' disappearance, go in search of him. He reaches the edge of the jungle with the tiger close behind. Then it is that the hunting party fire upon the beast and frighten it away, while Hastings takes Eleanor in his arms. Viola is the victim of her own plot. The tiger, retracing its steps, encounters the woman in the jungle and slays her.

MAKING GOOD (Feb. 19).—The cast: Tom Tom Mix); Vicky (Victoria Forde); Wilson (Joe Ryan); Ginto (Pat Chrisman). Written and directed by Tom Mix.

Tom, a cowpuncher, is in love with Vicky, Wilson's only daughter, but Wilson objects. Ginto, a Mexican, is secretly in love with Vicky. Ginto discovering that Wilson is to receive a large amount of cash for cattle plans with other Mexicans to hold up the stage and get the money. Vicky overhears the plot and tells Tom.

The outlaws hold up the stage and get the money. Just as they blow up the strong box Tom and Vicky surprise them. Vicky rides back to town to tell her father and the two ride back to meet Tom with the prisoners. They come upon Tom with the three outlaws secured to a rope and Tom holding them in line with a six-shooter. When Wilson sees that the money is safe and that Vicky really loves Tom, he gives his consent to their marriage.

BIOGRAPH.

JUST GOLD (Biograph Reissue No. 37—Feb. 14).—The cast: The girl (Lillian Gish); Her sister (Dorothy Gish); The brothers (Lionel Barrymore, Alfred Paget, Charles H. West and Joseph McDermott); Their mother (Kate Bruce); Their father (Charles H. Mailes).

Reports of the great gold strike reach the village and three sons of the old couple resolve to seek their fortunes in the desert. The fourth son refuses to go with them and is disdained by his sweetheart, who thinks him a weakling. But when she sees him daily comforting his parents and realizes that but for them he, too, would have gone adventuring, she repents her hasty decision and weds him.

Meanwhile the three brothers have separated in quest of gold. The first almost perishes in the desert before he is found by friendly Indians, who succor him. Later he strikes gold, and is engaged in his mine when the second brother, after a fruitless search, reaches the spot. Accidentally, while peering over the brink of the hole the newcomer starts the excavated earth in a landslide which crushes out his brother's life. The sight of gold causes him to forget the tragic circumstance and he works the mine. Presently the third brother stumbles across the spot.

Demented by thirst and privation, he resolves to rob the unknown miner. Drawing his pistol, he fires pointblank into the excavation. The miner, hearing the shot, also draws his weapon and fires. Both are fatally wounded. Before death comes they recognize each other. A little later only three skeletons remain to mark the spot.

HIS WHITE LIE (Two Parts—Feb. 15).—The cast: Peter Rawlings (Charles H. Mailes); His ward (Claire McDowell); Grace Martin (Gretchen Hartman); John Barton (later known as John Fleming) (Charles Perley); His secretary (Jack Nellson).

Peter Rawlings, the guardian of Linda Ford, pretends love for her, but his feelings are actuated by her money which he holds in trust. Rawlings is a man of questionable character, he having had an affair with Grace Phelps some time before, whom he cruelly deserted. John Barton, a young lawyer, is Linda Ford's sweetheart and has, at the opening of the story, decided to ask Rawlings for Linda's hand in marriage. With this intention Barton starts for Rawling's house. About this time, Rawlings returns home in an intoxicated condition and forces his unwelcome advances upon Linda, who in her struggle with him faints to the floor. This struggle is seen through the window by Grace Phelps, who has come to demand satisfaction from Rawlings. The scene infuriates her to almost insanity, and as she rushes in at Rawlings he attempts to drive her out, but she, grabbing up the poker, strikes him across the head, causing his death. Feeling that there has been no witness to the act,

Linda being in a dead faint, Grace leaves the house.

When Linda recovers and finds Rawlings dead and the poker lying at her side she believes that in her fury she did the deed—and she stands self-accused when Barton arrives. That she has committed the murder is conclusive to herself and Barton. Barton forces her out of the room, intending to take the blame himself, and does so on the arrival of the housekeeper, who had been out for the evening. In her excitement the housekeeper rushes off to inform the sheriff. This gives Barton a chance to escape, which he does; and rushing to the river side, writes a note, pinning it to his discarded coat, giving the impression that he has jumped into the river and been carried away by the current. Instead he makes his way to a distant town, where he assumes the name of "John Fleming," to which he later brings Linda to make her his wife.

Several years later we find Fleming a successful lawyer and politician running for the office of Mayor against the Boss Ring. Through a disloyal secretary the leader of the Boss Ring learns that John Fleming is none other than John Barton, the unpunished murderer, and proceeds to get the details of the case. During this while Grace Phelps has lived with a tormenting thought that an innocent man had suffered for her crime, although it was in the form of a sacrifice, for she with the others believed that Barton had committed suicide to escape apprehension. Judge of her surprise to learn of Barton's whereabouts and the danger that threatened him, so she leaves for the town in which Barton is residing and there makes a confession that she was the real slayer of Rawlings, giving the details of how it came about, thus clearing the name of John Barton, alias Fleming.

PIQUE (Three Parts—Feb. 16).—The cast: Arthur Standish (William Russell); His cousin, Mary (Betty Gray); Arthur's father, Matthew (Jack Drumeir); His aunt, Dorothy (A. C. Marston); Raitch, a waif (Zoe Gregory); Dr. Gossitt (Thomas Jefferson); Thorsby (William Jefferson); Dymple (Arthur Macklin); Raymond Lessing (Franklin Ritchie); Mabel Renfrew (Gretchen Hartman); Lucille Renfrew, Mabel's stepmother (Isabel Rea).

The following takes place in the suburbs of New York. Ensign Arthur Standish of the U. S. Navy is ordered to report to his ship. Arthur's cousin, Mary, is in love with him but her love is not reciprocated. Arthur's father, Matthew Standish, and his aunt, Dorothy, accompany him to his ship. Upon returning home they discover Raitch, a girl waif, being abused by three crooks—Ragmoney Jim, Padder and Mother Thames—who use Raitch as a tool to steal. Aunt Dorothy's heart is touched and she takes Raitch to her home to live. Raitch and Mary become friends.

Later, at the Navy Hop at Old Point Comfort, Arthur meets his friend, Doctor Gossitt, and the doctor's friends, Thorsby and Dymple. Gossitt introduces Arthur to Mabel Renfrew—supposed heiress of her late father's estate. Infatuated with Raymond Lessing, a fortune-hunter, Mabel treats Arthur with indifference and introduces him to her attractive stepmother, Lucille Renfrew, who has really inherited the estate.

War is declared and the Atlantic Fleet is ordered to Cuba. After the war Arthur returns and calls on Mabel, with whom he is now deeply in love, and asks her to be his wife. Mabel rejects him. Meanwhile Ray has been making violent love to Mabel, but upon learning from Gossitt that Lucille inherited the estate Ray transfers his affections to Lucille. Mabel's pride crushed and outraged at Ray's perfidy, out of pique she accepts Arthur's offer of marriage. The wedding soon follows and they spend their honeymoon abroad. Thorsby and Dymple, both having loaned money to Ray, propose to expose the fortune-hunter to Lucille. Lucille overhears Ray tell Thorsby and Dymple that he will meet their I. O. U.'s when he marries Lucille.

Mabel and Arthur go to the Standish homestead to live. It is difficult for Mabel to conform to the habits of Arthur's people, who are very religious. This leads to a quarrel in which Mabel tells Arthur she married him out of pique and confesses her love for Ray Lessing. Arthur, dazed, leaves for a long cruise on his ship. His father commands Mabel to remain with her child under his roof until Arthur forgives her. Love for her absent husband creeps into Mabel's heart with the birth of her baby boy and she secretly longs for his return. As Mabel and her child are prisoners in Matthew's house, she appeals to Doctor Gossitt to help her get away.

Later, when Ray proposes to Lucille, she flatly refuses him, saying he is in love with her bank account and that her bank account declines. Ray sees Mabel's note to Gossitt and, thinking she still loves him, plans to renew his suit. Mabel ignores his advances, realizing at last that it is her husband she loves. Matthew, believing Mabel has encouraged Ray, orders her to leave the house, but insists upon Arthur's child remaining. Mabel refuses to go without her child.

Ray plans to obtain possession of the child as a hold on Mabel and hires Ragmoney Jim, Padder and Mother Thames to kidnap the baby. Raitch tries to prevent the kidnapping and is taken along with the child by the crooks. Arthur is notified of the disappearance of his child. A large reward is offered for the return of the Standish child.

Ray now goes to pay the sum he agreed to give the crooks, but they tell him they mean to demand $20,000 from the Standish family for the baby. A quarrel ensues in which the crooks kill Ray. The crooks then send Raitch's dress to the Standish home to prove that they have the child. Through Raitch's wit in successfully concealing in her dress the address of the den where they are being held, the kidnappers are caught at their own game. After a fierce struggle the child is recovered.

The child and Raitch restored, Arthur returns home and Mabel confesses her love for him, thus bringing the story to a happy ending. Thorsby is accepted by Mary, whom he has loved, and Dymple proposes to Raitch. All receive the blessing of Aunt Dorothy and Matthew.

NESTOR.

MIXED KIDS (Feb. 7).—The cast: Mr. Gordon (Ray Gallagher); His Wife (Billie Rhodes); Mrs. Green (Stella Adams); Her Husband (Neal Burns). Written by Al. E. Christie. Produced by Horace Davey.

The Gordons are a happy family in their bungalow, being blessed with a little girl and a small baby. In a shack in another part of town, dwells Mrs. Green and her husband. Although they live in the poorer part of town, they are equally happy in the possession of a baby pickaninny. Mr. Green works in a livery stable and his wife, to help out with the family income, takes in washing. Unable to do her work with the baby squalling, she asks a little colored girl to take the baby out for a walk.

Doris, the little girl of the Gordons, secures permission to take her dolly out for an outing and meets the colored child with baby Green. The little coon admires Doris' doll and the two exchange babies. Doris takes the coon baby home and puts it in bed beside the other baby, while the little negro returns with the doll. Mrs. Green misses her baby and goes on the war path looking for it. Mrs. Gordon finds the negro child with her own and almost has hysterics. The little negro girl asks Doris to give her a baby back and Doris trades her baby sister for the doll, thus complicating matters.

When Mrs. Gordon finds her baby gone and the negro child in possession of the bed, she frantically calls her husband to hurry home as someone has stolen their child. Mrs. Green, meanwhile, has fetched her husband and they search for their child. Eventually the two searching parties come together and learn of the various transactions in baby trading. Explanations follow and each mother is again happy in the possession of her rightful child. As the story ends, both Doris and the little negro girl are punished for their reckless trading "on the curb."

A QUIET SUPPER FOR FOUR (Feb. 11).—The cast: Mr. Newlywed (Eddie Lyons); His Wife (Betty Compson); Lisette (Ethel Lynn); Bob Gordon (Lee Moran). Written and produced by Al. E. Christie.

Mr. Newlywed and his wife are much in love. Mrs. Newlywed has been content to stay at home the first few days after the marriage, but one day she goes upon a shopping tour. She runs across an old friend, Lisette, who is one of the merry girls of the Gayety theatrical troupe. Lisette has an ardent admirer in Bob Gordon and most of her leisure time is spent in enjoying city life with Bob.

Bob receives a telegram from an old friend telling him that he will be in the city that evening, and as a welcome to his friend Bob decides to give a quiet little supper for four. He calls up Lisette and tells her of the expected arrival of his friend and asks her to get a girl suitable for a "regular fellow." Lisette receives the request during the performance and tries in vain to get one of the girls in the troupe to accompany her to the supper that night. The girls all have previous engagements and Lisette is about to tell Bob she can get no one, when she thinks of her friend, Mrs. Newlywed.

At the Newlywed's home things have not been going so well. Newlywed and his wife have a little scrap and Newly wed leaves for the club to drown his troubles, while his wife takes refuge in tears. It is at this point that Lisette calls up, and Mrs. Newlywed accepts the invitation to the party.

Bob, meanwhile, is waiting at the club and receives a telegram stating that his friend has missed the train. As the arrangements for the party have all been made, Bob determines to get some other friend to fulfil the vacancy, and stumbles across Newlywed, who has been indulging too freely in wine. He promises to be a member of the happy party.

Fearing someone who knows him will recognize him in the theatre, Newlywed arranges to wait at the restaurant while his friend goes to the theatre, for the girls. Mrs. Newlywed has hastened to the theatre, and comes out with Lisette, being taken for one of the girls of the troupe. Bob escorts the two girls into the private dining-room where his friend is waiting and starts to introduce Mrs. Newlywed to her husband as one of the girls from the show. The two recognize each other, but each being equally to blame, there is no room left for recriminations, and in spite of the fact that the supper was arranged for unmarried couples, Newlywed and his wife acted as chaperons to the other two, and all enjoy a happy supper.

WHEN THE LOSERS WON (Feb. 14).—The cast: Mr. Newlywed (Eddie Lyon); Mrs. Newlywed (Betty Compson); Ethel, the flirt (Ethel Lynn); Percy (Lee Moran); Mr. Gordon (Harry Rattenberry); Mrs. Gordon (Jean Hathaway); Jane (Jane Waller). Written and produced by Al. E. Christie.

The Gordons like to entertain young people and their daughter, Jane, has invited a number of her friends to enjoy a house party with her. While house parties are, as a rule, for single people only, Jane has invited her dear friend Mrs. Newlywed and her husband, who are models of decorum. She thinks that her presence will have a good influence on the others. Among the other guests are Ethel, the flirt, and Percy, the heartbreaker. These two have been accustomed to ride roughshod over the feelings of others, their only pleasure being the pursuit of new victims.

The Newlyweds prove to be all that their reputation promised, and are the lions of the hour. Percy and Ethel do not like the popularity of the newly wedded couple and plan their downfall. Percy bets Mr. Gordon five hundred dollars that he and Ethel together can break up the Newlyweds domestic happiness before the party ends, and an agreement is signed accordingly.

Percy and Ethel start their campaign of destruction, and while Percy is trying to kiss the wife, Ethel tries to impress her charms upon the bewildered husband. Eddie is a "wise guy" and "smells something in the wind." He accordingly gets busy and decides to give the couple some of their own medicine. The next time that Percy goes to kiss Mrs. Newlywed, he finds his caresses returned with interest, and is greatly dismayed. Ethel, too, receives a great shock, when Eddie returns her kisses "two for one" and seems to be wild over her. The disconcerted plotters do not know what to make of this "flank attack."

That night there is a masquerade and Eddie tells his wife that they will bring the activities of the flirtatious couple to an end. He accordingly threatens to shoot Ethel unless she elopes with him, while in another part of the house, Betty threatens to take poison unless Percy elopes with her. The plotters are caught in their own net and are forced to agree to the elopement. Percy meets a masked figure outside and hurries into a waiting automobile. Eddie, Betty and Mr. Gordon hiding behind the curtains, watch the pair sneak into the auto and start off. In the auto, Percy removes his mask and is greeted with a gasp of surprise, for instead of Mrs. Newlywed he finds Ethel. The couple realize they have been outwitted and as they have started for a preacher, decide to finish the journey. Mr. Gordon congratulates the Newlyweds on their brilliant work and thinks with pleasure of the five hundred "hard earned dollars" of Percy's that is coming to him.

FLIVVER'S DILEMMA (Feb. 18).—"Love a lot and love them little" is a motto that is very dear to the heart of our merry friend Flivver, for he is discovered seated amongst the girls, where all are enjoying themselves immensely. Unfortunately the Reverend Flivver, our hero's father, accompanied by the curate, decides to visit his son, and makes an unexpected call at this critical moment.

Alas! the visit is too unexpected for Flivver, who is at his wit's end to know where to hide hide the girls. Three are bundled into his bedroom and hidden in the bed; two are, by an ingenious trick, transformed into armchairs; and the remaining one, by placing a tray on her back is made into a table.

The preparations are only just completed in time, for papa is so eager to see his son he bursts into the room as Flivver is giving final instructions to the girls to keep still. Both father and curate evince a strong desire to sit—having come a long way—and Flivver has hard work to prevent them. Papa wants to see over his son's house and, of course, the first room they visit is the bedroom, and father feels the bed to see if the boy is sleeping softly, only to discover something suspicious there.

Poor Flivver is at first at a loss to explain, but gets over it by saying they are wounded Germans! Papa believes him and they again return to the first room. Flivver, fearing discovery, determines to do away with himself, and returning to confess before the deed, finds his father in one chair with three girls and the curate in the other with the others. The Reverend Flivver, to silence his son, gives him a check for $1,000 and departs, much to the joy of all, who foresee a rollicking time in store.

JOKER.

LEAP AND LOOK THEREAFTER (Feb. 12).—The cast: Bill Durham (William Franey); Mrs. Bill Durham (Gale Henry); Dr. Killem (Belburn Moranti); Daisy Brown (Lillian Peacock). Produced by Allen Curtis.

Bill Durham is an inveterate tobacco fiend; Mrs. Durham, his wife grows tired of airing the house which is always full of smoke. Daisy Brown, a neighbor, tells her to obtain some anti-tobacco pills that can be given in secret. Mrs. Durham is struck with the idea and purchases a supply. Fearing that Bill may discover her plan, she transfers the pills into a bottle labeled poison. Returning from work, Bill reads in the paper of the third case in a week in which jealous wives have endeavored to poison their husbands.

Arriving home, Bill discovers his wife putting a pill in his coffee and is convinced that he is about to become the victim of another poison case. In a ludicrous manner he avoids drinking the coffee. Later he discovered a poison bottle and to protect his life while he investigates her motive, he buys some candy pellets and substitutes them for the pills. The next day Mrs. Durham visits the office and pours the bottle of pills in the water cooler, but the janitor frustrates her plan. She purchases another bottle of pills (of which Bill is not aware), and puts them in the poison bottle.

Dr. Killem is in love with Daisy Brown who lives next door to Mrs. Durham. The doctor meets Mrs. Durham on her way home and requests that she deliver a note to Daisy. In the excitement of back yard gossip Mrs. Durham forgets to deliver the note. Bill comes home and discovers the note, which is written in such a manner that Bill is led to believe that Dr. Killem is his wife's affinity. He remembers the candy pellets he has placed in the poison bottle and hits upon a scheme to frighten his wife. Mrs. Durham returns to find Bill raving mad; he flings the note in her face and denounces her as being false. She tries to explain, but he storms about and refuses to listen. In a tragic manner he swallows the contents of the poison bottle, believing it to be candy.

The overdose effects him and he goes to bed in pain. Mrs. Durham grows worried and sends for Dr. Killem. The doctor gives Bill an antidote, but Bill, believing the doctor is giving him a fresh finishing dose, manages to fool the physician. Later he discovers the doctor in a seemingly compromising position with Mrs. Durham. The limit is reached and he denounces them. His dramatic exposure winds up in a satisfactory explanation of the note, and he is bewildered as to the motive of his wife. In a ludicrous manner he learns of the anti-tobacco campaign against him, and he tries to find solace in his favorite stogie, but learns that he is the losing candidate. In the back yard he digs a hole and plants his box of stogies. On the tiny mound he places an inscription: "Here lie the evil habits of Bill Durham; they met their death at the hands of his loving wife." Over the tiny grave the husband and wife seal the future with a kiss.

RED FEATHER.

THE PATH OF HAPPINESS (Five Parts—Jan. 31).—The cast: Joan (Violet Mesereau); Merrill (Harry Benham); Grekko (Sidney Bracy); Doris Ingraham (Florence Crawford); Joan's father (Joseph Phillips); Barbara (Dorothy Benham); Little Grekko (Leland Benham). Written by Elaine Sterne.

Joan is a child of Nature and resides with her father and Grekko in the woods of Northern New York. Grekko has been living with Joan and her father ever since he was rescued some years ago from a bear trap in which he was caught. He is a cripple. Joan's father dies and Grekko vows to look after the young girl, who knows nothing of the outside world.

Merrill Day is advised by his physician to seek the quiet of a secluded country place in order to recuperate his health which has been shattered by overwork. Fate ordains that he pick out that part of New York where Joan lives, and he arrives there with his widowed sister, Doris Ingraham, and her little daughter, Barbara. In roaming through the woods one day he comes upon Joan giving vent to her grief over the death of her father, and tries to cheer her up. But she is unaccustomed to the sight of man and darts away.

Several days later in rambling through the woods Joan comes upon the big doll which had been forgotten by the roadside by Barbara who went in search of her nurse who had wandered a short distance away. Fascinated by the plaything she takes it away with her. The loss of the doll is discovered, and Merrill goes to hunt for it. Near the spot where Barbara said she left the doll, Merrill finds a rag garter. He recognizes it as belonging to Joan and goes to her cabin. He demands the toy, but Joan refuses to give it up. Grekko intervenes in behalf of his ward, and Merrill finally consents to let Joan keep the doll. He learns that she is untutored and begins to teach her to read from the primer which Barbara brought along with her.

Grekko meanwhile has been harboring a hatred for Merrill; he assumes that the latter's intentions are not good. His animosity comes to white heat one day when Merrill calls upon Joan. She is in swimming. Merrill refuses to obey the demands of Grekko to keep away from Joan and is attacked. By an artifice Merrill succeeds in overpowering Grekko and then goes in search of Joan.

Months later Joan and Merrill are madly in love with each other. But when Grekko sees Merrill caressing his sister he informs Joan, who scathingly denounces the broker. By a prearranged plan with Grekko he is to fire and kill the broker when Joan is in his arms. When Joan finishes upbraiding Merrill he tells her that the other woman is his sister, and that he is in love with no other girl but Joan. Overcome with love for the man she throws herself into his arms, and it is then that she realizes what will happen to him. In order to spare his life she places herself in such a position that she receives the bullet. Grekko sees the enormity of his crime and tries to make amends, but is driven away by Merrill. Believing that he has killed Joan, Grekko leaves the country.

But she received a slight wound only, and when Joan regains consciousness, the lovers come to a perfect understanding and the renewal of their love.

THE SPHINX (Five Parts—Feb. 14).—The cast: Arthur Macklin (Herbert Kelcey); The Sphinx (Effie Shannon); Betty Mackin (Beatrice Nozes); Charles Macklin (Charles Compton); Frances Evans (Louise Huff); M. Valentine (William Bechtel). Written by Reynard L. Schrock. Produced by Mr. Adolphi.

The Sphinx is a nickname given to a dancer, who interprets the classique. After the cares of the stage are brushed aside at night, a fast-driven limousine carries her to the Lion Head Apartments, where colored servitors wait upon her and deck her with perfume and flowers, for the coming of "Jim," her lover. Mr. Macklin is a widower, but has a son named Charles, who is studying art under the tutelage of M. Valentine, a French painter. Charles has become attached to Frances Evans, society girl, and their affection has resulted in their engagement.

One day, during a class in art at M. Valentine's studio, where Charles is studying, the Sphinx calls. The master introduces her to Charles, but does not mention the boy's name, since he has a deep affection for the strange woman himself. The young art student falls under the spell of the Sphinx and his affection for Frances wanes. To his pleadings to receive him at her residence the dancer turns a deaf ear. A theater party, of which Charles and Frances are members, gives him his opportunity. Prominent in the performance is the sinuous dance of the Sphinx. Under a pretext he leaves his own party and trails the Sphinx to her home.

When Charles appears at her apartment, she receives him with consternation. She is expecting Macklin. She is unaware that this is the son of her expected visitor, but decides that the jealous Macklin must not find another visitor there. When the latter arrives she begs Charles to conceal himself, but he agrees only when she promises to come to his studio the following day so that he may paint her portrait. The Sphinx hides Charles and when Macklin arrives hurries him into another room, while the maid allows Charles to slip unnoticed from the apartment, ignorant of the identity of her other visitor. The next day the Sphinx keeps her promise. She comes to Charles' studio, a pose is arranged, and Charles proceeds to paint. Meanwhile, Frances, unable to understand Charles' coldness, has been encouraged by the latter's sister to seek him at his studio. She calls just as Charles is engaged upon his big picture. Charles tells Frances that she is interfering with his work and prevails upon her to leave. She goes, but suspicion leads her to peer through the keyhole of the studio. The Sphinx consents to grant one kiss and Charles is enslaved.

At this juncture Frances steals in upon them. Frances, tearing the engagement ring from her finger, runs away in tears. Charles laughs and turns to the Sphinx, who censures him for his conduct, calling him a heartless boy. Heartbroken, Frances goes to Charles' father and tells him that a worthless woman whom she does not know has ensnared the boy she loves, and that it was for her that he forsook the theater party. When Charles returns at night he is sternly taken to task by his father, but this has no effect on Charles. Charles calls upon the Sphinx and finds that she is making preparations for a birthday party. Macklin arrives and she again hides Charles. In the course of their conversation, Macklin discovers a half-burned cigarette, and demands to know where and who the other man is. She refuses to tell, and Macklin seizes her. Her screams bring Charles from his hiding place, and father and son come face to face and each recoils.

In the woman before him Charles now sees but a shameless, tempting siren, and he wildly denounces her. Macklin is roused in her defense and springs at his son and there is a fight in which the father, striking his head on the floor, is rendered unconscious. Charles rushes wildly away; he is in the grasp of despair and soon is raving in delirium. The Sphinx explains to Macklin, who believes her, and asks her to be his wife. Charles, in his fever, keeps calling for the Sphinx. She, pitying his misery, goes to see him. The touch of her hand calms him and he falls asleep. The dancer gently disengages her hand and substitutes that of his fiancee. Macklin presents the sphinx to his daughter as his future wife.

CINDERS (Feb. 15).—The cast: Cinders (Edith Roberts); Jim Carter (William Courtleigh, Jr.); Mr. Pendleton (Frank Smith); Mrs. Hawley (Gertrude Mudge); Ruth Hawley (Sydell Dowling); Baron di Sondia (Peter Pan). Written and produced by Robert Hill.

Cinders, a waif fourteen years old, is being pursued by a peddler for sneaking a few apples. She runs to an old mansion, known as "Maple Gables." Looking back to see what has happened, she observes that Jim, a young lawyer whom she has passed in her flight, has intercepted the peddler and squared him by paying for the apples. Then Cinders is confronted by Mr. Pendleton, a retired lawyer and owner of the mansion. Mr. Pendleton is inclined to be angry at her intfusion, but Jim arrives presently and again intercedes for Cinders. Cinders jumps on the old lawyer's lap despite his protests, and, winning him over completely, falls asleep in his arms. Mr. Pendleton, who is a widower, tells Daniel, an old servant, to prepare the guest chamber for his ward. In the next scene it develops that Jim is in love with Ruth Hawley, and that her mother, who is a niece of Mr. Pendleton, doesn't approve of Jim as a prospective son-in-law.

Ruth takes kindly to Cinders and they become friends. Presently the Baron di Sondia arrives and Mrs. Hawley introduces him to Mr. Pendleton. The Baron's attitude toward Mrs. Hawley is that of an ardent lover. Later we see Mr. Pendleton in his drawing room where Jim is assisting him to draw up his will. Early next morning, as Daniel is dusting, he finds on the library desk a note signed by Mr. Pendleton. The note announces his master's intention of committing suicide. Mrs. Hawley is now the Baroness di Sondia. At Jim's suggestion the Baroness, her husband, and Ruth all hurry to the Pendleton mansion. When the relatives are assembled, Jim reads the will, according to which Mr. Pendleton has left everything to his niece, the Baroness di Sondia, with a proviso that she shall maintain in "Maple Gables" a home both for Cinders and Daniel.

The Baron and Baroness manifest annoyance at this disagreeable necessity. Cinders has acted all along as a sort of Cupid for Ruth and Jim, although Ruth has been told emphatically that the Baron doesn't consider Jim a suitable husband for her. The Baroness comes upon the lovers. She tells Jim that his services as a lawyer will not be needed in future. That night Cinders assists Jim to enter through the skylight into the attic, where Ruth, Daniel and a minister are assembled. The minister reads the marriage service and pronounces Jim and Ruth man and wife.

They all go down to the drawing room where Cinders, addressing the Baroness, says: "I have the honor to present Mr. and Mrs. James Carter." The Baroness storms, and, encouraged by the Baron, she tells Cinders to get out of her house. Cinders makes fun of her, and the Baroness is about to strike her when Jim intercedes. Mr. Pendleton, who, it seems, has been listening to all this from his place of concealment, comes from a secret panel. They are all horror-struck as he appears before them.

Cinders runs to Mr. Pendleton, who takes her in his arms. Jim and Ruth crowd about the old lawyer and Daniel comes down and shakes his hand. Mr. Pendleton looks at the Baroness and says, in explanation of his actions: "I wanted to test my friends. I think the Baron and Baroness will thrive better on foreign soil." Ruth is spurned by her mother and the Baron and Baroness leave the place in great indignation.

Jack Hopewell, sole support of an invalid mother, secures employment with Benjamin Bimb, a designing old rascal, manager and promoter of the Yellowglint Mining Company. Unaware that his employer is a swindler and the Yellowglint Mining Company a fraud, Jack invests his own and his mother's savings in stock of the company. While at work one morning, Jack sees Casper Cardwell, notorious get-rich-quick financier, enter his employer's private office. This arouses Jack's suspicions and he observes his employer and Cardwell through the keyhole. He hears Bimb say: "We'll clean up a million if the suckers continue to buy."

As soon as Cardwell has departed, Jack enters the private office and threatens to expose Bimb unless he returns the money invested by Jack and his mother. Bimb resorts to bribery. Jack refuses, and leaves the office. Left alone, Bimb begins to worry over Jack's threat. Finally his eyes fall on a five hundred dollar bill. It gives him an idea; he marks the bill with a cross. Jack is in the outer office, making a hurried examination of the books. Bimb steals up behind him and deftly puts the marked bill into one of the pockets of Jack's coat. A few minutes later, Bimb telephones the police that he has been robbed of a five hundred dollar bill. Detectives, after an investigation, find the bill in Jack's pocket. He is arrested and subsequently convicted on purely circumstantial evidence. Jack reveals Bimb's plot to his fiancee, Jane Fanning.

Jane, determined to save her sweetheart, conceives an idea. She visits Jack in his cell, and tells him that as Bimb caused his conviction by a "frame-up," they will convict Bimb by the same means and force him to retract. Accordingly Jane dictates and Jack writes the following note to Bimb: "Dear Mr. Bimb:—I have repented and will return the $500 I stole. A friend of mine who wishes to remain unknown will throw a box containing the money from the train that passes Summerville at 12.30 tomorrow afternoon. It is important that you be there in person to receive it. Yours truly, Jack Hopewell." Leaving the jail, Jane seeks out a hobo and bribes him to aid her in the execution of the counter-plot. She takes him to a public telephone booth, instructing him to call her uncle, Tobias Matley, a jolly old capitalist, and give him the following message: "Your home will be dynamited unless you throw a box containing $500 from the train that passes Sommerville at 12.30 tomorrow afternoon.'

Leaving the hobo, Jane visits her uncle and tells him of the counterplot. He agrees to follow out minutely the terms of the threatening message. Later in the same day, Bimb receives Jack's letter. Knowing Jack has stolen no money, it perplexes him. After much hesitancy he resolves to go out to Summerville. The following day, Jane is at her uncle's office. The old capitalist chuckles as he marks with his initials a five hundred dollar bill, which he packs in a box. Then Jane and her uncle take the train which is to pass Summerville at 12.30, having already notified detectives to trail Bimb. Bimb is at the appointed place at 12.30 and receives the box which the uncle throws from the train. He extracts the bank note and stares at it in a bewildered way. As he stares, detectives leap from their hiding place and pounce upon him. He is placed under arrest charged with extorting money by means of threats. He expostulates, and searches for Jack's note to explain. He finds only a blank sheet, Jack's letter having been written in vanishing ink.

Jane and her uncle, having left the train at the first stop beyond Summerville, join the group. Jane calls Bimb aside. "It's a dirty frame-up," growls Bimb. Jane says: "You retract your frame-up charge against Jack, and I'll explain everything to the detectives." Bimb admits he is outwitted, and yields. The closing scenes show Bimb in jail (the fraudulent character of the mining company having been exposed) and Jack and Jane with Jack's invalid mother chatting on the porch of the suburban home that has now actually come into their possession, having received a very remunerative position from Jane's uncle.

methods of breathing and shows how it is possible to extend our lives indefinitely by following the instructions given.

IN A CAGE WITH POLAR BEARS (on the same reel as foregoing).—Polar bears are large lumbering animals, and it is difficult to teach them to play with small objects. In this reel they play ball and drink from ordinary sized bottles, besides balancing on the see-saw. They follow each other up a steep incline and coast down again on the other side, like little boys sliding down hill, and perform other feats which seem impossible for animals of their size.

UNCLE SAM AT WORK NO. 5, "Protecting the Ships At Sea" (Jan. 22).—This week's release shows the methods adopted to protect the ships at sea, not only the ships of our navy, but the ships of our coastwise trade and the trans-Atlantic liners of all nations.

The first of the reel depicts the workings of the Weather Bureau. The intricate and delicate instruments which measure the direction and velocity of the wind are all faithfully shown. The instruments which register and record the temperature and tell the weather sharps when a big storm is brewing that they may notify the country are clearly seen and explained on the screen.

The entire lighthouse system which guides the ships that they will not run afoul of reefs is one of the features of the film. The officers and ships of the Revenue Service and the means employed by them in protecting seagoing vessels are shown in the completeness of their duties. The film ends with a few more intimate views of our dreadnoughts in action.

SAMMIE JOHNSIN, HUNTER (Jan. 27).—Animated cartoon showing the adventures of Sammie Johnsin, an indolent colored boy. Sammie's big mammy orders him to do some chores, but he is engrossed in reading a lurid periodical in which the capture of wild animals is the main theme. Sammie dozes off and dreams that he, too, is a mighty hunter. His dream takes him to the wilds of Africa, where he has many humorous encounters with lions, tigers, boa constrictors and untamed elephants.

Sammie during his hunting expedition comes upon an ostrich with its head buried in the sand and mistakes it for a cocoanut tree. He arouses the wily bird and meets with several harrowing experiences trying to capture it. Sammie gets from one difficulty to another with rapidity. Just as he is about to be devoured by a ferocious beast he is awakened from his adventurous dream by the well directed stream from a hose played by his angry mammy.

UNCLE SAM AT WORK NO. 6, "Saving Wealth and Building Health" (Jan. 29). This installment opens with a fine view of the Agriculture Building in Washington and a fine close-up of Secretary Houston. How Uncle Sam cares for the trees and roads of the farmers is realistically depicted, as well as all the various duties of the vast army of men employed to protect our forests.

One of the greatest problems before the people is the reclamation work being done in the far west which converts arid wastes to rich and fertile land. Here is shown the methods employed to make garden spots of deserts.

UNCLE SAM AT WORK NO. 7, "Uncle Sam's Children," "The Patent Office," "Immigration," "In the Philippines," "Uncle Sam's Wards" (Feb. 5).—This installment begins with interesting views of the newest methods employed in the Patent Office. The scene then changes to the entry of the immigrants into the Land of Freedom, and the foreigners who are to become citizens of the new world are shown going through the formalities of entrance into the country.

Fascinating views of the Philippines show Uncle Sam caring for his little brown brother, teaching the children to read and write, instructing the older boys in trades, vaccinating the adults against the ravages of small-pox.

"Turkey trotting in the Arctic" shows the native children of far Alaska in a quaint dance, and then the scene passes to the Indians—Uncle Sam's wards—who are shown in strange dances, hunting buffalo and roasting meat in the open. The interior views of the Indian Girls' School at Riverside show what progress has been made over this ancient manner of preparing food.

THE FAMILY SECRET (Two Parts—Feb. 15).—The cast: Arnold Markham (Herbert Rawlinson); Madge Alston (Brownie Vernon); Mr. Markham (L. M. Wells); Mrs. Alston (Mrs. Witting); Fred Alston (Geo. Barringer); George Dumont (Barney Furey). Scenario by James Dayton. Produced by William Worthington.

Old man Markham tires of single blessedness and decides at a late period of life to remarry. His son, Arnold, is thoroughly disgusted with the idea and particularly dreads a stepmother. Ere it is too late to save the old man, Arnold decides to get an intimate view of the future Mrs. Markham. Knowing that no woman is a heroine to her house servants, he decides to apply to Mrs. Markham for the position of butler, which is open.

He is engaged and learns that there is a charming daughter in the family. A mutual attraction springs up between Arnold and Madge, the daughter. The mother is horrified at her daughter's interest in a servant.

Fred Alston, her son, to pay a gambling debt, commits forgery. Dumont holds the forged check as a weapon, the price he demands for it being the hand of Madge. Arnold learns of this family skeleton and luckily getting hold of the check, uses it as a candle lighter. Dumont is foiled and the supposed butler bows him solemnly out of the house.

Some little time later the butler tires of the masquerade and, resigning his position, leaves for home. The next time that Markham calls at the Alstons, he is accompanied by Arnold. Mrs. Alston recognizes in her future son-in-law her former butler, and the final outcome is the celebration of two engagements instead of one.

REX.

IN DREAMY JUNGLETOWN (Feb. 1).—The cast: Dream Girl (Violet MacMillan).

Violet went to bed with her kittens and animal toys, and played with them so long that when she finally fell asleep she dreamt she was a jungle maid with animals for comrades. Some of them were friendly, but some were decidedly otherwise, and Violet had a narrow escape from a hungry tiger. An ostrich gives her a ride and one of his feathers for a souvenir, a bear visits her hut and tries to steal her doll, a lion scares her, and a baby elephant is a welcome playmate. She has a terrible adventure with a monkey, who pelts her with cocoanuts, but a Hottentot man saves her from the monkey and brings her presents of fruit to eat. Violet is quite sorry when she wakes and finds it all a dream.

THE MISSING LOCKET (Feb. 11).—Baby Early lived in a poor neighborhood with her mother and little crippled brother. Her mother had estranged herself from her own family by a runaway match. Her husband was dead and her mother seriously considered appealing to her father for aid in support of the two children. Baby went to school, but the rich little children were not very kind to her, and she would not have been invited to Erma's birthday party without the intervention of her teacher.

Mother dressed Early in her best frock and gave her some flowers for Erma, which were not much noticed by the spoiled little girl who was showered with gifts. Her grandfather gave her a locket and while the children were at the table, the trinket was passed from hand to hand to be admired by all. Baby was looking at it, when the entrance of the butler with the cake distracted the attention of all. Presently Erma missed her present, and all remembered that Early had been the last to hold it. She tried to run away in the confusion, but was stopped by Erma's mother. Baby was hiding something in her dress. It looked suspicious, and she was forced to reveal her poor little secret. Out came a piece of cake and some bonbons.

"I saved them for my brother," said Early through her tears: "He is a cripple and I wanted him to have a party, too."

Touched to the heart, Erma's mother packed a big basket of goodies and her grandfather accompanied Early to her home, carrying the basket. A surprise was in store for him, for Baby's mother proved to be the daughter whom he had so harshly renounced years before. Jimmie had a real party after all, and the little family was rescued from poverty forever.

THE STRONG ARM SQUAD (Feb. 15).—The cast: Phil Kelley (Francis Ford); Cecil McLean (Elsie Maison); Jack, her brother (Jack Ford); Chief of Detectives (William White); Chief of Police (Dandy Bowen). Written by Grace Cunard. Produced by Francis Ford.

Phil Kelley, a well known detective, makes the acquaintance of Cecil McLean during one of his raids and has been of assistance to the girl. Their acquaintance ripens and the two become very good to each other. The chief of police is very much disturbed at the operations of a gang of crooks known as the "Lumber Yard Gang," and after a particularly daring robbery, assigns Kelley to the case. Kelley examines the room where the robbery took place and finds a finger print of one of the crooks. By hard work he locates the crook's record and secures a photograph of him. Kelley takes a detail of police and starts on his mission. The gang hears that Kelley has discovered the identity of one of their members through the mysterious wireless system of crooks, and prepares to give the officers a warm reception.

Kelley, after placing his men in advantageous positions, goes alone to rout the crooks from cover and is met with a fierce resistance. A free-for-all battle takes place in which the officers join, and the crooks are finally routed. Phil picks out the leader and pursues him. Both pursuer and pursued exchange shots and both are wounded. The leader makes his way to a house and Phil closes with him. As he starts to handcuff his captive, the door opens and Cecil rushes out begging him not to take the man, as he is her brother. Kelley agrees to let the boy go if she will promise to make him leave town, and starts to return to his men.

The chief of detectives has witnessed the chase, and when he sees Kelly return empty handed, upbraids him for cowardice and threatens to take his star away from him. Cecil sees them in an argument, and realizes that Kelley will suffer for his kindness to her. Determined to do the right thing she handcuffs her brother and goes out to summon Kelley. He and the chief meet the girl. She silently leads them inside the house and points to the handcuffed figure. The detective bends over the boy but finds that death has claimed him. The chief regrets his hasty words and leaves Kelley to comfort the girl, after telling him that he will hear more from the office for his successful handling of the case.

BORROWED PLUMES (Feb. 18').—The cast: Hugh Bryant (Ben Wilson); Ward Simmons (Jos. W. Girard); Marjorie Welch (Dorothy Phillips); Detective Miller (Charles Ogle). Scenario by Helmer W. Bergman. Produced by Ben Wilson.

The death of old Ezra Bryant proved a financial blessing to his two nephews, Hugh Bryant and Ward Simmons, but it did not materially assist poor Marjorie Welch, who continued to show the beautiful dresses that were afterwards sold to the daughters of Riverside Drive. Her one desire is, to be allowed to own some of the wonderful creations that she so patiently exhibits.

This desire culminates when she receives a card to a grand ball. Without asking permission, she takes one of the dresses with the idea of returning it on the following day. She wants to try the cup of happiness, and to be one of the fine ladies, if only for a few hours. In filching the gown from the place she is seen by Ward Simmons, who thus gets an idea for making her conform to his desires or suffer the shame of exposure.

In her room that evening she dresses herself in her borrowed finery, and is surprised by the arrival of Ward with a detective in tow. Ward threatens her with an immediate arrest unless she agrees to his unconventional proposal. Marjorie, of course, refuses, and Ward, seeing that she is adamant in her resolve, goes to the door to call the detective, but is dumfounded on seeing, not the detective, but his cousin Hugh. Hugh has overheard him calling up the detective agency on the phone and has followed him to Marjorie's room.

Ward denounces her to Hugh, who rises to the occasion and checkmates his scheme of exposure, by telling him in vigorous language that Marjorie has a perfect right to the dress, as it is only one of many presents that he hopes to give her after she becomes his wife.

DOLLY'S SCOOP—(Two Parts—Feb. 20).—The cast: Dolly Clare (Louise Lovely); Mrs. Fairfax (Marjorie Ellison); Helen (Mae Gaston); Maid (Laura Praether); James Fairfax (Hayward Mack); Philip (Millard Wilson); Dan Fisher (Lon Chaney); Jap boy (Edward Nes). Scenario by Ida Mary Park. Produced by Joseph De Grasse.

James Fairfax, editor of the Morning Argus, will stop for nothing to get a beat for his paper. He glories in scandals. To him anything that is news is property, no matter whom it hurts. He impresses this on the members of his staff, who secretly resent his ways. Among the bitterest in this connection is a girl reporter, Dolly Clare. In private life Fairfax is very much in love with his wife, Alice, and very jealous of her—particularly of one Phillip Ainsworth, who had paid marked attentions to Mrs. Fairfax before her marriage.

Mrs. Fairfax learns that Ainsworth has taken to hard drinking. His sister comes to her and asks her to use her influence with her brother to make him brace up. Mrs. Fairfax promises to see Ainsworth, although she is in desperate fear that her husband will find it out and misconstrue her interest. She goes to Ainsworth's rooms late one afternoon. He has been drinking; and to her horror he produces a bundle of her letters written to him before her marriage, and her picture, which he has kept, telling her that she will always be the only woman in the world for him, that without her he doesn't care what happens to him.

As she recoils from him he tries to catch her in his arms. She screams and dodges, and when Ainsworth tries to follow her, he trips and falls heavily to the floor. He is rendered unconscious, but the noise has alarmed the apartment house. Mrs. Fairfax takes her letters and rushes out just as Dolly appears at the other end of the hall. Dolly sees only a heavily veiled woman. Dolly enters Phillip's rooms and discovers the photograph of Mrs. Fairfax, which the editor's wife has overlooked in her flight. Dolly doesn't know who it is, and she rushes to the phone to let Fairfax know of her scoop. Not reaching him at the office she calls him up at his residence. Mrs. Fairfax answers the phone and learns the terrible truth. She is overcome and loses no time in going to the newspaper office.

There she pleads with Dolly for her reputation, concealing her identity. Fairfax calls over the phone for Dolly, and Mrs. Fairfax hastens away. Dolly secretly sorry for the unknown woman, pleads over the telephone with Fairfax to suppress the picture. Fairfax orders the photo to be printed on the front page, with big headlines. Dan, a reporter enters disgusted; his evening's work has resulted only in a story of an unknown suicide. Although he has her picture, he knows there will be no room in the Argus for it. He tosses it away. Dolly sees the photo, and has a brilliant idea.

Mrs. Fairfax decides to tell all to her husband. It is near midnight as she enters his den. When they come out a half hour later he is a changed man. The story must be stopped. He believes his wife and has forgiven her. He rushes out. The papers are just coming out of the press and a boy runs through the office with papers on his way to the editorial rooms. Fairfax seizes the paper and discovers Dolly's substitution. He changes the policy of the Argus, making a clean sheet of it. Through the story runs a pretty love theme between Dolly and Dan, which culminates happily at the finish.

ELEVATING FATHER (Two Parts—Feb. 16).—The Cast: The Girl (Louise Orth); Her Father (Dan Russell); Her Sweetheart (Ray Griffith).

Ray, a young man who owes a lot of money, loves Louise. He has never met her father, who is a stout gentleman and rather flirtatiously inclined. Ray is warned that a bill collector, disguised as a woman, is going to serve him with a summons. He gets a mallet and waits.

Louise's father disguises himself as a woman in order to follow a pretty girl who lives in the same hotel. By mistake he knocks on Ray's door, and as Ray thinks he is the disguised bill collector, he gives the old man a severe thrashing and kicks him out. Father has to go to bed in a much battered condition.

Louise brings Ray to visit her "sick" father and when the old man recognizes his daughter's sweetheart as his ruffianly assailant, he chases him all over the hotel with a revolver. Ray darts into the elevator as the old man throws a lassoo at him, and as the door slams, the rope which is tied to the furious father catches, and the old man is carried up several stories.

Ray, in his excitement loses control of the brake and the elevator shoots through the roof and up into the air with the old man dangling from the cage. When it lands upon the roof the furious old man takes vengeance upon the unfortunate suitor.

TWENTY MINUTES AT THE FAIR (Feb. 20).—The cast: The Wanderer (Billy Ritchie); His Friend (Gene Rogers); The Girl (Peggy Pearce).

Billy, while wearily trudging along the road, sees the San Diego Fair in the near distance. Believing that he might make some money if he could get inside, he steals in under a visitor's coat tails and after wandering through the interesting streets he sits down on a bench to rest. An old rounder sees Peggy and follows her as she runs from him to the store of her friend, an excitable Italian, who pursues her annoyer and punishes him. Billy and the old rounder meet. They are old friends and the rounder laughs when he sees Billy meet two girls and invite them to dinner, for he suspects that bill has no money.

Bill, of course, has none, and when the proprietress demands her pay he suggests to the girls that they should pitch dice to see who shall settle. They refuse, and Billy in his efforts to make the old rounder pay up comes to blows with him. The Italian suitor takes a hand in the fight and both are severely beaten by Billy. The girls get the police and Bill is chased through the streets to the Painted Desert, a Fair Concession. He runs to the highest peak of a precipice and defies his pursuers. The Italian hurls bombs at him and for a while Bill catches them and hurls them back at his assailants.

At last one well directed bomb shell explodes, and Billy vanishes in smoke and flame only to awake on a park bench. He imagines he is still being persecutedd but sees his annoyers are pigeons who literally cover him and when he drives them away he finds two eggs have been laid in his hat. He is annoyed at first, but pockets them when he realizes he has at least got something out of his visit to the Fair.

LAEMMLE.

ARTHUR'S LAST FLING (Feb. 13).—The cast: Arthur Batts (Rupert Julian); Fritz (Richard Sterling); Flora (Elsine Jane Wilson). Written and produced by Rupert Julian.

Arthur Batts is quite a man about town and has hundreds of love affairs to his credit. His bosom companion is Fritz, and the two friends are in the midst of a celebration on Arthur's approaching marriage to a wealthy young girl of the city. Confidentially, Arthur tells his friend that his girl is the brightest and best in the world.

That evening as the two friends are strolling down the street they see posters advertising the appearance of a well-known actress. Arthur recognizes the picture as that of a girl to whom he had paid much attention once before, and he decides that as this is his last night as a Benedict he will celebrate the occasion by having a big party with the actress as guest of honor.

Cheaper Light

The carbons of an alternating-current arc burn at about the same rate while in a direct-current arc one burns much slower. The direct-current arc therefore requires less carbons than the alternating current—one-fourth to one-third less. The direct-current arc also uses less current than the alternating current to produce the same amount of light.

A direct-current arc, therefore, costs less for power and for carbons, while giving the same amount of light. If your service is only alternating current a will convert it into direct current to enable you to operate your machine more cheaply. Write for folder 4205-A for details.

The party lasts all night, and the girl insists upon accompanying Arthur to his apartment. They arrive about 9 A. M., and Arthur is trying to make an excuse to get rid of the girl so as to prepare for his wedding, when matters are complicated by the arrival of Fritz with the wedding bouquet. The girl asks the meaning of the flowers, and Arthur is unable to give a satisfactory explanation.

Arthur takes advantage of his friends arrival to hurry into his wedding clothes. When he returns Flora, the actress, gets suspicion of where he is going. She previously had told Arthur that if he proved false to her, in spite of his evident affection, she would kill him, and Arthur, taking her at her word, leaves his friend Fritz to make his excuses while he hastens to the girl's house.

As soon as Flora finds that Arthur has gone she flies into a tantrum and the furniture of the apartment suffers as a consequence. Poor Fritz, unable to escape, makes the best of his predicament and calms Flora with an invitation to breakfast.

AS FATE DECIDES (Feb. 16).—The cast: The District Attorney (Rupert Julian); The Crook (Ernest Shields); Crook's Wife (Elsie Jane Wilson); The Crook's Pal (Harry Mann). Written by M. De La Parelle. Produced by Rupert Julian.

A young crook, who is being assiduously hunted, finds that he needs money and tries to get his wife to steal for him. She has almost consented when the police break in and nab him. The prosecuting attorney is convinced of the innocence of the wife, and decides to take her and her baby to his mother's house for protection and to get her away from her former influences and surroundings.

Arriving at her room, he finds the crook's pal trying to force his affections on the girl. He rescues her, and amid the surroundings of his own home she thrives and becomes very good to look upon, much to the attorney's discomfort. The pal in the meantime watches the house, and seeing the two together, gets jealous and writes a note to the husband in prison. This note is smuggled to the prisoner and he makes his escape.

Next door to the attorney is an inventor who is working on a repeating rifle which he fires against the metal disc in the laboratory in his house, or in a shed. The wife of the crook is an interestsed spectator of these experiments. On the night of her husband's escape, he sneaks into the library of the attorney and is about to stab him in the back when the inventor comes into his laboratory and fumbling in the dark sets off his gun.

The target not being in place the shot goes through the window into the library of the attorney and kills the crook. Unknown to the young wife who is sleeping peacefully upstairs the body is disposed of and with it the load on the attorney's conscience, who now finds himself free to love the girl.

VICTOR.

IN THE NIGHT (Feb. 17—Three Parts) The cast: Mr. Van Austin (Harry C. Myers); Mr. Warren (L. L. Hall); Mrs. Warren (Rosemary Theby); Slim (Jerry Hevener); Slim's Wife (Jennie Nelson).

Mr. Warren, a middle-aged business man, devoted only to his business, leaves the entertainment of his wife, a young and frivolous girl, to Mr. Van Austin, a man about town. On his leaving for a business trip, his wife calls the other man for a further meeting. Van Austin takes the opportunity to call late that evening.

Mr. Warren, missing his train, returns unexpectedly, and as he comes up the steps to his residence he sees a man forcing an entrance through a window. He draws a revolver, and entering through a door into the room, fires at the window curtains. He turns on the lights and there stands a burglar with his hands in the air. Mr. Warren is about to call up the police headquarters when he hears a groan from behind the curtains.

Tearing them open he discovers Mr. Van Austin wounded in the arm from his shot. He looks around and sees grips packed and realizes that his wife is about to leave him. He makes a bitter comparison between the crook who came to steal his worldly goods and the supposedly respectable man who came to steal his wife. Police Headquarters having heard his call and receiving no answer, finally dispatched two men to the house.

On arriving there they are met by Warren and told that the call was a mistake. Warren finally gives Van Austin the alternative of leaving the community immediately or being shot on sight. Van Austin makes a precipitous flight, Warren, hearing the condition of the crook's family, let's him go with a promise of employment on his country estate. His wife affects a reconciliation, and as the sun is rising it opens a new era for them both.

SEE AMERICA FIRST (No. 21, "A Trip Through Duluth, Minn.," Feb. 6).—Duluth, Minn., at the head of the Great Lakes, as it sits on the side of a vast hill looking down upon the boats which come and go, cool in the summer when the refreshing breezes blow, freezing in the winter, and ice bound, is the subject of one of the most interesting of the scenics, taken by the Gaumont Company and released in the series, "See America First." This Minnesota city is pictured in the twenty-first number of this interesting weekly scenic. In the film is shown the winter sports—curling, fancy skating, skiing and tobogganing. Glimpses of the great steel mills, the woolen manufacturing, the incoming and outgoing supply of ore from the iron range, disclose the great wealth-getting industries of this place.

The second half of the reel is devoted to Harry Palmer's funny animated cartoon, "Keeping Up With the Joneses."

JERRY'S MILLIONS (Feb. 11).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Father (Louis FitzRoy); Burglar (Jefferson Osborne); 1st Cop (Arthur Munns); 2d Cop (Gordon McGregor); 3d Cop (Harry Jackson); Daughter (Belle Bennett); Landlady (Janet Sully); Porter (George George); Postman (Jos. Von Meter). Directed by Milton Fahrney.

Out of funds and unable to pay his long overdue board bill, Jerry is in a bad way. To make matters worse he is not permitted to even see his sweetheart, her father having voiced the decision that he wants no penniless son-in-law. In seeking a way out of his precarious financial predicament Jerry gets himself into trouble with two policemen and his landlady. He succeeds in vanquishing the officers, but the landlady is more sturdy and knocks out poor Jerry. She leaves him on the floor, dead to the world, to answer the postman's ring.

A letter arrives addressed to Jerry. Curiosity getting the better of her, the landlady steams open the envelope and is amazed to learn that Jerry is heir to three million dollars. Forgetting her past differences she returns to him and, being leap year, proposes. Jerry decides there is safety in flight and rushes out of the house, grabbing the letter as he speeds away.

Alone and in safety he reads the letter and, overjoyed at the news, hurries to his sweetheart's home to tell her of his good fortune. The butler, who has been instructed by father not to admit him, attempts to bar his way, but Jerry pushes through the lines. The master of the house is called and armed with a revolver starts after the intruder.

As he approaches Jerry seeks safety in a cabinet. Unknown to any one a burglar is hiding in the clothes closet in the same room. He has locked the door and the father of the house naturally surmises that it is Jerry who is within. Father fires through the door, creating confusion in the household, of which Jerry is quick to take advantage as an opportunity of escape. He dashes out into the street and into the arms of the two policemen—the very two with whom he has previously had trouble. They take him back to the house, where they are met by astonished father with the burglar. One of the officers takes charge of the burglar and the other takes Jerry.

While this is happening the landlady receives a telegram stating that the news of Jerry's riches is a mistake—that Jerry was not the right man. Just as she finishes reading it the policeman comes up with Jerry, who is handed the telegram and so overcome that he faints away.

MUTUAL MASTERPICTURE DE LUXE.

POWDER (American, Five Parts—Feb. 10).—The cast: Bernheim (Constance Crawley); Chester Fosdick (Arthur Maude); Reinhold Burghoff (Jack Prescott); Baron von Halstyn (Jack Farrell); Judson Brand (William Carroll); Eleanor Brand, his daughter (Lizette Thorne); Marshall Brand (George Ahearn). Directed by Arthur Maude.

Judson Brand, a powder manufacturer, is approached by the envoys of two warring nations, but before entering into a contract with Baron Von Halstyn, envoy for Gravonia, he sends his son, Marshall, to investigate the country's financial condition. Burghoff, Sashofen's envo, is advised of a blockade and instructed to halt shipments of munitions to the enemy.

Both envoys try to enlist the help of Jan Bernheim, a clever political exile from Gravonia. Out of revenge, she promises to aid Burghoff, but patriotism prevails and she goes over to Von Halstyn, although pretending to remain in the employ of Burghoff. Elinor, Brand's daughter, is engaged to Fosdick, a humanitarian propagandist, who opposes Brand's mercenary attitude in furnishing munitions.

Burghoff allies himself with Fosdick, and together they hope to control the vote of the congressional committee against furnishing munitions. The committee is divided in opinion and the deciding vote is with Hayes, the chairman who favors the non-participating policy. Brand quarrels with Fosdick about the issue and forces Elinor, in sympathy with Fosdick, to break her engagement, when Fosdick refuses to renounce his principle.

Jan induces Burghoff to give Fosdick a check for a thousand dollars "for charitable purposes." Jan secures the canceled check which the unsuspecting Fosdick has accepted, for evidence against him, and when Von Halstyn urges her to win over Hayes to their side, she does so by showing him the check, which she makes him believe was accepted as a bribe from Burghoff. Burghoff refuses to accept defeat and proposes to Fosdick the blowing up of the powder mills, but Fosdick refuses to listen, so Burghoff undertakes it alone unknown even to Jan.

Brand's son, traveling through the war zone, finds their Brandite shells being used by both sides, and is so absorbed in commercialism that he is untouched by the evidence of suffering about him. Fosdick saves the life of a child belonging to one of the men employed by Burghoff to blow up the mills.

Brand receives a favorable report from his son and he and Von Halstyn ride over to the mill to sign up the contract, accompanied by Elinor and Jan. Fosdick, in Burghoff's office waiting for him, answers the telephone and learns of the plot to destroy the mills within an hour. He tries to reach Brand only to find that he and Elinor have gone to the mill.

Fosdick drives to the mills, and through his efforts the plan only partially succeeds; no one is hurt but Mason, the man who was on the job. Fosdick is found trying to put out the fuse and is accused by Brand of attempting to blow up the mill. Mason, however, clears him when he recovers and Von Halstyn and Jan are arrested by a secret service man who has been trailing them. Brand stubbornly insists that Fosdick is to blame for it all and vows he will sign the contract away. Then the final argument presents itself—his beloved son has been killed by a Brandite shell.

Later Von Halstyn and Jan are deported. Burghoff flees the country and Fosdick and Elinor are united. Brand turns from the manufacture of ammunition to Red Cross work.

THE DEAD ALIVE (Gaumont—Five Parts—Feb. 17).—The cast: William H. Stuyvesant (Sydney Mason); "Doc" Ardini (Henry W. Pemberton); Old Jim, father of Mary and Jessie (James Levering); Jessie and Mary, twin sisters (Marguerite Courtot). Written and directed by Henry J. Vernot.

Old Jim loses his money in the gambling house of "Doc" Ardini, an international crook. Feeling sorry for the old man, Ardini gives him a job. He will not write his motherless twin daughters that he is down and out. They come to the city to earn their living. Jessie secures a position in a department store, and Mary gets a place in the chorus of a musical comedy. They keep house for their father, who pretends he has honest employment.

At her place of business, Jessie is seen and admired by William Stuyvesant, a young millionaire. After meeting her and impressing her with the honesty of his intentions, Stuyvesant asks Jessie to marry him. Before she can reply, word comes that her father has killed a man when the police raid Ardini's resort. Learning of her father's calling and his arrest for murder, Jessie feels she cannot marry Stuyvesant. Without telling him why, she declines his offer and moves to escape his attentions. She merely writes that there is a terrible secret in her life that makes her marriage impossible. She has also kept from him that she has a twin sister who is on the stage.

However, Stuyvesant learns her new address. He visits her and persuades her to marry him. Old Jim will not give his right name, and after a trial is sent to prison for ten years under the name of Jim O'Connor. Ardini is imprisoned three months for keeping a gambling house.

On leaving prison, Ardini is in need of money. He learns of Jessie's marriage and also that Stuyvesant does not know of old Jim's disgrace and Mary's stage career. Getting Mary under his hypnotic power, he sends her to Jessie for money to keep from revealing the family secrets.

Jessie is killed in an automobile accident and her husband is inconsolable. Ardini, under an assumed name, wins Stuyvesant's friendship. He claims spiritualistic powers, persuading Stuyvesant that through him he can see his late wife. Ardini forces Mary to pose at a distance as Jessie.

One of the demands he makes, saying it is necessary for the spiritual manifestation, is that all the servants leave the country place the evening Stuyvesant is to be shown his wife's spirit. Ardini then plans to rob the safe in the millionaire's room.

Mary rebels against tricking her late sister's husband, and gets word to him of the imposition. The safe is protected by an automatic device that fires a revolver when the combination is tampered with. Unaware of this, Ardini decrees his own death. Mary tells the family secrets to Stuyvesant, who marries her just as soon as he can secure her father's pardon.

MUSTANG.

WHEN THE LIGHT CAME (3 parts, Feb. 18).—The cast: Jim Morton, a rancher (Thomas Chatterton); Wilbur Merrill, his partner (John Farrell); Martha, Merrill's daughter (Anna Little); Burton, an actor (Jack Richardson); Dr. Bronson (George Rainey). Directed by Thomas Chatterton.

Jim Morton is a successful but lonesome rancher. One day, crossing the desert, he rescues an old Indian from the attack of a rattle snake. The Indian rewards his generosity by remaining to assist in the work about the ranch. Later Jim solves his problem by securing a partner, Wilbur Merrill, who arrives with his daughter, Martha. Martha is exceedingly industrious about the home and provides a continual round of gaiety which soon affects the rancher to a point that far exceeds friendship. His constant attempts to speak to her find him tongue-tied and embarrassed. Martha, with a woman's quick intuition, understanding his plight and lightheartedly, unthinkingly teases him in many ways.

Burton, an actor, who has established a hunting lodge nearby, spies Martha at a broncho busting contest. He makes ungentlemanly advances which she coolly repulses. Later he follows her to the Morton-Merrill ranch and finds her digging earth for some plants. Being adroit, he succeeds in gaining her confidence and helps her with her work. Jim is surprised to discover them as Burton is leaving, but a thoroughly natural explanation by Martha causes the matter to pass from his mind. On this day her father is killed while traveling through the woods by a bolt of lightning.

In a day or two the sadness has been overcome, to a certain extent, and Jim makes up his mind that now or never is the time to declare himself to Martha. He loses courage and leaves a note on the table, asking her answer. She has gone to Burton's lodge—innocently because Burton has held up to her the lure of a position as an operatic singer. When she is about to leave, he makes improper advances, which are smartly punished by Martha's stinging whip. She starts for home. Burton fears that Martha will tell Jim and he enters the Morton house hoping to forestall her. He finds Jim's note, asking Martha to marry him, and writes the word "No" at the bottom of the sheet. Jim finds the note and is greatly disheartened.

Burton disguises himself as a professor of music and by promises of employment at a fabulous salary, succeeds in getting Martha to leave for New York. Martha's efforts to secure work in New York are hopeless. Then Burton, who has been watching her, meets her as if by accident, and offers his help. Later, disguised as a professor of music, he lures her to his apartment. Removing his disguise as she is playing he asserts that he is going to revenge the sharp, stinging blows given by her whip across his face some time before.

Jim has been superintending the dynamiting of stumps on his land and, being careless, has been seriously injured. A visiting doctor, spending his vacation at Jim's home, brings him East for special treatment and it so happens that the doctor's quarters are located in the same building where Burton has his apartment—in fact, the apartment is directly across the hall. It is after the doctor has gone out, leaving Jim sitting with bandaged eyes, that the ranchman hears the struggle in Burton's apartment. He rescues Martha and administers a sound thrashing to Burton. The arrival of the doctor finds that a complete understanding has been reached between Martha and Jim. Burton is left to brood over his sorry failure. Jim and Martha prepare for a new life of happiness on Jim's big ranch.

A MODERN SPHINX (Three Parts—Feb. 15).—The cast: Asa and Zaida (Winifred Greenwood); Ram (Chas. Newton); Essene (Nan Christy); Semeth (King Clark); Francis Passmore, artist and musician (Edward Coxen); Mrs. Grant (Ella M. Morrison); Aster (George Field). Directed by Chas. Bartlett.

Asa loves Senneth, but he loves Essene, another girl. Asa, scorned, appeals to her father, Ram, a sorcerer, to use his magic arts to prosper "A Love that Seeks For Self" and he refuses her request. When she trys to poison Senneth, Ram puts her under a spell—"For three thousand years shall thy soul sleep and then reborn without love. In love may it find redemption."

The cycle of years has run its course, and to Mr. and Mrs. Grant is born a baby daughter—Zaida. She grows up to womanhood and is known as the Modern Sphinx, or "The Woman Without a Heart." She has many lovers, but lacking the power to love, she cannot understand their proposals.

At a fete given in her honor she meets the famous soothsayer and oculist, Aster. He foretells her future in these mystic words: "The cycle of the stars is completed; you will learn love's secret—sacrifice." Again Zaida is mystified by love. "What is love?"

Francis Passmore, artist and musician, joins the house party. There he sees Zaida and is struck by her cold, lifeless beauty. He hears that she is the Modern Sphinx, but cannot believe that a woman of such beauty can know nothing of love. He falls in love with her. He tries to explain to her the meaning of "love" and plays a lyric on his violin and relates the story, but the music fails to awaken her soul. He tells her of love in allegory.

One night he finds her sitting by a stone pillar gazing at the heavens in her passionless manner. As he watches her, she seems to turn into a sphinx. Then he has an inspiration and teaches her love—then passion. She escapes from Lim, mystified and frightened. Can this be love? He follows her and as he gather her into his arms again love awakens. She returns to the house and there meets a new arrival—Passmore's wife. Then she realizes that though she has found love she has stolen it from another.

In her misery she remembers Aster and gets a small vial of poison. There on the cold balcony, with the stars as her companions, she puts a few drops of the poison on her lips. She disappears.

The scene shifts back to 3,000 years before and Ram is seen reading the stars as if it had all happened just in a moment. He returns to the chamber and there finds Asa as she awakens. The soul of Asa has learned the secret of Love—Sacrifice.

BEAUTY.

ELLA WANTED TO ELOPE (Feb. 16).—The cast: Ella (Neva Gerber); Mother (Lucille Ward); Attorney (William Carroll); Jack (Richard Rosson). Directed by James Douglass.

Ella wants to elope with a real man. Dick loves Ella ardently, but she can't "see" him at all. This perplexing state of affairs continues until mother begins to worry about Ella's lagging interest in her studies and consults her attorney. He suggests that he will be the goat—he will make love to Ella, elope with her and then desert her. The cure will be sure and lasting. Mother, somewhat dubious, agrees to the plan.

At last Ella's romance begins. She succumbs to her elderly suitor's whirlwind wooing and elopes with him, pursued by Dick. Arrived at their destination, Ella is left in her room all alone while her elderly lover is hustled off to jail by the younger one. He, however, had telephoned to mother to come and get her deserted child.

In the morning Ella discovers that she has been deserted and when mother arrives on the scene she finds that her accomplice is lodged in jail. Together they go to get him released, and while mother is explaining the court just how it all happened Ella and Dick decide to elope in earnest.

THE BATTLE OF CUPIDOVITCH (Feb. 20).—The cast: Billy (Dick Rosson); Cutie (Carol Halloway); Billy's Dad (John Steppling); Cutie's Dad (John Sheehan); Bridget (Mary Talbot). Directed by Archer McMackin.

Billy and Cutie are sweethearts and their respective sires are friends and neighbors. The old men, having fought through a war together, take great joy in discussing the present war situation. But of a sudden Cutie's father asserts that, "If Ghardinoczx had not captured Ogradtixc, Shebinevski would have advanced to Plyntx!" The argument waxes furious, friendship is forgotten and to Billy and Cutie come commands from both headquarters to "sever relations with the enemy's ally."

But the fires of love are not so easily put out, and when the elders discover their children courting over the dividing hedge, guards are immediately placed to patrol the boundary. Billy's father enlists the services of his gardener, a good old soul who hasn't the slightest desire in the world to upset romance. Cutie's father got Bridget, the old cook, to guard the girl she had raised from babyhood. Under the watchful eyes of their respective campaigns they were good guards, Bridget right on the job with her soup ladel and the gardener doing his "juty" with his spade.

Cutie's fluffy white puppy broke through the lines onto Billy's lawn and Billy immediately has an idea. He pens a note, puts it under the dog's collar and pets it and sends it flying home. The note is a fake message telling Cutie to prepare for action at 8 o'clock. The anxious fathers fall for the false note and get ready for 8 o'clock.

The sentries are bought off, and when Billy makes his escape at 7:30 he binds and gags the gardener, as his own request so he will have the appearance of having been overpowered. Billy makes his way to the enemy's stronghold and assists Cutie down from her window, while Bridget does sentry duty to see they are not disturbed. They receive her blessing before binding her also. At 8 o'clock the fathers find their guns spiked. Each forces a confession from his traitorous sentry. The old gentlemen decide to combine forces and protect their joint interest and over their chess board, with their mint juleps, they get together, while Cutie and Billy pay a visit to the minister and receive his blessing.

THE GIRL AND THE GAME—(Chapter 7—Spike's Awakening—Two Parts—Feb. 7).—Rhinelander, to avoid future trouble, moves his camp to Baird. Coincidentally Helen is transferred to Las Vegas, a nearby station. When the new wires are up, Rhinelander and Storm telegraph Helen that important contracts are expected on Train Number 19 on Sunday. The plan is for Helen to bring them to Baird where Storm will meet her and drive her to the camp.

Seagrue, following Rhinelander's new move, located secondary headquarters at Las Vegas and he learns of the right-of-way contracts expected by Rhinelander. He is determined to get these valuable papers in order to embarass his rivals and sends peremptory orders to Spike at Oceanside to hurry to Las Vegas. After a drunken debauch, Spike is thrown off a train in Oceanside. Helen Holmes happens on the spot and, taking pity on Spike's plight, insists on paying his fare so that he can continue his journey. Spike vows that if he ever gets a chance, he will prove his gratitude. Spike arrives in Las Vegas and wanders about the streets until spied by Seagrue. When he joins them, Seagrue demands that Spike take measures to get the contracts away from Helen the following day, which is Sunday. "Then I can tell you," blazed Spike, "you don't get them."

This so enraged Seagrue that he sprang on Spike, but the powerful railroader bore him down. The interference of Lug and Bill saved Seagrue and Spike was permitted to go. Seagrue instructed Lug and Bill to kidnap Helen on Train No. 19, stating that he would overtake them at milepost No. 149. The two villains climb on top of the train, and when every thing was clear they climbed down to the window, climbed in, overpowered Helen and secured her with ropes. By this time Seagrue's car was speeding alongside the rear platform of the train. Bill, an old sailor, connected the automobile to the train with a rope, and Helen's limp form was transferred to the automobile.

Storm met the train at Baird but missed Helen. The conductor stated that she had surely been on the train when it left Las Vegas. Storm hastens to Las Vegas in the cab of the locomotive. Meanwhile, the dashing automobile has nearly run over Spike in Las Vegas—he knows its destination is Seagrue's shack and, guessing the rest, he dashes forward. Storm and Spike meet at the shack. Storm throttles Spike until a complete explanation is made and Storm, amazed, announces that if Spike proves his friendship, he will forgive everything that has gone before.

Storm goes to the roof and Spike forces the door. Spike gets into the room first—where Seagrue and his men are baiting Helen. Seagrue has threatened to search Helen after the papers taken from her are discovered not to be the wanted contracts. Spike's sudden entry results in a fight, during which Spike is floored. Helen spies some explosive cylinders and seizing one of them threatens to kill them all. This doesn't daunt Seagrue who is kept only from his foul purpose when Storm's leveled revolver comes in through the window.

Helen covers the gang with a revolver while Storm climbs in but when she momentarily relinquishes vigilance they escape. However, the contracts, also a lot of Christmas mail for the men at camp, have been recovered and Helen, Storm and Spike return to Rhinelander. He is amazed at the story, especially at Spike's awakening.

THE SPIRIT OF THE GAME (Three Parts—Feb. 9).—The cast: Dick Thornton (Edwin Stanley); His Sweetheart (Kathlyn Adams); The Left-Over (Morris Foster); His Sweetheart (Ethyle Cooke).

Captain Dick Thornton was the star football player of his college. He was the center of attraction wherever he went. His classmate was very proud of him. One day the prettiest girl in the college town who had always seemed to find so much pleasure in the company of Captain Thornton urged the classmate to try for the football team. Day after day the classmate practiced on the field, but the head coach did not consider him worthy of the team, nor even of the regular squad of substitutes. He was nothing but a left-over.

At midnight, as the left-over was standing by the window in his room, he noticed the form of Captain Thornton walking across the campus. Realizing that he was breaking the rules and knowing that the big game was to come off the next day, the left-over went in pursuit. Two hours later, in the back room of a squalid saloon the left-over found his hero—a sodden shell of the man he was before the bottle of whiskey in front of him had been emptied. As the left-over was helping the captain home, he saw the girl who loved Thornton coming up the street. The left-over decided upon a great sacrifice. He dragged his drunken friend behind a bush and when the girl was near he appeared in an apparently intoxicated state, telling her that Thornton wanted to bring him home, but he chased him away. When the girl had gone, the left-over shook his disguise and escorted the drunken Thornton home.

The next day Thornton told the left-over to appear on the field in uniform; but as he had kept watch all night over the captain, his sleep-heavy eyes closed soon after the latter left the room, and he did not wake up until the game had started. In the stand the girl watched the game. Vainly she had searched the field for him—the left-over, with whom she really was in love. The she saw him come to the side lines. Her lips curved in scorn. It had taken him many hours to sleep off the effect of his supposed debauch. She saw the coach order the left-over from the side lines because he had come in the middle of the game. She saw him walk hopelessly off.

The fierce play of the opposing team crippled many of Thornton's men. Her ears caught the murmur that went through the stand. "Thornton's groggy," a thousand lips said. "He's all in! They'll get him now!" She thought that only she knew the reason. In the dressing room under the grandstand the left-over sat—alone. Rumbling through the great stands he heard the cheers of the other team's rooters. When the whistle blew the men of his own team crowded into the dressing room, a weary, hopeless crew. Captain Thornton saw the left-over and shook his head. They would be beaten in the last quarter. He hadn't the spirit to put in his men; nor the strength to put into his own plays because the whiskey of the night before had taken it away. And when the coach crowded the players out of the dressing room and back for the last quarter the nerve that had been keeping the captain up broke. He collapsed.

"I'm all in," he said when the left-over tried to rouse him. A look of realization came to his eyes. He told the left-over to take his place. After a little discussion the left-over finally consented and, donning his friend's jersey, the the head guard, the nose guard, etc., he rushed upon the field. The fresh energy of the left-over put ginger into his men and he won. His identity was revealed and he was roundly cheered. And he was placed in his proper position in the eyes of the girl.

phone Operator (Hazel Kirk); Cashier (Morgan Jones); Contractor (Justus D. Barnes).

A little boy, while walking with his mother one day through a park, noticed a young man with a dog which was doing some remarkable tricks. The mother and son approached, and the young woman, who was with the man with the dog, said that Lady—that's the canine's name—saved her husband from an unjust conviction. Then she told this story:

The young man was a clerk employed by a contractor. The girl had been employed in the local telephone exchange, and they were expecting to be married. The young man's immediate superior was the cashier, whose reputation was of the best, although in secret he was a gambler and a spendthrift. He became seriously involved and decided to steal money from the concern and cast the blame upon the clerk. The next time the clerk was sent to the factory with the weekly payroll, the cashier managed to substitute an empty satchel for the one containing the money. His dog, Lady, was the only witness and frustrated the cashier's plan by shifting the money satchel into its proper place. When the clerk was a short distance from the factory, which was in a country place, he noticed a man lying in the road apparently unconscious. When he went to the assistance of the "victim" the latter sprang upon the clerk and then searched the auto for the money. But again the canine rescued it.

Undaunted by these failures, the cashier decided to try another scheme. The head of the firm drew a personal check for $20, and asked the cashier to get the money for him. The cashier "raised" the amount to $20,000, and sent the young clerk for it. Later the clerk was forced to admit that he had seen the cashier go directly into his employer's office, while the employer swore that he had received $20. The cashier, however, had a self-addressed envelope prepared, slipped the large bills inside, mailed them to himself at his home, and was ready for the explosion he knew was coming.

It happened that the contractor's account was overdrawn by the $20,000 check, and the bank officials communicated with him. The cashier declared he had given a $20 check to the clerk and had received $20 from him on his return from the bank. The clerk swore truthfully that the check was $20,000, and that he had given that sum to the cashier. The story was not believed, and when the cashhier virtuously insisted upon being searched and the money was not found, the clerk was placed under arrest. Before he was led away he tried to pet his dog, but to his grief the animal shrank away from him and fawned around the cashier, who gloatingly remarked, "This dog knows a crook when she sees one. I'll care for her while you are in jail," and when he went home that evening the cashier took the dog with him. In the letter box he found the envelope with the money, and after placing a few bills in his pocket, replaced the others in the envelope and hid it behind a picture. His creditor called, was surprised at being paid in full and induced the cashier to again visit the gambling house, and see if his luck had not changed.

They left the dog, locked in the room. There was a telephone, and the dog removed the receiver with his teeth, a trick his master had taught him. Then he barked into the mouthpiece. The clerk's sweetheart at the telephone exchange recognized the dog's bark, and after looking up the number of the subscriber went to the house. The dog greeted her excitedly, led her to the framed picture on the wall, and when she failed to understand, jumped, grabbed the wire and brought the picture crashing to the floor. In the back of it she found the envelope with the money. The girl, realizing the value of the evidence, summoned the police, and while they were examining the house, the cashier returned. He was placed under arrest, but managed to extinguish the lights and leap out of the window. The dog followed, tracked him to his hiding place in an alley, and led the officers there. The fugitive tried to shoot, but the dog saved the policeman's life by jumping in front of him and being injured herself. Then the cashier was overpowered and led a prisoner to the station, where the young clerk was set free. The policeman who had narrowly escaped being shot bent over and patted his canine preserver.

After hearing the story the mother and son congratulated the young couple on having such a sagacious animal, and walked away.

THE MATSUSHIMA ISLANDS (Picturesque Japan—Photocolor—Feb. 7).—In this picture the wonders of the Land of the Rising Sun are pictured in all the glory of their natural colors. A boat ride through the islands unfolds a delightfull panorama of the splendors of the region. The natives are shown oyster fishing, all decked out in their gorgeous kimonas, giant mountains rise to majestic heights, little villages nestle at the foot, and other interesting features are pictured.

ENGINEERING FEATS IN OREGON (Pathe—On the same reel as foregoing).—Great engineering achievements are always interesting to the lay as well as the technical mind. The Oregon Railway, whose course was blasted through solid rock; the giant turbines that drive dynamos which generate 5,000 horse-power in electricity; the great dam, built at a cost of $2,000,000; all these and other interesting features are pictured.

HAPLESS HAPPENINGS (Starlight, Feb. 7).—Millie Millions dreams one night of being saved by her ideal man, and is on the lookout at all times for him. Old Heinie seems to fit that description and is looked upon with great favor—by the girl. But Mother has other plans for her offspring. These include an alliance with a foreign nobleman, who is on the high seas on his way to the home of the Millions.

Millie conceives the brilliant idea of dressing Heinie up in such an outfit as is usually associated with foreign noblemen. He dons the raiment all right, and is received with open arms by the fond parents, getting away with it fairly well. But finally the Count's steamer docks and that personage reaches the home of his intended in time to discredit Heinie, who is thrown into exterior darkness.

THE PRECIOUS PACKET (Gold Rooster, 5 parts, Feb. 11).—The story deals with a young man who performs an unusual service for Great Britain under the auspices of "The Younger Sons," an organization of the younger sons of British nobles. THE RED CIRCLE (No. 9, "Dodging the Law," two parts, Feb. 12, Balboa).—This episode opens with a fight between Max Lamar and "Smiling" Sam Eagen, the "reformed" crook. Charles Gordon, an attorney, wrongfully accused of embezzling, rescues Lamar, who tells him that if he ever needs help to come to him. Later, on the beach with June, Lamar is met by two detectives from the city on the search for Gordon. They ask his aid, but he tells them he knows nothing. June, her heart going out to the poor oppressed man, runs to tell him of the officers' approach. He makes his getaway, and June throws a lighted lamp at the officers as they enter Gordon's shack, setting it on fire. However, they see the Red Circle on her hand. Later, "Smiling" Sam notices the lurid mark on June's hand. What will he do?

WATCH FLOWERS GROW (Globe, Feb. 14).—The first scene shows the buds and flowers of the lily species lying concealed beneath their foliage. Then, as living things, the blossoms separate for room before finally opening. The sight of these blossoms bursting into flower to drink in the odorous wine of early morning, only to give back its draught a thousand fold in the hours that follow, is rare and refreshing.

SIBERIA, THE VAST UNKNOWN (1st installment, on same reel as foregoing).—Preparatory to starting on the trip to northern Siberia, the Pathe expedition stopped at Nome, Alaska, where many interesting incidents were filmed. After a panoramic view of this city, which literally came into existence in a day, during the gold rush in the late 90's, many interesting scenes and incidents follow in rapid succession. There being no harbor at Nome, and the shallow water not permitting vessels to approach the shore, an aerial trolley has been strung out over the surf to deep water. The Nome public school, although rude in appearance compared with schools in the United States, is probably the most impressive building in Alaska. The Nome fire department has a hard time of it. The streets are paved with planks which, as a whole, don't allow of much speed. The church, too, now is well established in Alaska. Several good studios of the Eskimo are also given. Eskimo's are seen pitching their tents on the sands for the summer, to sell their carving and furs to the tourists. They have, with the help of the United States Government, raised large herds of deer through scientific methods. Although not as skillful as the American cowboy, the Eskimo herders know how to use the lasso. The reindeer are readily domesticated. Many have been broken to harness and some become so tame that they are admirable pets.

LUKE FOILS THE VILLAIN (Rolin Film Co.).—Luke is a miller brave and bold. He laughs and sings from morning until night, happy in the thought that he is loved by Mazie Nut. Mazie and Luke take advantage of atmospheric conditions and picturesque surroundings and "spoon" by the bright moonlight, while the old mill brings up the rear. Thus unconsciously visualizing the dreams of some would-be painter they continue softly purring. Then the villain comes—and disturbs them. Follows a series of brilliant tactics used by the gladiators which are spine tickling to say the least.

THE SHRINE OF HAPPINESS (Gold Rooster, 5 parts, Feb. 18).—Dave Scott, a wealthy mine owner, is killed. His daughter, Marie, goes to her father's old friend Richard Clark, knowing that he will take care of her interests. Clark and his grown son, Ted, become attached to Marie. Innocent in manner, she sees no necessity for concealing her preference for the elder Clark. In time, Ted's attachment culminates in a proposal, which is rejected. Ted accuses his father of standing in his way and the father makes Marie promise that she will accept Ted. A few minutes before the time set for the ceremony, a note from Ted explains that he realizes the love that exists between Marie and his father, and rather than exact the sacrifice, he has left his father's home, leaving them free to marry.

LOVE WILL CONQUER (Keystone, 2 parts, Jan. 30).—The cast: Pride of the Neighborhood (Fred Mace); A Quiet Worker (Mack Swain); An Entertainer (Harry Gribbon); His Partner (Polly Moran); An Illustrious Patron (Joseph Swickard); A Faded Vampire (Billie Brockwell); Piano Player (Harry McCoy).

While Harry Gribbon and Polly Moran, a pair of entertainers, are providing amusement for a cafe full of people, Joseph Swickard strolls in with Billie Brockwell on his arm. Billie is a sort of vampire and she has cast a spell on Swickard, who buys champagne for his charmer. Fred Mace is a fighter held in high regard for his prowess in the neighborhood. He gets into a quarrel with Billie, as he resents her attachment to the prosperous appearing Swickard. This ends with Swickard challenging Mace to a duel. So confident is Swickard that he orders a coffin of an undertaker over the 'phone. They have a rattling fight. Some of Mace's accomplices stab him by mistake and he runs to the cafe with Swickard in pursuit. The fighters chase around the place till they see that Mack Swain has quietly won the hand of Billie Brockwell. The pair of lovers go out to the accompaniment of the strain, "Love Will Conquer."

HE DID AND HE DIDN'T (Keystone, two parts, Jan. 30).—Roscoe Arbuckle and Mabel Normand are cast as a happy couple living in a richly furnished mansion. Roscoe is a physician. Things begin to happen when Mabel's old school friend, William Jefferson, comes to see her. Their innocent pleasure in talking over old times is misunderstood by Roscoe, and he is fuming with rage and jealousy, but Mabel pays no attention to him.

Complications occur a-plenty owing to the machinations of crooks. They send a hurry-up call for Roscoe, saying that a patient is dying in a nearby town. When Roscoe finds that the address given is that of a vacant house, he races back in his big auto.

But things are happening rapidly meanwhile at the mansion. Mabel goes to bed and discovers Al St. John, a burglar, under her bed. Her cries bring Jefferson on the scene. The burglar makes a sudden get-a-way through a window. When Roscoe returns, he finds Jefferson trying to restore Mabel who has fainted away. Roscoe is furious and knocks Jefferson down several times. He then turns on Mabel and chokes her. He leaves her unconscious, but she suddenly comes to. With a gun in her hand and with fury in her eye she pursues him to the stairs. He falls and slides halfway down the stairs, turns a complete flip-flop and comes to rest with a thud at the bottom. Mabel takes pity on him and they forget their animosities and settle down to happiness again.

ACQUITTED (Feb. 6—Fine Arts—Five Parts).—The cast: John Carter, bookkeeper in the Home Insurance Co. (Wilfred Lucas); Mrs. Carter, his wife (Mary Alden); Helen, his daughter (Bessie Love); Nellie, his other daughter (Carmen De Rue); Ned Fowler, a reporter in love with Helen (Elmer Clifton); Ira Wolcott, president of the Home Insurance Co. (Sam De Grasse); The Night Watchman, a dope fiend (W. J. Freemont); Charles Ryder, cashier of Home Insurance Co. (Spottiswoode Aitken); Chief of Police (James O'Shea); Captain of Police (F. A. Turner).

John Carter, who is a bookkeeper in an insurance company in a small town, is arrested on a charge of murdering Charles Ryder, a cashier. Afterwards the night watchman is arrested for fighting and deprived of the "dope" he is addicted to; he confesses himself guilty of the crime. Then Carter finds that the president of the company will not reinstate him in his old position on account of the notoriety he has gained.

In spite of all his efforts, Carter cannot get a position and his family is reduced to want. He leaves a note on the table in his home, saying that he has gone to a hotel to kill himself. His motive is to provide for his family by his insurance. Nellie, his little daughter, strays into the yard of Ira Wolcott, the president of the insurance company. He finds out from her the destitution of the family and rescues Carter. A scene is shown of the family a few weeks later. They have been restored to their former modest state of prosperity and happiness. Ned Fowler, a clever young reporter who has aided Carter, becomes engaged to the daughter of the house, Helen.

HIS PRIDE AND SHAME (Keystone—Two Parts—Feb. 6).—The cast: Chief of Police (Ford Sterling); Mayor (Guy Woodward); His Daughter (Juanita Hansen); Chief's Son (Bobbie Vernon); Chief Crook (Bobbie Dunn).

Guy Woodward, the Mayor of the town, is on very good terms with Chief Woodward. He congratulates the police official for the capture of the head of a band of crooks. Sterling's son, Bobbie Vernon, has been engaged to Juanita Hansen, the daughter of Woodward. Bobbie returns from college, but his sissified ways disgust Mayor Woodward and he withdraws his consent to the wedding. With the assistance of an accomplice, the chief crook escapes from jail and starts to shoot up the Mayor's office. While Woodward is hiding in the closet, Sterling has sought safety on top of some hot water pipes. The heat makes him let go his hold and he falls on the crook, knocking him unconscious. Then Ford shouts to the Mayor to come out of hiding, claiming that he has single-handed captured the dangerous character.

Bobbie, the Chief's son, is lured into the cell, where the chief crook has been confined. Making a quick exchange of costume, the crook escapes and leaves Bobbie behind. He is found by the Mayor and the Chief, who are enraged at his stupidity in being bested by the crook. Bobby leads the way to the crook's den, where the girl has been kidnaped. Sterling and Woodward are both disguised as the chief crook, and they get into funny mixups, shooting at each other by mistake.

Juanita Hansen, the Mayor's daughter, escapes from the room, where she has been confined, to the roof. With a ladder, Bobbie comes to the rescue of the girl. After some hairbreadth escapes from one building to another they reach the Mayor's apartments. Sterling is captured by the crooks and is forced by them to take a bomb to the Mayor's house for the purpose of blowing it up. Just before the building is blown up Woodward, Sterling and Bobbie escape. Then the Mayor remembers that he locked Juanita in her room. A brave rescue by Bobbie follows and the Mayor gives her hand to the young hero.

D'ARTAGNAN (Kay-Bee—Feb. 6—Five Parts).—The cast: D'Artagnan (Orrin Johnson); Queen Anne of Austria (Dorothy Dalton); Miladi (Louise Glaum); Duke of Buckingham (Harvey Clark); Cardinal (Walt Whitman); Count de Rochfort (Arthur Maude); King Louis XIII (George Fisher); Madame Bonacieux (Rhea Mitchell).

Going to Paris, D'Artagnan becomes a member of the famous King's Musketeers. He is sent by the Queen on a dangerous mission to England. His three companions are either captured or put out of commission in the course of fights on foot and horseback. D'Artagnan reaches London and recovers from the Duke of Buckingham a pair of studs given him as tokens of regard by the Queen. On the ship on which he returns the hero is captured by his deadly enemy, De Rochfort.

Jumping over the side, he clings to the chains of the vessel till it reaches port in France. He restores the studs to the Queen, and she has them put back into the necklace where they belong. Cardinal Richelieu has induced the King to command the Queen to appear wearing the necklace at a great court ball. When he sees the complete necklace, his plan to embarrass the Queen falls through. In addition to obtaining the favor of the Queen, D'Artagnan is rejoiced over the safe return of his comrades and his reward from his sweetheart for his bravery.

HIS HEREAFTER (Keystone—Two Parts—Feb. 6).—The cast: Charles Murray, Louise Fazenda, Harry Booker, Wayland Trask, Ed Kennedy, Pat Kelley and Myrtle Lind.

Wayland Trask starts for the West to make his fortune. He is in love with Myrtle Lind, but Pat Kelley, the father, lays down the law that Wayland must make good before he gets the girl. Trask hits the typical wild and woolly Western town. Harry Booker is the diminutive but droll proprietor of the gambling house and Ed Kennedy is his husky bouncer. Booker has a daughter, Louise Fazenda, who is much sought after.

Money changes hands rapidly in faro and other games of chance. Finally a fight starts and shots are fired in all directions, while the excited crowd makes laughable attempts to seek shelter. Charles Murray is the sheriff and struts around displaying his badge, until trouble starts, when he makes himself scarce. His idea of keeping the peace is to keep out of trouble personally.

Trask has exciting scenes with Louise Fazenda. There are pathetic moments, when the girl excites the sympathies of the audience, but they are quickly followed by some amusing occurrence in which Murray or Booker figure. Masked men hold up a stage and there is a hot fight between the bandits and the passengers. Then there is a storm with lightning flashing incessantly and water falling in torrents.

HIS PICTURE IN THE PAPERS (Fine Arts—Five Parts—Feb. 13).—The cast: Proteus Prindle, manufacturer of Prindle's 27 Varieties (Clarence Handyside); Pansy Prindle, known as "28" (Rene Boucicault); Pearl Prindle, known as "29" (Jean Temple); Pete Prindle, his son (Douglas Fairbanks); Christopher Cadwalader, of the Transylvania R. R. (Chas. Butler); Melville, a vegetarian (Homer Hunt); Christine Cadwalader, Cadwalader's daughter (Loretta Blake).

Pete Prindle wins the affections of Christine Cadwalader, but the father of the girl demands that Pete shall get a half interest in his father's food product company before he is allowed to marry her. Pete accepts the ultimatum. Proteus Prindle, father of Pete, is angry when he receives the request from his son. He shows how his two girls have broken into print with an illustrated article in Vegetarian Gazette.

Pete offers to get his picture on the front pages of all the New York papers. Proteus gives Pete $100 and tells him not to come back till he makes good his boast. Pete wrecks an auto, wins a prize fight, swims to shore from a steamer and is locked up after a fight with the police. But none of these adventures net him more than a line or two in the papers. Then he foils a band of yegs and rescues a train from being wrecked. Christopher and his daughter are on board and congratulate him. It ends with his getting his picture in all the metropolitan papers.

HONOR'S ALTAR (Kay-Bee—Five Parts—Feb. 13).—The cast: Frederick Mallery (Walter Edwards); Winnie Mallery (Bessie Barriscale); Warren Woods (Lewis S. Stone); Dolly (Lola May); Paul (Robert McKim).

Frederick Mallery has risen by his own efforts from poverty to a place of power in the world. He thinks that the wife, who was good enough to share the privations of the lean years, is now not brilliant enough socially. The glamor of the social world has cast a spell upon him and he considers himself a real "lady killer." As a matter of fact the women of his "set" tolerate Mallery because of his wealth, though they ridicule him among themselves.

Mallery hasn't the moral courage to tell his wife that he has outgrown her in his opinion, and that he would appreciate it if she would become interested in some other man, leaving him free. Mallery comes across a man named Warren Woods, who asserts that he has lost all sense of honor. To Woods, Mallery makes an offer of $50,000 if he will win Mrs. Mallery's affections, thus freeing the magnate. The bargain is struck and Mallery introduces Woods to his wife as a friend.

Mallery pretends to be too busy to take his wife anywhere and gets Woods to accompany her to receptions and dinners. Woods finds that he is becoming infatuated with the woman, but she treats him simply with the courtesy due a friend of her husband. He realizes that she loves her husband too well ever to listen to any one else. His respect for Mrs. Mallery finally conquers his baser nature and he plans to reunite husband and wife. He accepts the check from Mallery, telling him that if he will call at his home at a late hour that night he will find his wife in a compromising position. Woods meets Mallery just outside his home and tells him the truth about his wife's goodness and tears up the $50,000 check. He scores the husband as being unworthy of his wife and says he should beg her forgiveness for his villainous scheme on his bended knee. Mallery is so humiliated by this tirade from the man who had boasted of his own lack of honor, that he is speechless and incapable of action. After Woods has gone he goes quietly to his wife's apartment, where he finds her lovingly sewing on some baby garments. Mallery is overcome by the touching sight and silently goes in and folds his wife in his arms.

BETTER LATE THAN NEVER (Keystone—Two Parts—Feb. 13).—The cast: Art Student (William Collier); His Sweetheart (Mae Busch); Her Father (Frank Opperman); Rival of Collier (Joseph Belmont).

Collier has been attending art school with Mae and she favors him rather than Belmont, who is the choice of her father for her. Jumping into the car, while Belmont is underneath, Collier takes the girl to the school. Later Frank Opperman, father of Mae and Belmont arrive at the school. Mae introduces her father to Collier, but the older man has no use for the art student. There is an elimination contest on. Belmont has painted a better picture than Collier, but the latter switches a cartoon of Belmont that he has made for Belmont's own excellent picture. Opperman is mad when he discovers the trick, while Belmont and Collier have a fight over the matter.

Next day there is a prize painting contest on Opperman's estate. Collier leaves his easel and brush to take a walk with Mae. A cow switches her tail in the paint and then on the canvas, making a very creditable painting of a tree. It takes the prize over Belmont's work. Then Belmont finds out how Collier's tree was painted and makes a kick. Collier shows his indifference by hanging the prize on the cow's tail. Mae is invited to take another auto ride by Belmont and she accepts at the instigation of Collier. Dressing up her black maid, Mae sends her with Belmont. At the parsonage Belmont carries the maid inside and is intending to force her to marry him, thinking all the time it is Mae. When he discovers his mistake, he hurries back to the Opperman mansion with the maid running behind. Meanwhile Collier has tried to elope with Mae, been shot at by Opperman and finally stuck in a chest, supposedly dead.

Mae gets Collier out of the chest and they start for the justice of peace to get married. On the way they see Belmont coming with his auto. Collier gets Mae to lie down in the middle of the road with paint on her breast and a knife stuck under her arm. Belmont stops to look at the woman and picks up the knife. Collier runs out from behind a bill-board charging Belmont with the murder of Mae. Belmont runs away with a crowd at his heels led by the black maid. After two attempts at getting married have been foiled, and Mae has been taken home by her father, Collier is almost hopeless. Then he sees a motion picture company, who are filming a marriage scene.

A ministerial acquaintance of Collier stands by. Collier has a briliant idea and enlists the minister and company in his aid. Disguised as a groom, he gets Mae to consent to stand up with him, while Belmont is induced to act as father of the bride. The minister performs the ceremony. When Belmont finds out how he has been tricked he is furious. Later he appreciates the humor of the situation and congratulates the couple.

FIDO'S FATE (Keystone—Two Parts—Feb. 13).—The cast: A Flirtatious Husband (Charles Murray); His Wife (Alice Davenport); A Jealous Husband (Fritz Schade); His Wife (May Emory); The Landlord (Frank Hayes).

After a night with the boys, Charles Murray wakes up in the morning with a big head. Alice Davenport, his wife, has a hard time to persuade Murray that the bear rug is not a real bear. Then the couple go out for a stroll in the park. Fritz Schade, a foreigner and his wife, May Emory, have also gone out for an airing. The two couples sit down on nearby benches. Murray is dazzled by Miss Emory's charms and signals her to meet him elsewhere. Then each of the affinities makes an excuse to get away and they meet on another bench

Edison Super-Kinetoscope

A NEW PROJECTOR

Written by F. H. Richardson, Technical Expert of the Moving Picture World, printed in the December 19th, 1914, Issue of that Publication.

THE Edison Company has perfected and, by the time this is in print, will be ready to place on the market their new, improved projector, and you may accept it from me as a fact that the "improved" should be written in italicized capital letters, if there is any such animal. To begin with, the machine is a radical—yes, a very radical departure from all former Edison models. New principles are involved and new methods of doing old things have been brought into play.

The mechanism itself is fully enclosed in a handsomely finished casing measuring 8½ inches wide by 9½ inches fore and aft, standing 16 inches in height above the table.

The magazines are of heavy, drawn, seamless sheet steel, provided with heavy nickeled spring hinges of special design, both the magazines and the doors thereto being embossed to provide stiffness and to prevent warping.

The tension for the upper reel is provided in a new way, i. e., by means of a coil spring acting on a washer, the effect being to apply friction to the shaft which carries the upper reel, instead of to the reel itself, as was the old way.

Figure 1 is an operating-side view of the mechanism, with the casing removed. Lens tube 1 is mounted in casing 2, inside of which is an adapter ring, so that the lens may be adjusted to any desired position and then clamped firmly in place by tightening thumb screw 3. Thumb screw 4 moves casting 2 forward and backward, thus focusing the lens. Handle 5 controls the gate. By raising it the gate is closed and automatically locked; by lowering it the gate is opened. Handle 5 projects through the casing. This form of gate is, in the opinion of the editor, a most excellent one. It is positive in its action, yet quite convenient.

The aperture plate, 6, is also excellent. You will observe, on either side of the plate, four small screws which hold in place a thin, narrow strip of steel, clamped under which is a very thin, wide strip of spring steel, hard as glass, which furnishes the actual track for the film. This spring steel track may be removed and a new one installed, the operation requiring less than five minutes' time and the cost is merely nominal. The aperture plate is then just as good as it ever was.

At 8, Fig. 1, we see the steel tension shoes, which are acted on by an equalized tension spring controlled by screws 9, which, in the finished model, will have thumb screws for the convenience of the operator.

The machine is what is known as a "straight line machine," in that in threading the film passes straight down past top sprocket 10, aperture plate 6, intermittent sprocket 11, lower sprocket 12, and into the lower magazine. After all sprocket idlers are closed the film still stretches in a perfectly straight line from magazine to magazine. How the loops are formed will be set forth a little further on.

Framing is accomplished by means of a lever, 13, which connects with roller 14. In order to understand this, imagine the film as stretching down across the three sprockets and aperture as above set forth. At the bottom of the aperture is roller 15. Now, when you raise handle 13 you shove roller 14 in against the film and force it backward against roller 15 and the intermittent sprocket, thus forming a loop, which has the effect of pulling the film further down over the aperture and framing the picture. As to this method of framing I would not like to express any decided opinion until such time as it has been thoroughly tried out, but I will say that I cannot at this time see any earthly reason why it should not work perfectly. By this method the lens is left in absolute and unchanged alignment with the aperture, also there is no interference with the relation of the gears to each other in framing.

The revolving shutter connections are very clearly shown in Fig. 1. Roller 16 and knob 17, Fig. 1, are parts of an automatic control designed to stop the motor and machine in case of (a) broken film, (b) at the end of the film, or (c) in case the take-up should fail to work. It works as follows: When the film is in the machine roller 16 rests against it and is held in an upright position, but should the film break the roller falls forward into the position shown, and by that act breaks the circuit supplying the motor and thus stops the machine. The motor may also be instantly stopped by pressing knob 17.

Looking at top sprocket 10 and lower sprocket 12 you will observe on the end of their hubs knurled knobs x-x. These knobs are of exceeding importance, and something operators are likely to fall in love with instantly. They are small knobs, gentlemen, but they accomplish quite some considerable results, because by pulling outward on either of them the sprocket is released from its shaft and you may turn it either way, thus increasing or decreasing the size of the loop at will. When released the sprocket instantly re-engages with the shaft.

In threading, the film is pulled straight down from upper to lower magazine and the sprocket rollers are all closed. The operator then seizes the knob on the upper or lower sprocket, gives it about half a turn, which sets his loop just right; he then performs the same operation with the other sprocket. This is indeed a very convenient arrangement for the operator.

Another thing in this connection: Looking at the upper sprocket you see a small hole in its end, the same being designed to receive a dowel pin. Opposite, on the other end of the sprocket is a second hole, which also contains a dowel pin. The purpose is: When the sprocket teeth become worn on one side, all the operator has to do is to take out the screw in the end of knob x, pull the whole thing off, turn the sprocket end for end, inserting the dowel pins in the holes and replacing the screws, all of which can be done in less than a minute, and provides, in effect, an entirely new set of sprocket teeth.

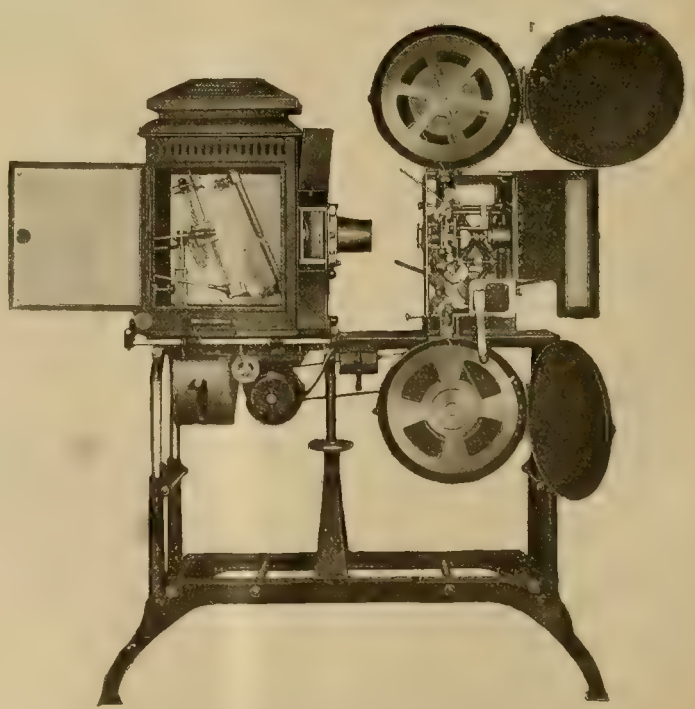

Fig. 5. Assembled Machine.

The intermittent movement of this machine is unique. It is, in part, the plain ordinary star and cam movement, hardened and ground, but this is by no means all, and it is in the remainder that we find what seems to be a mighty large-sized proposition. Mr. Gall, technical director of the Motion Picture Department of the Edison Company, has worked out and applied to the star and geneva movement an "accelerator," which has the effect of entering the pin into the star at low speed, rapidly accelerating its speed during the time the film is in movement, and then reducing the speed and removing the pin from the star at low speed. (Remember, that in using the term "high" and "low" speed in this connection we use them relatively only). The accelerator does not get in its work until the pin is inserted in the slot, thus overcoming the momentum of the star and intermittent sprocket at relatively low speed. I have examined this movement carefully, and cannot see any reason why it won't work perfectly. Mr. Gall informs me that by reason of this accelerator the movement is a true 6 to 1, and a 6 to 1 movement gives, on objectives of ordinary focal length, the ideal 3-wing shutter possibility of 50% light and 50% darkness. As a matter of fact, I saw, and myself, projected, a very brilliant light on the screen, with the mechanism running at 60 a minute and no film, and there was absolutely no trace of quiver in the light. The whole intermittent movement runs in an oil bath and I am of the opinion that it is going to make good.

Another thing I must speak of is the very complete cooling arrangement. This can only be partially shown with the casing removed, but as a matter of fact fire shutter 18 is fully an inch away from the film, and in front of the fire shutter is the casing with an auxiliary cooling plate about 3/16 of an inch in front of that, and then another cooling plate still in advance of that.

Figure 2 shows the left hand, or off side, of the mechanism, also with the casing removed. The shutter gears, fly wheel, etc., are very plainly shown, as is also the frame construction. The disassembling of the machine is a very simple matter, since each part is held in place by a screw in the end of its shaft. There isn't a pin in the entire machine, except for the intermittent sprocket which is pinned to its shaft.

Figure 3 is a general view of the assembled machine. Notice the glass in the door of the mechanism case, which gives a view of the entire film track. The reels are special, and have a 4½-inch hub. The take-up mechanism is an improvement on the old type, but the large hub reel is depended upon to equalize the tension, it being the only reel that can be used in the lower magazine.

The crank of the machine is of the clutch type. When not in use it disengages itself automatically and hangs straight down, so that it does not interfere with the opening of the machine casing door.

The table is of exceptionally rigid construction, and of unique design. By loosening nuts A - B the whole table may be raised by means of hand-wheel C, or the front may be tilted down or up to any desired angle. As a matter of fact, hand-wheel A provides for an almost micrometer adjustment of the table, since by loosening nut B, keeping nut A tight and working hand-wheel C, the most minute adjustments may be made.

The lamp house is lined with transite board, which, while it radiates heat, is a non-conductor of electricity. There is an air space between the inner and outer walls. The lamp itself has all the modern adjustments, and has them in excellent form.

The condenser casing is ample in proportion and has an efficient spacing arrangement. The lens will be provided with an arrangement to equalize the heat distribution and minimizing or prevent condenser breakage, this being at the suggestion and insistence of the editor.

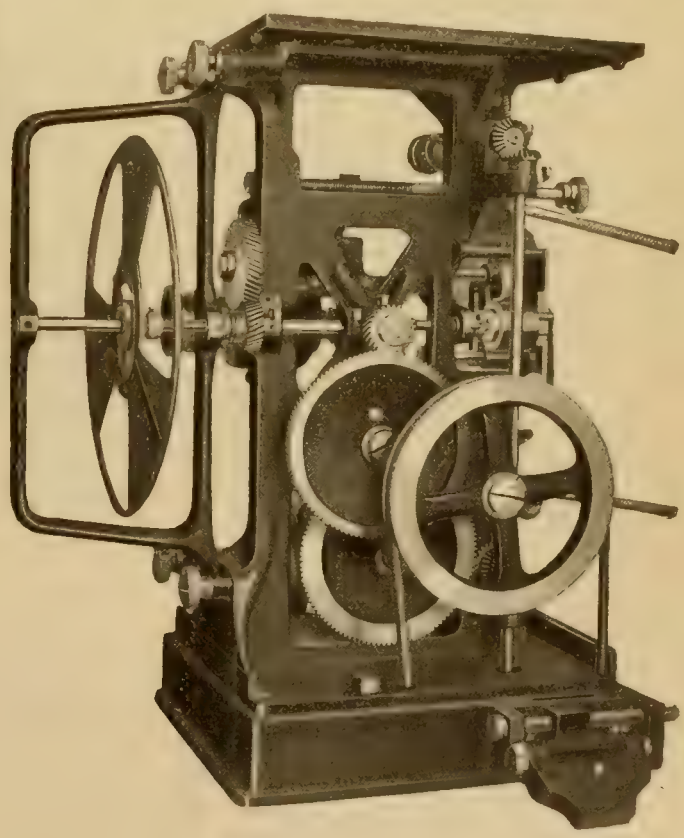

Fig. 2.—Offside View of Mechanism with Casing Removed.

There are other features of this machine which will be set forth in ample form later. The machine, taken as a whole, is, as I stated in the beginning, a radical departure from former Edison models, and it is, I believe, going to prove a most agreeable surprise for those friends of this company who have stood by them through thick and thin, and they are by no means few either.

where they start flirtation behind a parasol. Alice and Fritz miss them. When Murray and May are found, they are made to come along by their lawful partners. On the way to a hotel, Alice shows a fondness for a dog that is being led by a small boy.

Murray squares himself with Alice by purchasing the canine. But there is a sign on the hotel, "No Dogs Allowed." Then Fritz and May arrive in a cab. While Fritz is disputing with the driver, Murray grabs May's grip and puts Fido within. May discovers Murray about to leave with the grip and he has to apologize. May sends the bag to her room in care of a bellboy. May and Fritz go up to their room. Then Fritz goes downstairs, which gives Murray a chance to enter May's room to get the dog. Fritz surprises him on his return and there is a hot fight. The noise brings Alice on the scene. When she finds Murray has been in to see May, she leads him out and locks him up in his room. Murray exits out of his window and gets into May's room again via the fire escape.

Just then May enters the room, while Murray is about to purloin the dog. Fritz comes in, when he hears the noise, sees May in her nightgown and accuses Murray. After kicking Murray downstairs, Fritz has him thrown out of the hotel by the porter. Murray scouts around outside and sees a ladder, by which he makes entry to May's room. He opens the grip and the dog jumps out, running under the bed. Fritz comes in and sees Murray on his knees trying to coax the dog out. He drags Murray out and there is another rattling good fight. Murray wins, throwing Fritz out of the window. Fritz whirls around in his descent finally landing on a hook. Murray thinks he has killed Fritz and rushes to the roof. He falls through the skylight landing beside May, who has fainted away. Fritz has got free and returns to the room. He kicks Murray out of the room and into the arms of Alice. Then the two couples embrace each other and peace and happiness is restored.

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS, INC.

JEANNE DORE (Bluebird—Jan. 24).—Jeanne Dore's profligate husband is hopelessly addicted to gambling, and is threatened with expulsion from his club because of his heavy indebtedness to another gambler member. Confessing his disgrace to his wife (Mme. Bernhardt), she offers to save him from disgrace by selling her jewels. With the money thus obtained he goes to his club, determined to pay his debts and live up to the pledge he has made to his wife to gamble no more. However, the lure of the roulette wheel overcomes his resolve; he loses all his money on "just one more turn of the wheel," and, rather than face his disgrace, commits suicide.

Left with her young son to support, Jeanne Dore is forced to sell her remaining possessions and live as best she can until her husband's uncle takes pity upon her and buys for her a small stationery shop in Paris. Here mother and son prosper until the boy reaches early manhood. One day he falls suddenly and violently in love with a married woman, who comes to his mother's shop to make purchases. An intrigue with the unscrupulous female leads the young man to murder the same uncle who had befriended himself and mother.

The youth, with the assistance of Jeanne Dore, makes good his escape. Well clear of immediate capture, the boy comes back to the scene of his crime and succeeds in his efforts to once more affect a liaison with his mistress. By accident he is discovered and captured, thrown into jail, is tried and convicted of the murder and sentenced to the guillotine. Even in these desperate straits he seeks to gain some response to his affection for the woman, who promptly spurned and repudiated him. He prevails upon his devoted mother to become a messenger in his service and her appeals, likewise, fall upon deaf ears.

Instead of telling the boy that her quest has been fruitless, Jeanne Dore goes to the prison herself, on the evening before the boy's neck is to be given to the knife, and poses as the woman he had expressed himself, to his own mother, as the one he most wished to see. The boy goes to the guillotine, and the final scene depicts the devoted mother in the extreme agony of watching, from a window across the street, the execution of her son.

SECRET LOVE (Six Parts—Jan. 31).—The cast includes Harry D. Carey and Ella Hall. Adapted from the novel, "That Lass O' Lowries'." Scenarioized and directed by Robert Leonard.

In the Lancastershire coal mines women work above ground, handling and disposing of the coal that their men dig from below and send to the surface. This work creates a type of self-reliant and, sometimes, conspicuously rugged female, born to labor and bred to the hard task of manual toil. Old Man Lowrie has grown to be the bully of the village; his daughter, like all her kind, works by day and keeps his home as best she can. The "Lass" secretly loves the chief engineer of the mines, and he is attracted by her rugged beauty.

There is trouble in the mines because the precautions against the explosion of "fire damp" are continually violated by Old Man Lowrie. After vainly attempting to enforce compliance with the rules, the chief engineer takes the matter of discipline into his own hands and in a fistic encounter subdues the recalcitrant Lowrie—but stirs his vengeful hatred.

Incident to the troubles at the mine, the rich owner sends his milk-sop son to gather an idea of conditions, but the only idea the fop puts into operation is to lure from home a frail girl of the village, by his promise of fine clothes and easy living. Running through the story is the rector's daughter, a refined young girl who busies herself with missionary work among the villagers. It is this girl who untangles the threads and serve to make pleasanter the path of love for the "Lass" and brings solace to the deserted and disgraced daughter of the mines, who is forced to come home for shelter when the villain in the piece has cast her off.

Old Lowrie, licked but vengeful, attempts to murder the engineer of the mine who had conquered and humiliated his bullying spirits. He attempts to waylay the engineer, but "The Lass" thwarts his purpose. In a later attempt she is not so completely successful, but in a struggle of strength Lowrie manages, by felling his opponent with a heavy stone, to severely injure the engineer.

The stay in hospital of the wounded man serves to ripen his attachment for "The Lass" into perfect love, and the rector's daughter takes the girl of the mine in hand to educate and fit her to be the wife of the engineer. Meanwhile the love affair of the "little missionary" goes on apace and ends with the "happy ever after" outcome that ends all good love stories.

UNDINE (Feb. 7—Five Parts).—The cast: Queen Unda (Ida Schnall); Huldbrand (Douglas Gerrard); Lady Berthelda (Edna Maison); The Duke (Carol Stellson); The Duchess (Caroline Fowler); The Fisherman (O. C. Jackson); Fisherman's Wife (Josephine Rice); Kuhleborn (Elijah Zerr); Waldo (Jack Nelson). Scenario by Walter Woods. Directed by Henry Otto.

The story begins in the realm of Queen Unda, mistress of the under-seas, surrounded by her nymphs, sylphs and mermaids, who disport themselves on the sands and in the waters of the deep. Berthelda, daughter of a fisherman and his devoted wife, has been stolen by the mermaids one day when the child is playing on the sands. Queen Unda rules that little Berthelda shall be left to roam in the Enchanted Forest, because her parents have taken fishes from the ocean, greatly to the annoyance of Unda and Neptune.

Undine's mother has committed sin with a mortal and to atone for this her little baby, Undine, is taken to the shore near the fisherman's cottage, to be discovered by the fisherman and his wife. It is Undine's mission on earth to marry a mortal, and thus atone for the sins committed by her mother in loving a handsome young huntsman, whose untimely death likewise robs Undine's mother of her own life.

Undine is welcomed by the fisherman and his wife, who consider she has been sent by the gods to take the place of their little Berthelda. Fifteen years pass. Berthelda has been adopted by the Duke and Duchess and among those who pay her court at the Castle is Huldbrand, the bravest of knights.

To test his love, Berthelda sends Huldbrand into the Enchanted Forest and bids him return with proof that he had explored its wonders. Coming to the fisherman's cottage, Huldbrand meets Undine, immediately falls in love with her and they are married by a shipwrecked priest, whom Undine has rescued from the sea.

Going with his bride to the Castle, there is great rejoicing. At the celebration in honor of Huldbrand's marriage there appears a messenger from Queen Unda who tells Undine her earthly mission is fulfilled and she returns to the waters under the sea. Huldbrand is reconciled to Lady Berthelda and the story ends.

HOP, THE DEVIL'S BREW (Five Parts—Feb. 14).—The cast: Ward Jansen (Phillips Smalley); Lydia Jansen (Lois Weber); Jane Leech (Marie Walcamp); City Councilman Bill Waters (C. Norman Hammond); Con Leech (Juan De La Cruz). Written by Rufus Steele.

Lydia Jansen is a faithful and loving wife, though unknown to her husband, a customs inspector, she has become addicted to smoking opium. In the parlance of the underworld this devil's brew is called "hop." Her own father, a politician in the city in which they live, is the head of an opium importing gang, which is the principal medium whereby the addicts obtained their supply of opium.

Lydia's craving for the drug is so great, and her desire to conceal the habit from her husband so strong, that she is embroiled in a series of blackmailing attempts by her maid, who is affianced to the stevedore through whom most of the opium is landed from the vessels by which it is smuggled. Her attempts to satisfy her craving for hop, at a time when the government is closing in upon the smugglers, excites her husband's suspicion, and of course he thinks another man has entered her life, and it is only through an almost superhuman exercise of will power that she finds the strength to conquer her appetite and confess to her husband the terrible habit which she had formed, and thus relieving the terrible suspicion which had grown like a hunting nightmare into his very life.

The shock of finding that he himself had contributed to his own daughter's downfall causes the father's suicide and the capture of the entire opium smuggling gang.

THE WRONG DOOR (Five Parts—Feb. 21).—The cast: Miss Frou Frou and Fern Hardy (Flora Parker DeHaven); Philip Borden (Carter DeHaven); "Bumps" (Ernie Shields); Housekeeper (Helen Hayward); Hardy (G. A. Williams); Bates (Harry Schumm); Horne (Fred Church).

By entering the wrong door while in a state of hilarious jubilation engendered by an evening of conviviality, Philip Borden, a young millionaire, and owner of a big steel foundry, becomes the human instrument for bringing a very just and complete punishment upon a double-dyed crook who holds in his power the soul of a workman—a workman who had lead an exemplary life since little Frou Frou, an orphan, had come into his life. Under his fostering care she had grown to extremely desirable girlhood and had obtained a position on the stage, where she was discovered by Borden. Fate willed that her foster-father should be forced, under threat of exposing his past life, to rob Borden's safe of some $40,000 and the solution of the robbery was fast developing into a mystery when young Borden bumped all unconscious into the lair of the master thief. Then it was a case of ambulances and police wagons.

The curtain falls upon a happy ending, and it is not difficult to see that the little orphan chorus girl and the young business magnate will be happily united, and that Hardy, the father, will never be forced to own even to his foster daughter that he had ever lead a life of crime.

METRO PICTURES CORP.

MAN AND HIS SOUL (Quality Pictures Corp.—Five Parts—Jan. 31).—The cast: John Conscience and John Power (Francis X. Bushman); Mary Knowles (Beverly Bayne); Rev. Edward Knowles, Mary's father (Edward Brennan); Stephen Might, Sr. (Charles H. Prince); Stephen Might, Jr. (John Davidson); Mrs. Conscience, John's mother (Helen Dunbar). Directed by John W. Noble.

The allegory which begins the story represents the world before the creation of man. Out of the elements is born Conscience. Conscience is then present at the fall of the first parents, and drives them from the garden. Conscience is again present when Moses breaks the tablets of stone in his anger at the Israelites for their idolatry on Sinai. At last Conscience sustains the Christ when He stands on trial before the Roman Governor of Judea, Pontius Pilate.

Then begins the story. A child is born, bearing the name of John Conscience. The figure of the allegory is seen to touch the newborn babe, and it is fore-ordained that he is to be a creature of Conscience. The child grows to manhood. He holds the chair in economics in a great university, and is delivering an exhortation to the graduating class. He tells the young men of some of the shameful conditions the wealthy employer class is imposing upon the poor and helpless class. He bids them go forth with conscience to guide their careers, and that they will be successful in the real sense. The wealthy men, trustees of the university, etc., who are in audience, disagree with John Conscience's principles to such an extent that they demand his resignation, as the result of the speech. One of them, however, Stephen Might, whose son Stephen Might, Jr., is among the students, feels that John Conscience will be a great success in some business where the question of conscience will not be raised, and tells him that he will have a position for him whenever he may want it.

John Conscience, sustained by the encouragement of his mother, tries in various fields, without success. He happens to see a girl who is about to end her efforts to succeed and still remain good, by plunging into the river. He dissuades her and takes her to his mother. She tells her story, how she had left her father's roof to earn her living and be useful in the world, and the mother advises her to go back to her father. John is inspired with new hope after his good deed, goes to Stephen Might, obtains a position for himself, and also one for the girl.

He rises in position with this concern, and a love affair develops between them, but Stephen Might, Jr., also falls in love with the girl. At a time when a rival company is trying to bribe John Conscience to divulge secrets which will mean the undoing of Might & Company, John Conscience comes upon Mary Knowles, the girl, in the arms of Stephen, and thinks she has accepted him. His mistake causes him to throw off conscience, and begin a grinding, resolute, uncompromising drive for wealth.

In Chicago John Conscience takes the name of John Power. He comes to the control of great interests, owns factories, and rules over all these interests with a hand of iron. His employees are but mechanical parts of his structure, and he has no soul, no heart. When the girl realizes what he had meant to her, she denounces Might, Jr., and her father, who had helped about the situation, and runs away. At the time Power's success is at its zenith she is a stenographer in one of his factories.

At this time also, in his determination to avenge himself upon Stephen Might, Jr., he is using unfair business methods to drive the Might concern to the wall. Young Might learns that it is the Power firm which is oppressing them and goes to see Power, not knowing who he is. He arrives, and as John is about to drive home his revenge, Stephen tells him of his mistake, that he thought Mary was with him, as she ran away the same night he had disappeared.

John has been harassed by the public safety committees about the unsanitary conditions and lack of safety in his factories, and has been obdurate and unresponsive. Now, he sees that he was wrong, experiences a faint hope, and tells Might he will let him know the next day what can be done. He goes home, and sits by the fireplace in his library to think. Conscience appears to him again, and shows him, by a series of contrasts, the difference between the power he has achieved over the financial world, and that which Conscience wields over the souls of men. He is receptive, and Conscience again enters his soul. He calls for architects and builders to reconstruct his factories, for the safety of his employees, and before they can begin work a great fire breaks out in one of his factories, and Mary is caught in an upper story. John rides to the scene, and sees her at a window. He rescues her and their romance finds its proper conclusion.

THE UPSTART—(Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., 5 Parts—Feb. 7).—The cast: Beatrice Mitchell, the minister's wife (Marguerite Snow); Coventry Petmore, the Upstart (George LeGuere); Judge Mitchell (James Lackaye); Rev. James Mitchell, his son (Frederick Summer); Larry Price, the chauffeur (Frederick Sittenham).

Coventry Petmore, the Upstart, becomes a fanatic on the divorce question and leaves his wife and baby to go out into the world and preach his theories, namely—that divorce is as a disease in the human social system. His neglect of his own family affairs, while preaching this theory enrages his wife and disgusts her with him, and when he arrives home after one of his missionary tours, he finds a note from her saying that she concluded he is crazy; that she has taken the baby and gone home to her mother and—that she will get divorce This sets him wild.

He goes to his father who senses the fact that his boy is a "nut," and arranges for him to spend some time with an old friend, Judge Mitchell, who has a reputation in connection with divorce cases. The father thinks that the Judge and the latter's son, Rev. James Mitchell, may exert a saving influence on the boy. Coventry, however, finds a fertile field for his theories under the Judge's roof.

Rev. James Mitchell, and his wife, Beatrice, are none too happy, on account of a theory of the "Reverend" that the relations of husband and wife should be based upon a solid rock of dignity, rather than the loose structure of familiarity. The consequence is that the wife, craving the minister's love and companionship, and getting only a sort of cold tolerance, falls in love with Larry Price, the chauffeur.

Coventry is made the confidant of both the minister and his wife. He prevents her elopement and persuades her first to go to her husband in the broad day and tell him that she loves another and watch the effect. If he is a true man, he will tell her that if it will make her happy, she may go with God's blessing. She avers that if he measures up so well, she can never leave him. Coventry therefore primes the minister by giving him a hypothetical case telling him what he should say, should his wife tell him that she loves another.

The minister thinks the boy's theory is beautiful, intends to preach a sermon on it, when, like a bolt from a clear sky, his wife calls him outdoors and tells him of her love for Larry. The "Reverend" doesn't make good. He commands her to stay. "Think of the disgrace, the scandal," he says.

And so, she elopes with Larry, but they are pursued by the Judge and brought back by the ears. She confesses that Coventry put her up to "test" her husband and then advised her to do as she pleased, when he failed to make good. The Judge gives Coventry a good trouncing. The minister thaws out of his crust of dignity and all ends happily, though Coventry is still a nut with a theory.

THE WOMAN IN 47—(Frohman Amusement Corp., 5 Parts—Feb.7).—The cast: Viola Donizetti (Alice Brady); Tony (Wm. Raymond); Tony's cousin (John Warwick); Pasquale Donizetti (Geo. D. Melville); Mr. Collingswood (Eric Elind); Mrs. Collingswood (Lillian Concord); Mr. Sharpless (Tom McGrath); Godfrey, his son (Bert Rooney).

Viola, an orphan Italian girl, lives with her uncle who abuses her and wants to marry her to a moneylender to whom he is in debt. She is in love with Tony, a youthful companion, who goes to America. He tells her that as soon as he can he will send money for her to come after him, and they will be married. He sends her the money, and, on the eve of her forced marriage to the moneylender, she runs away and sails for America.

Tony has been sent West by the automobile firm by which he is employed, and Viola is met by his cousin who tells her Tony has been killed in an accident. He starts to make love to her himself. She resents this and, after a struggle, gets away and meets Beppo, an old organ grinder, whom she had known in Italy.

A few days later Beppo is killed by the automobile in which Sharpless and his son, Godfrey, are riding. They learn his address from a card on the organ, take him home, and Viola, heartbroken, explains that he was her only support. Godfrey admires her very much, and Sharpless, feeling a moral obligation, offers her a place in his home as maid.

Tony returns from the West and is told by his cousin that Viola has run away. Collingswood, the Sharpless lawyer, has trouble with his wife, and one evening at the Sharpless home, he is attracted by the beauty of Viola. Godfrey has hidden in a closet in Viola's room and attempts to assault her as she is preparing to retire. She fights and strikes him with a vase. Fearing she has killed him she rushes to the room where the men are and tells the story. Sharpless goes to look after his son, and Collingswood soothes the girl. Sharpless orders her from the house, saying that Collingswood will supply her with money until she can obtain other employment.

In the quarters which Collingswood has provided for her, he calls one evening and while he is there, Mrs. Collingswood and her maid come in. Viola learns then, for the first time, that Collingswood is married. Mrs. Collingswood's maid has found a bill for expensive jewelry given to Viola and the wife threatens divorce. Viola leaves her beautiful surroundings, gets a place in an automobile accessory store, where Tony meets her. The old love is renewed and a date for the marriage set. Tony engages the bridal suite in a hotel, No. 47, and Collingswood, in despair over her approaching marriage, decides to kill himself and implicate her. He has learned the hotel to which Tony has gone, and engages No. 48. There he shoots himself, leaving a note saying that any reasons for this act will be given by the woman in 47.

Viola hears the shot, calls the hotel office, and a hotel man and a reporter come up. The latter gets Collingswood's letter, goes to Room 47, sees Viola, shows her the letter, and sees the marriage license. As he begins writing, Tony comes in with the minister and, in a violent scene, she rushes into Room 48, seizes the revolver and, just as she is about to shoot herself, Tony takes the revolver away. The minister succeeds in inducing the reporter to refrain from printing the story. The Collingswood death is declared a case of suicide and Tony and Viola are married.

KLEINE-EDISON FEATURES.

The following subject is released in place of "The Martyrdom of Phillip Strong," a synopsis of which can be found on page 1028 of last week's issue. The story of "When Love Is King" was received too late for insertion in that issue. The picture, which has been replaced, will be released at a future date.

WHEN LOVE IS KING (Edison—Five Parts—Feb. 9).—The cast: Felix, King of Wallonio (Richard Tucker); Marcia Morton (Carrol McComas); J. P. Morton (Bigelow Cooper); the Princess Louise (Vivian Perry); the Prince of Trebizond (John Sturgeon); Baron Tarnow (Harold Meltzer); Stepan (Carlton King); Janzi (T. Tamamoto); the Prime Minister (Robert Brower); the Wallonian Ambassador (Charles Sutton); the Viscount (Guido Colucci); Mrs. Morton (Helen Strickland). Directed by Ben Turbett.

Felix, the King of Wallonia, is sad. He wants to be loved for himself, not for his title, and he finds it a hard job. Because of state reasons, he has to marry Louise, Princess of the neighboring State of Trebizond. The old Prince, her father, craves the elixir of youth, and gets drunk so often that Trebizond is in bad shape. Thus, it is up to Felix to be King of both States. But Louise has a love affair all of her own. Felix sees her in the embrace of Stepan, the heir presumptive to his throne, and disgusted with things in general and Louise in particular, he flees to America in disguise. With him goes his faithful comrade, Baron Tarnow.

By a strange twist of circumstance he takes a job as butler in the home of J. P. Morton, multi-millionaire. There he meets Marcia, Morton's daughter, and the jig is up. He loves her. At a ball given by the Mortons an ambassador from Wallonia recognizes his King. At word from Felix, the ambassador introduces him to the Mortons as a Count. Felix creates quite a stir.

Janzi, a bandit, whom Stepan has sent to America to do away with Felix, sends the Mortons a note. He describes Felix as an impostor and a fraud. Thus is Felix ordered out of the Morton home. Janzi and his confederates try to kill him but succeed only in wounding him. Marcia, feeling that she really loves him, saves him from death and nurses him back to health. Then Felix and Marcia elope and plan to get married. Papa Morton catches them and prepares to let Felix have it—but his true identity is revealed. Morton realizes that Felix is a real King.

The Ambassador urges Felix to return to Wallonia. Since Stepan has become King, the people are being outraged. Because of his royal blood, Marcia knows that she cannot marry him and so gives Felix up. He returns home and pays Stepan for his villainy. Then, to save the State, he prepares to marry Louise of Trebizond. No matter what the cost the State must be saved!

Pop Morton finds that Marcia loves Felix and that the separation is making her unhappy. So, like a real American millionaire, he buys up the Kingdom of Trebizond, royal titles and all. When Felix goes to the altar to be married, he finds that the Princess of Trebizond is his own little Marcia. Long live the King and Queen of Wallonia-Trebizond!

THE SCARLET ROAD (Kleine—Five Parts—Feb. 16).—The cast: Harry Tremaine (Malcolm Duncan); Betty Belgrave (Anna Q. Nilsson); Alice Holbrook (Della Connor); Mrs. Holbrook (Iva Shepard); Lorimer Wilbur (John Jarrott).

Harry Tremaine, a clean-living youth of twenty-one, spends his leisure hours in perfecting an aeroplane motor which he has invented and which he hopes will eventually make his fortune. In his ambition to make his mark in the world, he is encouraged by his mother's old friend, Mrs. Holbrook, to whose daughter, Alice, Harry has been engaged almost since childhood.

One night, when Harry is working late at the office in which he is employed as bookkeeper, a telegram arrives for the manager of the concern. Harry learns that the manager is dining at the Cafe de Paris and takes the message to him there. Thus Harry is first brought in contact with the gay night life of New York. There, too, he first sees Betty Belgrave, a cabaret entertainer, and her dancing partner, Wilbur Lorimer.

It is not long afterward that Harry Tremaine receives word that his father, who for a number of years has been leading a hermit's life in the mining country out West, has suddenly died. Still later he learns that instead of using the money which he had thought he was contributing to his father's support, the hermit had saved all of it, and in addition left him a fortune of nearly $200,000. Harry's first thought is that there is no longer any bar to the marriage of himself and Alice, and the wedding day is set.

Circumstances again bring Harry into the sphere of Betty Belgrave and her dancing partner, this time as a bashful, awkward youth, but as a young man about town who has plenty of money to spend. The woman has little trouble in conquering Harry. The consequence is that with her wedding day approaching, Alice finds herself more and more neglected by her fiance. Day by day she sees him less frequently and day by day he becomes more thoroughly enmeshed in Betty's net of fascinations.

Finally, on New Year's Eve, comes a complete break between the engaged couple as the result of Harry's escapades. Then, after a few short weeks of riotous living, during which he spends money like water to gratify Betty's whims, and buys thousands of dollars worth of worthless stocks offered by Wilbur, Harry suddenly awakens to the fact that he is "broke." Naturally, he is deserted by his gay friends, first of all by Betty and Wilbur the parasites. Unable to obtain employment, he is soon reduced to desperate straits.

One day Harry calls upon his father's lawyer who gives him a letter left by the hermit "to be delivered to my son when he shall have dissipated his fortune." The letter explains that the father has foreseen the follies of the son and has provided "a way out." Harry is instructed to make his way to the hermit's cabin in the western wilds, and told that there he will find a solution of his problem.

After many weeks of weary search, Harry finds the cabin. He is startled to find that from the ceiling of the hut there dangles a hangman's noose. This, then, is "the way out" promised! The shock of this discovery makes the boy a man. He resolves to go back to New York, to fight it out, to show his father's grim old ghost that Harry Tremaine is a man.

In New York he rescues a little girl from drowning. She proves to be the daughter of a millionaire and the grateful father helps Harry in the latter's effort to interest capital in his aeroplane motor. A company is formed to manufacture the device, and some time later Harry is in possession of another fortune, but this time it is a fortune which he has earned. Betty learns of his new opulence and again tries to ensnare him, this time without success.

In his environment, Harry finds his thoughts by day and his nightly dreams haunted by visions of the noose, that grim bequest left by his prophetic-souled old father. Finally he determines to go to the hut, and destroy the noose—to gloat over the memory of his cruel legacy now that he has proved his father's estimate of him wrong. Once he finds himself in the cabin he taunts the memory of his father and then, in a burst of anger, tears the noose from the ceiling of the hut. To his surprise a shower of golden coins pours from the ragged hole thus made in the plaster above his head. In a moment his father's plan is clear to him; when discouraged, he should have tried to take his own life, this second fortune would have come to him. Chastened in spirit, he returns to the city.

Again in New York, he learns that Alice is seriously ill. He hurries to her side and they are reunited. The last scenes show us their home some time later. We see them drive happily through the park in their splendid limousine, while from a park bench, Betty, now a derelict, sadly looks after them as the picture fades.

FOX FILM CORP.

MERELY MARY ANN (Feb. 6).—The story tells of a girl, who, born in a small town, is left penniless by the death of her mother. She is befriended by the local minister, who secures for her a position in a cheap lodging house in the city of London, where she unwittingly arouses the displeasure of the mistress and is discharged. With only a few clothes and a pet canary as her sole possessions, she tramps the big city in search of work, finally attracting the attention of Lancelot Melmont, a young musician, who induces his landlady to give Mary Ann a position as maid.

Here she becomes happily situated, until Sid, a dance hall habitue, is attracted by her charms and persecutes her. She is protected by Lancelot and there is a fast growing feeling of companionship between the two, when Mary Ann receives the disquieting news she has been left a fortune. Against her protest she is taken from the boarding house and placed in a wealthy private family.

Several years later, when Mary Ann's foster parents are giving a reception in her honor, Lancelot, now a famous composer, is one of the guests. The two again meet and the companionship, which was commenced during their boarding house days, ripens into a feeling of love that ends in their marriage.

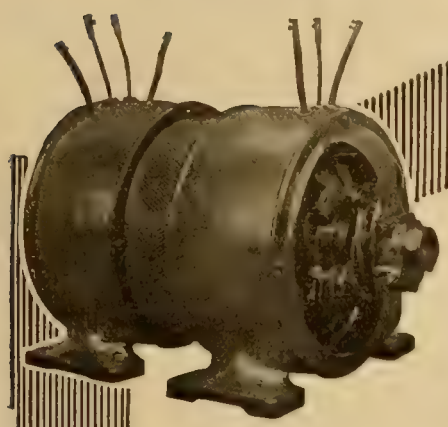
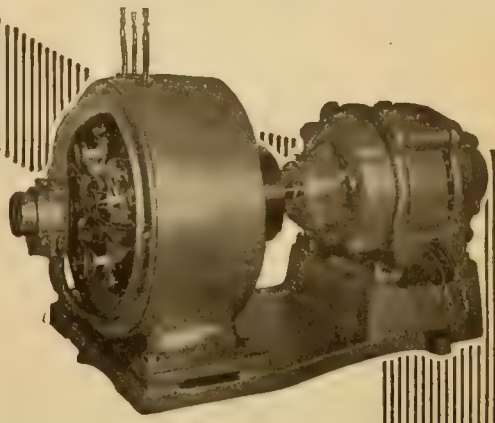
BETTER LIGHT LESS CURRENT



The DC Compensarc lowers the voltage of a direct current supply to that required at the lamp without needless waste.

The AC Compensarc cuts ⅔ from your lighting bill if you use alternating current.



The AC to DC Compensarc will transform alternating into direct current and reduce the voltage at the same time without needless waste.

No matter what current you have---Alternating or Direct---or what voltage or frequency, one of the will enable you to secure a light that will give those clear, bright pictures that everybody now demands.

What's the use of paying extra money for special screens, projecting machines, and first run films and then spoil the whole result with poor light? With the Fort Wayne Compensarcs you can get any kind of light you want regardless of the kind or quality of your current supply.

The Compensarcs will give you

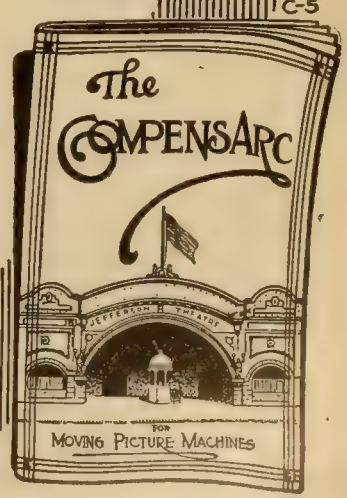
STEADY LIGHT. No flickering, no sputtering, even when changing intensities or from one machine to another.

WHITE LIGHT. No yellow streaks, no ghosts.

BRIGHT LIGHT. Three times the light with two-thirds the current.

They are safe, efficient, easy to operate, fool proof and reliable.

C-5



Compensarcs are so commonly found in motion picture theatres that many people now call all current saving and transforming devices by that name.

TEFT JOHNSON

Producer of High Class Productions

"THE WRITING ON THE WALL"

Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. Release of Feb. 14

Read What the Critics Say:

Dramatic Mirror—"The story is most effectively picturized, thanks to the able direction of Teft Johnson, who has incorporated the proper atmosphere into every situation."

Telegraph—"The whole production is a realization of values. Consistently well produced."

Moving Picture World—"Has been handled with skill by Teft Johnson."

Motion Picture News—"The atmosphere of suspense is created chiefly by the skillful management of parallel action."

New York Press—"A strong and absorbing feature that is especially well produced."

Evening Mail—"The fire scenes which, in the hands of a less skillful director, might have detracted attention from the underlying story, are presented with the realism that gives the desired effect."

Last Release—"THE TURN IN THE ROAD," V-L-S-E

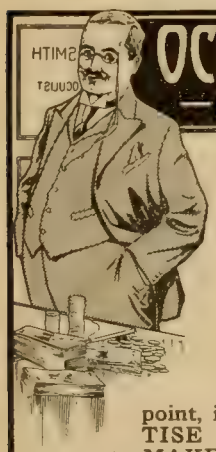
OCULISTS are "CHUCKLING"

—YOU'RE SENDING THEM PATIENTS!



Unconsciously you are sending many patients to the oculists—they know it and are "Chuckling." Think it over. Sit in the audience some night and forget you own the place—it won't be long before your eyes will speak out. Now multiply YOUR feelings by the capacity of the house and you have PUBLIC OPINION!

Aside from a humanitarian standpoint, it is the WRONG WAY TO ADVERTISE your theater. In a word, the wrong way to MAKE MONEY—it's a losing game. A poor screen helps the Oculist and Sheriff only.

Why not choose the path of WISDOM—install a MINUSA GOLD FIBRE SCREEN, "Built by Brains."

"MINUSA" Screens are scientifically built to reflect a Brilliant Natural picture, and EYE STRAIN is UNKNOWN in a "Minusa" House. Your patrons will be enthusiastic advertisers and boosters—all for you and your "Minusa."

This wonderful screen ABSORBS NO LIGHT, and therefore consumes FIFTY PER CENT. less current—a saving which is worth serious consideration.

Oculists are mighty good fellows, but think of your patrons and YOURSELF FIRST—write us today.

Write or Wire for Samples and Prices.

PLAYING TO ENORMOUS RECEIPTS WHEREVER SHOWN

There are dozens of so-called war pictures, but OURS IS AUTHENTIC, consisting of 8,500 feet of pulse quickening scenes taken from automobile and aeroplane at the front by daring American Press Photographer, who accompanied Von Hindenburg's army for 7 months.

WILBUR H. DURBOROUGH

The camera doesn't lie. Mr. Durborough is seen in at least 50% of the scenes on the film.

Distributors of the Motiograph, Power's, Simplex, Edison and other machines and Genuine Parts

"A Projection Machine Cannot be made to sell for $200.00 and be up to date," said a representative of a manufacturer of a popular make machine; and he was astonished after we showed him figures of the cost of the best material and labor that go to make up a first class Projection Machine, admitting that a fair profit can be made on selling a complete machine for $200.00.

For the benefit of the General Trade we will issue a bulletin with the manufacturer's cost of parts that go to make up the best machine in the world, and leave it to your judgment Mr. Exhibitor and Dealer to say if such a thing is possible. Our machine will be years ahead of any other make.

Dealers handling our goods know what we can do. Ask them to show you our catalogue—prices are interesting.

Your Profits Depend Upon Your Screen

The best evidence in the world is the fact that over 9500 progressive exhibitors have installed the only screen that eliminates haze, fade-a-way, eye strain and that hazy out-of-focus effect so pronounced in all other screens on a close up or angle view.

MIRROROID is made with a rough or matte finish. Your choice, pale gold, silver flesh, silver white, at 36 1/9 cents a square foot the world over. Write now for our large free samples. Test any way you desire, against any screen on earth.

Warning—Finale—Note Imitators

The United States Circuit Court has upheld patents under which Mirroroid is manufactured. Mr. Exhibitor, you are liable as well as the manufacturer for any infringements on our patents. We intend to vigorously prosecute all infringers.

fallacy of these situations.

Rival for Charlie Chaplin.

Some time has elapsed since Charlie Chaplin entertained his many friends with a new play and unless he hastens with another and keeps the theaters supplied periodically with new pictures, he had best look to his laurels, for Harry Watson bids fair to wrest them from him. His "third whirl," called "Hold Fast," ranks with the funniest comedies shown in recent days. "Musty Suffer" is a welcome character in filmdom which imparts clean and wholesome humor.

Essanay pictures have been taken of

From Chicago Daily News, Jan. 25, 1916

"It's Clean Rapid-Fire Vulgarless Fun!"

said the New York Evening Mail, agreeing with the Cincinnati Commercial Tribune, that the Mishaps of Musty Suffer are "the purest fun, concentrated sparkling mirth," and Kitty Kelly's happy observation in the Chicago Tribune that "at last an original comedian has developed a case of genuine funniness which doesn't show a trace of Chaplinitis."

And—if further evidence were necessary—we might point to the extraordinary class of theatres now exhibiting these wonderful comedies—THE STRAND and BILTMORE, New York; the SCOLLAY SQUARE and GORDON OLYMPIA of Boston; KUNSKY'S circuit of Beautiful Detroit houses—THE STRAND at Hartford—THE TABOR GRAND at Denver—ALFRED HAMBURGER'S circuit of Chicago theatres—UNQUESTIONABLY THE FINEST AGGREGATION OF PICTURE THEATRES IN AMERICA, catering to a clientele hard to please, most fastidious, ultra-critical!

The Unusual Story:

A child of wealthy Americans kidnapped by Italians is made to work in a Sicilian vineyard, and becomes in succession a stowaway disguised as a boy, a bootblack, an employee of an opium den, a messenger boy, and finally, the restored millionaire's daughter who comes into her own.

"Poor Little Peppina" will undoubtedly be accepted as Mary Pickford's greatest photoplay triumph.

"A Woman's Power"

From the novel by
CHAS. NEVILLE BUCK

RELEASED THROUGH WORLD FILM CORPORATION

FROM the days of Eden a woman's power to sway mankind for good or evil has reigned potent and supreme. Her influence to raise to the heights or drag to the depths, however, has never been demonstrated with such blinding realism as in this screen drama, which strips the sham from human souls with a merciless hand.

"The Question"

By
ROY L. McCARDELL

DO the exactions of modern society demand the practise of race-suicide by social butterflies? Can a woman wilfully stifle her maternal instincts to follow the fad and foibles of the "fast set?" Is a man justified in casting off such a woman for a girl in whose heart, life beats strong and full? These great problems of the day find a startling solution in "The Question."

CALIFORNIA'S INITIAL RELEASE OF

BETTER THAN PROGRAM FEATURES

BEATRIZ MICHELENA

Is the famous star whose clever work has made her one of the strongest drawing cards now in pictures.

We claim that her emotional work in the above production is a revelation.

We are willing, in short, to present this big dramatic production as the standard by which you may pass judgment upon our rights to a "BETTER THAN PROGRAM" slogan.

This picture will be released squarely on merit alone through STATE RIGHTS Buyers.

"The Unwritten Law"

will be shown to the trade on Thursday, Feb. 24th, at 10 A. M. and 2.30 P. M., at Wurlitzer Hall, New York City.

You are cordially invited to attend and to judge the merits of this feature and its money-making possibilities for yourself.

ROSE THEATRE
Chicago

Of all the serials I have run, this has been by far the most successful, both as far as the money is concerned and the satisfaction of my patrons.

Of course this serial is not completed as yet, but the first four that I have run certainly convinced me that you are producing a serial that will become more popular as it goes along.

WHITE EAGLE THEATRE
South Bend, Ind.

The picture is wonderful and everyone was more than satisfied. The advertising we gave the picture brought us wonderful results, in fact, more than we expected. The crowd got to us at 6:45 p. m. and at 9:30 we still had no time to breathe.

FULLER OPERA HOUSE
Madison, Wis.

I want to thank you for the arrangements we made to open "The Girl and the Game" last Monday, running Chapters 1 and 2. We played to capacity business and every one was very enthusiastic over the film, and I want to say personally that it gives promise of being the greatest serial ever placed on the market.

BIJOU THEATRE
Minneapolis, Minn.

Bijou-Jitney Theatre, Minneapolis, ran Chapter No. 4 of "The Girl and the Game" last Friday and played to 4,300 people, which is the biggest single day in the history of this theatre.

If you will remember, on the first chapter they opened up to 3,100 people, which broke all records for attendance on opening night for a serial or series photoplay and this increase in four weeks of 1,200 people certainly is a big boost for the quality of our production.

THE CRYSTAL THEATRE
Decatur, Ill.

I am well satisfied with my first day with "The Girl and the Game." A cold day and played against "The Birth of a Nation" with good house.

CASINO THEATRE
Cincinnati, O.

In reference to the serial picture, "The Girl and the Game," wish to advise that we have found same to be a very good attraction. The acting, directing, settings, etc., are very good and we would recommend same to other exhibitors, as we have found same to be a very profitable picture.

GILGER THEATRE
Norwalk, Ohio

I am writing to tell you of the great success "The Girl and the Game" made here when we ran the first episode Friday, 14th. Our expectations of this serial picture have been fulfilled, and our patrons are greatly interested and anxious to see the next episode.

We are expecting that this picture will rival the "Million Dollar Mystery" as a money getter.

COLONIAL THEATRE
Bloomington, Ill.

Our theatre only seats 214, but we played crowded houses continuously all afternoon and night with the first chapter. Look forward to good business again next Tuesday.

THE LIFE BLOOD OF BUSINESS

DESTROY competition and you strike a body blow to trade. Co-operation is a lubricant, but merit is, and must continue to be, the final test of value.

Not the least of the advantages of the "Open-Booking" policy is that it is the only method of distribution which permits competition between producing factors, and thereby insures the highest general average of excellence from them all.

Under this "Open-Booking" policy, as operated by the V-L-S-E, no one manufacturer's product is "tied" to that of another, and by reason of our "Minimum and Maximum" price basis, each must exert themselves to the utmost, not only to get the maximum number of bookings, but to gain the maximum price as well.

In other words, the exhibitor picks from the releases of all the manufacturers making up the Big Four, that which he believes has the greatest drawing power for his particular patronage, rather than being forced to take what is given him by reason of a closed contract.

And furthermore he pays for what he buys on the basis of each individual feature's box office value, instead of by a fixed flat rate, which is made to apply regardless of whether the film is good, bad or indifferent.

That such a system of booking makes for the keenest competition, and that this competition, in turn, promotes the utmost in picture quality, is best evidenced by the productions described on the succeeding pages.

A Further Word About the Open Market !!!

In last week's issue of this publication we asserted, in plain language, that contracts which we had just executed with two of the largest producing companies in the world make it possible for exhibitors everywhere to book "QUALITY-PLUS" features, which are calculated to please and satisfy the most exacting critics of screen entertainment.

Judging by the immediate response from scores of keen buyers and exhibitors, we now know beyond all question of doubt that in our aim to supply the demand of an OPEN-MARKET-SPECIAL WEEKLY we will be generously supported.

At the present time, when so much interest centers around the personality of a STAR who portrays the leading role in a feature picture, the appearance of MISS RITA JOLIVET and MR. HAMILTON REVELLE in three of our releases, to commence in March, will prove of especial interest to readers.

RITA JOLIVET

MISS RITA JOLIVET

will be best remembered as the beautiful survivor of the Lusitania and in her first picture entitled

"HER REDEMPTION"

the big shipwreck scene is graphically re-enacted

The Appearance of

"LOVE'S SACRIFICE"

The Second Rita Jolivet Feature is timed for the immediate future and is sure to create unusual interest because it is so entirely different in story and action from what is usually seen

MR. HAMILTON REVELLE

has probably attained the artistic heights of his career in the classical production entitled

"SINS OF THE FATHER"

HAMILTON REVELLE

These are attractions that you should make early application for, Mr. Exhibitor, and with the distinct understanding that your only obligation is to your own profit-sheet, we suggest that you write for full particulars, or direct us to have our representative call upon you.

Sweeping the Nation!

When Kitty Kelly of The Chicago Tribune saw the first of the "Musty Suffer" comedies at the Ziegfeld Theatre:—

"At last an original comedian has developed a cast of genuine funniness which doesn't show a trace of Chaplinitis . . ."

And after she saw the second:—

"A SHORT CYCLE OF PURE FUN..... INTO WHICH HARRY WATSON HAS PUT SOME MORE OF HIS PERFECTLY ORIGINAL COMEDY....."

And the third:—

"Another of the Kleine 'Musty Suffer' difficulties of Harry Watson shook the Sabbath calm of the Ziegfeld into merriment....."

The fourth:—

"Harry Watson has put a new comedy figure on the map in his mirthful imaginings of "Musty Suffer.' Mr. Watson's fun is remarkable for its unimitativeness and cleanliness. It is new clown fun free from suggestiveness."

Facts and Comments

A SUCCESSFUL exhibitor, the owner of a chain of theaters in the South, on a recent visit to the offices of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, remarked that nothing was more rare in the experience of the average exhibitor than to find a good picture with good "paper." Some of the finest paper, he said, had been made for some of the worst features while on the other hand many features of real merit suffer through poor "paper." The paper question opens a wide field of discussion. It is our own experience that offensive paper has done more harm than offensive features because the percentage of bad paper is so much higher than the percentage of bad pictures. Recently the writer saw a twenty-four sheet posted in a very conspicuous place in the downtown section of the city showing in glaring red the revolting spectacle of a man brutally fighting down the resistance of a young girl. We cannot imagine a more grievous offense against the good name of the motion picture. Under the circumstances we are not surprised to learn that the proposed censorship bill in New Jersey provides for the special censoring of posters. The common council of an eastern city has just passed an ordinance making it a misdemeanor to show representations of murder, shooting, stabbing, stealing or other criminal act in posters. No doubt some offensive poster has inspired this proposed legislation. If exhibitors would agree upon a standard of posters it would mean a long step toward the eradication of this intolerable evil.

A VALUED friend of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, an exhibitor of many years' experience, distributes schedule cards to his audience. These cards show the starting time for each performance. All his shows run continuously from 11 a. m. to 11 p. m., making in all ten shows. Our friend says that the distribution of these cards has greatly aided him in regulating the crowds that come to his theater. On the back of the card is a little memento: "Keep me in your pocket for reference." We would like to hear from other exhibitors whether they find any advantages in the scheduling of their shows.

ACCORDING to news reaching THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD from Oklahoma City, Okla., the exhibitors there have combined in an effort to stop what they call an illegal trust said to be formed by certain film exchanges. It is said that four hundred exhibitors have signed the legal papers necessary to set the machinery of the law in motion. A protest is also made against collecting the rental for films one week in advance. A date has been set for a hearing before the corporation commission of the state and the further developments will be watched by exhibitors throughout the country.

WE ARE pleased to learn that an old and successful pioneer in the industry, Mr. David Horsley, has entered the race for congress in one of the California districts. It is said that he has the entire support of all the motion picture men in that section and that he will also be widely indorsed by the press. He has done much to promote the industries of California and Los Angeles. If in return for this the people elect him to congress the industry will be sure of a staunch and able spokesman on the floor of the popular branch of the national legislature.

THE New Jersey exhibitors are making a laudable effort to awaken a wholesale public sentiment for an amendment to the Sunday Law which will give each city or county in the state the right to determine whether the motion picture houses should keep open or closed on Sundays. In their fight against censorship they are met on every hand by lists of objectionable features on which the advocates of censorship base their insistent demands. One of the active men in the campaign has sent us such a list of pictures condemned by the press and we find that out of six, three were made by one and the same company.

THREE cheers for the organized group of producers that have just decided to cut the "Censors" out of the National Board on the tails of their films. The sooner that estimable board drops the word "censors" the better for everybody. There is an awful lot in a name.

Spoiling the Illusion*

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

ANNOUNCING actors on the screen after the story has started has something of the effect of stopping a stage performance at the entrance of a principal and announcing, "This is not Cardinal Richelieu, mind you, but John Smith playing the part." Many people go to the picture show to forget what they really are and live in a world of make-believe. That world is devised for them by the author of the play and visualized by director and interpreters, all with infinite pains, only to have the illusion shattered by the screen interpolation, "Richelieu, Mr. John Smith." There is a place for announcement, and any producer who has a brain in his noddle, instead of a vermiform appendix, ought to know by this time where it is.

Not to destroy the publicity man—he is too big a factor—but to elevate and improve him, attention is herein directed to the fact that the little theaters would soon be emptied if people were asked to perpetually view the actors in themselves, no matter how successfully touted. The publicity man is an educator—he tells the common herd what to like and how to like it. Further than that he occasionally does so with a skill and intelligence that convinces the public against its own will, but he is ordinarily inclined to follow lines of least resistance, to throw the lime-light on those who crave it most.

Successful actors reflect a character, hold up a mirror to the thoughts and feelings of that character, so that those who see may also clearly perceive what is beyond the impersonation, its reason for existence. That is an art in itself, and it is an important element in the success of a screen presentation, but it is an art very generously recognized by press critics, and it receives lavish appreciation from publicity men, often to the verge of antagonizing the public, nearly always to the detriment of the interpreter, swelling him so that he can not keep both feet on the ground. If there remains any such thing as motion-picture production as a fine art, HE is IT.

Nearly all such actors are exceptionally good at the outset, and they would probably remain so if not boosted beyond reason, but they are sustained in an omnipotent attitude of the only thing on earth until their superfluous egotism becomes destructive of play interest. We are asked to sit in awed contemplation of John Smith instead of following the fortunes of Richelieu—be it understood that these remarks are not directed against any artist who has recently impersonated the great Cardinal.

It is a musical composition with decided limitations that is made for the exclusive use of one orchestra, and it is a play of equally decided limitations that is written especially for the uses of a certain specified company. The really great play stands on its own merits, to be visualized by this or that company according to its sources, often a great play in spite of inadequate presentation. This does not mean that a company actually lacks resources because it is committed to a certain definite policy as to the character of plays it shall produce, but that there is something lacking in an orchestra which can only play pieces composed especially for it.

We love to live in the story, to live the lives of those passing through periods of love and adventure, to joy with them, to sorrow with them, to feel the thrill of peril, to experience relief when it has passed. It is for author, director and actor to create and sustain the illusion.

Now comes some high-priced Cissy Brown, a sweet thing, to be sure, and we are glad to see her occasionally in parts she can play, but she is principally concerned about making a hit that is almost purely personal. Little need be said of her conception of a role and still less of her interpretation. Ophelia, Desdemona, Rosalind, or Portia, what matters it? They must be changed to suit the innocuous lullaby of Cissy Brown, or she just simply will NOT go on with the rehearsal.

To smother the pleasure of an audience for the sake of gratifying the caprice of Mlle. Brown, and, incidentally, insinuating some added publicity, causes the common herd to wonder what is the matter with the play. The story does not seem to go along as smoothly as it should. Just in the midst of having a nice time we are asked to stop and pay tribute, possibly to a poor little beggar girl of magnificent coiffure, who has been out all night in the rain. Most of us feel as we did at the nickelodeon in days gone by, when the publicity-seeking pianist played ragtime during a scene of death on the screen.

There is a class of directors so thoroughly innoculated with theatricalism that they are almost incurable. They cannot be brought to realize that stagey situations, barely tolerated in their proper sphere, become absolutely raw when depicted on the screen. In an art so purely visual it is a case of "show me." However romantic the story may be, the treatment must continually reach out for absolute credence. Two men can be portrayed by double exposure on the screen so that the wife of one of the characters could not be expected to tell them apart, but people in the audience are aware that the false husband could not imitate the voice and handwriting of the real one.

The wornout device of presenting two men who look exactly alike is as regularly employed as the mixing of children at their birth, or that stale inanity of sending a blackmailed wife to the private apartment of the villain to tell him that she can not obtain the hush money. That sort of stuff never fooled anybody on the stage, and it does not operate to induce a highly desirable, if not absolutely necessary, sense of truth on the screen. The one thing best calculated to preserve illusion, better even than splendid interpretation, is common sense in treatment.

By common sense in treatment is meant that the story may start off with any unreal assumption, but it must follow a logical development once it is well under way. Whatever the initial impulse, and it may start from the wildest flights of an author's imagination, the indicated trend must be followed along plausible lines to the end. The trouble with those directors who are bound by theatrical convention is that they do not see the greatest advantage screen presentation has over that of the stage, the visual suggestion of what is ordinarily invisible.

The deeper we dig beneath the surface of human nature the further away we get from individualism. We are indeed brothers at heart, sharing exactly the same emotions, influenced to a greater or less degree by the same impulses. It is for artists of the screen to portray what is passing in the mind of a character, what is agitating his heart.

Your Best Friend is Your House

By W. Stephen Bush.

FROM time to time I receive letters from readers of The Moving Picture World asking my opinion about certain feature programs. "I am dissatisfied," says one man, "with the —— films and now have a chance to get the —— films. What is your advice?" Another letter asks which is the best feature program and still another expects us to compare in detail the various merits of all the prominent feature producers.

I have but one advice to give to all such letters and here it is: Advertise your house rather than any particular brand of film.

A valued correspondent, a progressive exhibitor conducting a first-class theater in a city in Michigan, says that he read with a great deal of interest the recent article "Good Faith and a Bad Reward" and then adds:

"I know of the same thing happening and think it is an outrage, but have not the exhibitors several ways of 'getting back?'" My friend continues thus:

"Instead of trying to make a brand name popular, why not try to make your house popular? Get a good trade mark for your house. Use it everywhere. Have your house name lettered in a distinctive manner and use it everywhere. Combine the two if possible. Have short bits of film made with your trade mark and Royal (your theater's name) Photoplays. Use this on all pictures."

Such letters as this one convince me more and more that the day of the exhibitor is dawning. The entire early history and development of the industry militated against independence and initiative on the part of the exhibitor. Having been in tutelage and leading strings through the force of circumstance for many years it will take some time and it will cost some trouble for the exhibitor to win and hold his rightful position in the councils of the industry. On all sides, however, these signs of a new spirit of independence and initiative are increasing.

I know of no better suggestion to exhibitors everywhere than the advice above stated and so heartily concurred in by my correspondent. Advertise your own house. Act on what appears to me the common-sense principle, that brands of film may come or go, but your house ought to go on forever. Your house is the thing. If you know how to present your pictures, if you know how to vary your program, if you are capable of creating the right sort of atmosphere, if your music is right, and your staff is competent and if your know the tastes and demands of your audience, why should you worry?

The one thing you have to guard against in choosing your features is the brand of the salacious producer, the man who specializes in the bed-room drama and you will fasten the taint of his name on your house if you harbor his stuff there long enough. The fate and prosperity of your house do not depend on whether you run the films and features of A or of B. If you depend on just one certain brand of films or features you are not protecting your own best interests. The Moving Picture World carries the announcements of all the great film producers week after week, it assists your judgment by impartial and careful reviews written by the most capable and experienced reviewers. With these funds of information your selection of the best program—the best program for you—ought not to be difficult.

Experienced exhibitors know that even the best service, whether in programs or in features, has its weak spots. We all have seen film companies start off as if they would break every record and presently slow down and scarcely maintain a good average. There is no such thing as an insurance company guaranteeing every feature to be a masterpiece. It cannot be done. No one can possibly know what the future will bring. In the film world at least it is entirely possible for the first to become the last and for the last to become the first.

The only real certainly in all this confusion and uncertainty is your own house. I doubt very much whether as much as five per cent. of the exhibitors of the country advertise their houses as they might be and ought to be advertised. Your house is your property, the brand of film is somebody else's property. Give the preference to your own and you will depend on yourself rather than on another man whose interest may not always be identical with your own. If you build be sure that you will reap the reward.

Let this thought dwell uppermost in your mind: The first thing for me to do is to advertise my house. Centre your purpose and your energy on that first of all. If you persevere this is the prediction I will make: The man who owns the brand of film will come to you and you will always have your choice.

The Two Trumpeters

By W. Stephen Bush.

A DELIGHTFUL old gentleman is Canon William Sheafe Chase, of Brooklyn, the second trumpeter in the camp of the Censorites, the first and loudest trumpeter being, of course, the great and only Wilbur F. Crafts. The Canon has moments of candor. His mind works with a certain transparency. He is a valiant fighter, narrow to be sure, but he hits straight from the shoulder and he prefers the old-fashioned frontal attack to the craftier methods of the International Reform Bureau. We differ hopelessly with the Canon, but we admire the Canon's sincerity. We think there is a good deal of the milk of human kindness in the makeup of the old gentleman.

In one of his moments of candor the Canon remarked to the Committee on Education at the recent hearings in Washington that "the average morality of the theater-going public was below par and that it was the duty of the State to step in and raise the low morality of the theater-going public." That shows on what lines the Canon and his friends are thinking. When they say that their morality is obviously superior to that of a very large element in our citizenship they do not realize their tremendous conceit. They are absolutely unaware of their obvious hypocrisy. They plainly show that Time has passed them by without touching them with the spirit of progress and tolerance. Mathematically they may live in the twentieth century, intellectually and religiously they are the contemporaries of Cotton Mather and all the other reactionaries now resting under moldy tombstones.

We assure the Canon that there is many a man and many a woman going to motion picture theaters every day, and in spite of that, the moral and spiritual peer of the Canon. I go one step further. There are many exhibitors and producers who are doing as much good in their way as the good Canon is trying to do. Ours is a century of inclusiveness rather than exclusiveness. We are all praying for the end of militarism as the arch-foe of democracy, but we think there is little to choose between an ecclesiastical caste and a military caste.

By the way, Brother Crafts is giving us too much credit for our share in the fight against censorship. We are only echoing the sentiments of all the enlightened friends of the motion picture. We wish to assure the gentleman that his gratuitous threat of supporting local censorship everywhere until we bend the neck under the yoke of his or some other brand of Federal censorship excites no terrors in the breasts of motion picture men anywhere. Such a threat is merely illustrative of his peculiar methods of warfare. Mr. Crafts is not only fighting us, he is fighting a force compared to which our boldest strength is feebleness itself. He is hurling himself against the giant of American Freedom. He is battling with the unconquerable spirit of American democracy. He is attacking the battlements of common sense. If he is worried about us we hasten to assure him that we are not a bit worried about him.

We never impugn the motives of any man because motive is a question for the individual conscience. We have not the slightest doubt that sooner or later the ideas of Crafts must fail. They are unsound in principle and predicated upon a vague and wild desire to reform rather than upon any tangible facts. We are not jealous of the friends he has found in the ranks of the motion picture industry—no, we are not jealous, but we are sorry both for him and his friends. In the meantime we propose to keep the light burning. With a sincere belief in the ultimate triumph of truth we are looking forward to more conversions among the pro-censorship element in the industry.

Object to Thurston's Article

Exchange Men in Denver and Salt Lake City Take Exception to Certain Statements as Unfair and Unauthentic.

H. L. KNAPPEN, the manager of the Pathe Colorado Exchange at Denver, Colo., takes serious exception to an article recently published in this paper and written by Howell Ernest Thurston. Mr. Knappen denies categorically that his office has ever taken an over-lenient attitude on the question of films damaged by careless operators or exhibitors. He says that "there is no exchange in the city of Denver which takes a more determined stand on the damaged film question than the Pathe office." By far the greater number of cancellations, says Mr. Knappen, result from his uncompromising attitude toward exhibitors, who damage and destroy Pathe film and who are clearly at fault in the matter. Mr. Knappen characterizes Thurston's statement that "Pathe is afraid to call an exhibitor's attention to the fact that a reel has been ruined" as wholly erroneous.

We are glad to give space to Mr. Knappen's statement, and take this occasion to assure him and others who may have been aggrieved by the article in question that The Moving Picture World is always ready and willing to give all sides in every case.

We likewise take note of the protest of George E. Carpenter, manager of the Notable Feature Film Company of Salt Lake City, Utah. Mr. Carpenter was not mentioned in the article, but he says that a sense of fairness prompts him to say that there are unwarranted innuendos in the article. He invites Thurston to "drop in and get acquainted." W. H. Cree, manager of the General Film in Denver, Colo., adds his objection. His complaint is that Thurston apparently "only called on one film exchange in this city" (Denver).

HEARING ON NEW YORK CENSORSHIP BILL.

The Codes Committee of the Assembly will have a hearing on the Ahearn Censorship Bill on February 23, at 1 P. M., at Albany. Frederick M. Ahearn, the sponsor of the bill, is chairman of the Committee on Codes. The Motion Picture Board of Trade, the Exhibitors' League of the State, and the Moving Picture World will appear to protest against the bill and to ask that the measure be either killed in committee or sent back to the assembly with an adverse report.

SUNDAY CLOSING CASE APPEALED IN ALBANY.

The action of the lower court in Albany, N. Y., acquitting Roy H. Bender on a charge of Sunday opening, will be appealed from by the local district attorney. The ordinance under which the police originally acted had been on the books before the coming of the motion picture theaters, and the exhibitors claim that picture houses do not come within the provisions of the law, although licenses for the exhibition of pictures, which are issued by the Mayor, stipulate that such exhibitions shall not be made on Sunday.

Since Mr. Bender's arrest, last July, the Court of Appeals has decided that the regulation of Sunday shows is a matter for the state to determine and not for the municipalities. The appeal of the district attorney in the Bender case will be argued before the Supreme Court in March.

Working for Actors' Fund

Motion Picture Committee, Headed by Samuel Goldfish, Busy With Money-Getting Plans—May 15 Named as Donation Day.

HALF a million dollars in fifteen weeks as the contribution of the motion picture industry towards the Million Dollar Endowment of the Actors' Fund of America is the stupendous project announced by Samuel Goldfish, chairman of the motion picture campaign. In a year and a time when numerous appeals for charitable funds are being made upon the public, it is confidently hoped that the motion picture campaign by the very extent of its scope and the whirlwind methods of its propaganda and collection will establish a new record in the history of American benefactions.

Some weeks ago the Actors' Fund of America launched a movement to raise a million dollars to establish a permanent endowment from the interest of which all expenses of the big charity could be met. The endowment also would forever remove the Actors' Fund from the necessity of appeals to the public for support.

Because of the great expansion of the motion picture industry and the entrance of thousands of players of the legitimate and musical comedy stages into the film world there has been expressed a desire on the part of those prominent in the motion picture industry to help the Actors' Fund. The directors of the Actors' Fund requested Samuel Goldfish, executive head of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, who is one of the younger and most successful men in the industry, to head the motion picture campaign.

The plans embrace a national appeal to the public through the twenty thousand motion picture theaters of the United States and to the many thousands of persons employed or interested in every branch of the industry.

In consummating these elaborate arrangements Mr. Goldfish has had the co-operation of every leading man in the industry. In addition to the general committee of which Thomas A. Edison is honorary chairman, the campaign will be intimately directed by executive committee and finance composed of Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, treasurer; Arthur H. Spiegel, J. W. Binder, J. E. Brulatour, William A. Johnston, John Wylie, Mitchell Mark, George Kleine, J. A. Berst, W. W. Hodkinson, Marcus Loew and Aloph Zukor.

Mayor Mitchel was the first to welcome his assignment to the honorary committee, and to promise his active support of the stupendous campaign. Mayors Thompson of Chicago, Rolph of San Francisco, and Sebastian of Los Angeles, responded with pleasure and alacrity to the call of the cause, and other municipal chief executives of the big cities promptly accepted appointment.

The motion picture benefactors have fixed upon Monday, May 15, as the final and culminating day of their campaign for their brothers and sisters of the speaking stage, and are hopeful of their ability to have in hand voluntary contributions of half a million dollars by that time. Offerings are already reaching Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, treasurer, at the offices of the finance committee in Locust avenue, Brooklyn.

Every person identified with the motion picture industry in the United States will be asked to co-operate in the campaign, and every motion picture theater throughout the land will dedicate a share of its receipts on May 15 to the Actors' Fund. A carnival and ball, at which every motion picture actor and actress of prominence will lend their presence, is planned for the day at Madison Square Garden.

The staggering magnitude of the philanthropic plan to collect a half million dollars in the short allotted time has in no way daunted the motion picture interests. Samuel Goldfish, prominent young figure in the industry, is actively directing the work. The project has the official sanction of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America.

MARCUS LOEW FIRST IN LINE.

Marcus Loew, proprietor of more than seventy theaters devoted to motion pictures and vaudeville, has advised Samuel Goldfish, chairman of the committee appointed to raise $500,000, among the motion picture interests, that he will, on May 15, contribute 10 per cent. of the gross receipts of all his theaters to the endowment fund. This is the first response to the call of the committee and puts Mr. Loew at the head of the line of contributors.

Pittsburgh Screen Club Ball

Picture Men of Smoky City Hold Highly Successful and Happy Event.

THE first annual ball of the Pittsburgh Screen Club was held on the evening of St. Valentine's Day, Monday, February 14, in Motor Square Garden, Pittsburgh, with the most brilliant gathering of stars and other luminaries of the moving picture firmanent ever assembled in that part of the country. Pittsburgh's first big film affair met with unqualified success, both socially and financially. A portion of the receipts was given to the Actors' Fund of America.

The New York party arrived on Monday morning and was met by the reception committee and a large and enthusiastic crowd of fans. Waiting automobiles carried the stars to the Schenley Hotel, which was made the official headquarters. At noon the Metro stars were entertained at a nicely appointed luncheon in the Schenley. During the afternoon the ladies united into one party and were entertained by the ladies' reception committee.

Despite the severely cold weather, nearly three thousand attended the reception, entertainment and dance. People came from throughout the western Pennsylvania territory, as well as from points in Ohio and West Virginia. The following concerns held boxes: Metro Pictures Corporation (two), the Rowland & Clark theaters, the Universal Film Manufacturing Co., the Thanhouser Film Corp., the Ivan Film Productions, the Vitagraph Co., the Kalem Co., the Liberty theater, the East End Cameraphone, the downtown Cameraphone, the American Film Manufacturing Co., the Universal Movie Ticket Co., the Photoplay Entertainment Co., the Press Club, the Actors' Fund of America, the Pittsburgh Screen Club. The doors were thrown open at eight o'clock. The hall was thronged at half-past when the master of ceremonies, Hon. A. C. Stein, made his appearance on the stage. He first introduced Mayor Joseph G. Armstrong, who delivered a brief but very appropriate address of welcome in which he paid tribute to the moving picture industry and its important influences in the community.

Following the Mayor's address, the stars, the most honored guests of the evening, made their appearance in the boxes where they had been concealed from the view of the expectant assemblage. They were greeted with a rousing ovation, each being introduced in turn by the master of ceremonies. They were Mary Miles Minter, Hamilton Revelle, Grace Valentine, Mrs. Shelby, of the Metro; Anita Stewart, Mary Maurice, Edith Story, Wallie Van, Tefft Johnson, S. M. Spedon, of the Vitagraph; Violet Mersereau, Universal; Florence La Badie, Katherine Adams, of the Thanhouser; Paula Shay, of the Ivan; Teddy Sampson, of the Equitable; Gladys Hulette, of the Mutual, and Rose Stevens, of the Gaumont.

When the demonstration subsided, a program of entertainment by well-known singers and dancers began. After several numbers had been disposed of, "Billy" Quirk, president of the New York Screen Club, was introduced. Mr. Quirk gave a forceful and witty talk in his incomparable manner that met with enthusiastic response. Following Mr. Quirk's address, Sophia Kassmir, the noted New York dramatic soprano, sang several operatic selections which were well received. S. M. Spedon, publicity manager of the Vitagraph Company, then delivered a brief talk. Next on the program was Belle Gold, former co-star with Eddie Foy and others and wife of A. W. Cross, the manager of the Hudson Feature Film Company. She drew great applause with a number of her light opera song hits. Members of theatrical companies appearing at the local theaters then staged a series of well-arranged acts.

At the close of the entertainment the floor was cleared for dancing. The floor committee handled affairs in an able manner and things moved along smoothly. The chairman of this committee was J. P. Donnovan, of the Clark & Rowland theaters, and his assistants numbered about seventy. Mayor Armstrong, who selected for his partner "Mother" Mary Maurice, of the Vitagraph Company, led the grand march. Moving pictures were taken of this, as well as other striking features of the ball. A special lighting system had been installed and made the hall brighter than day. In one corner was concentrated 1,500,000 candle-power. The Universal Film Company and the Photoplay Entertainment Company, of Pittsburgh, both had cameramen on hand.

Dancing and a general good time continued until 2 A. M. At about one o'clock, however, a large party of the guests, accompanied by members of the club, went in autos to the Press Club, where an elaborate breakfast was served at one-thirty.

The entertainment committee consisted of Charles Seltzer, G. E. Ainsworth, C. W. Eckhardt, A. W. Cross and John McAleer.

The ladies' entertainment committee was made up of the following: Mrs. A. W. Cross, Mrs. H. P. Kester, Mrs. A. J. Hanna, Mrs. G. E. Ainsworth, Mrs. Mayer Silverman, Mrs. Peter Antonoplos, Mrs. Joseph S. Skirboll, Mrs. C. F. Miller, Mrs. D. C. France.

The reception committee was P. Antonoplos, I. Aronson, H. Goldberg, H. C. Simeral, Louis Sitnek, M. Feitler, John Smith, J. G. Long, W. A. Kay, H. C. Grelle, M. Teplitz, R. Solz, Ludwig Hommel, J. R. Newman, Albert Cook, G. R. Barry, G. J. Schwitzer, Elmer Calhoon, A. McKechnie, H. M. Aronson, J. J. Blackman.

UNIVERSAL "PEACE" CAMERAMAN BACK.

Joseph T. Rucker, cameraman of the Universal Animated Weekly, who accompanied the Ford Peace Pilgrims on the peace journey to Europe, returned home Saturday night, January 29, accompanied by Robert S. Doman, city editor of the Motion Picture Weekly, and representative of The Morning Telegraph. The trip from Rotterdam to New York was marked with very little out of the ordinary, but in Rotterdam the week before starting on his homeward journey, Mr. Rucker had an experience that he will never forget as long as he lives, and also one that he could not record on film.

Members of the association are: Ed. Dolan, Aberdeen; W. G. Ripley, Aberdeen; E. A. Rupert, Aberdeen; H. C. Thomas, Henry Newman and Thomas Bruce, Hoquiam.

Censors Decision Not Final

Judge Barratt Sustains the Right to Appeal in an Action Brought by the Franklin Film Corporation Against Breitinger and the Pennsylvania Board of Censors.

JUDGE BARRATT, in a recent opinion, holds that moving picture manufacturers have a right to appeal to the courts from decisions rendered by the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors. This action of the court is of the utmost importance to the moving picture industry, as it makes subject to review every case where the censors are deemed to have acted arbitrarily, and without due regard to the rights of the producers. The case in point, used as a test of the censors' power, was that of the Franklin Film Manufacturing Corporation against the State Board of Censors. The censors had deemed fit to cut out so much of a certain film that the point sought to have been illustrated by the drama was completely obscured. Judge Barratt ordered the censors to approve the film, with modifications already made by agreement between the board of censors and the manufacturers. According to the decision of the court, these modifications are proper, but it refused to sustain the board in further restrictions it had imposed. The decision will be printed in full next week.

KESSELL AND BAUMANN GO TO COAST.

Ad. Kessell and Charles O. Baumann of the New York Motion Picture Company, left New York for the Coast last week. They expect to remain for several weeks.

Censorship Threatens Maryland

A Lengthy and Complicated Bill Introduced at Annapolis—The Full Text of the Bill.

A RATHER lengthy and complicated censorship bill has been introduced at Annapolis, the state capital of Maryland. The measure has been referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The bill reads as follows:

An act relating to motion picture films, reels or stereopticon views or slides; providing a system of examination, approval and regulation thereof, and of the banners, posters and other like advertising matter used in connection therewith; creating the Board of Censors; and providing penalties for the violation of this act.

DEFINITION.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the word "film" used in this act means what is usually known as a motion picture film. The word "view" in this act means what is usually known as a stereopticon view or slide. The word "person" includes an association, co-partnership or a corporation.

USE OF FILMS, REELS, OR VIEWS PROHIBITED.

Sec. 2. It shall be unlawful to sell, lease, lend, exhibit, or use any motion picture film, reel or view, in the State of Maryland, unless the said film, reel or view has been submitted by the exchange, owner or lessee of the film, reel, or view and duly approved by the Maryland State Board of Censors, hereinafter in this act called the Board.

Sec. 3. The Board shall consist of three residents and citizens of the State of Maryland, well qualified by education and experience to act as censors under this act. One member of the Board shall be chairman, one member shall be vice-chairman and one member shall be secretary. They shall be appointed by the Governor, for terms of three years. Those first appointed under this act shall be appointed for three years, two years and one year, respectively; the respective terms to be designated by the Governor.

Sec. 4. A vacancy in the membership of the Board shall be filled for the unexpired term by the Governor. A vacancy shall not impair the right and duty of the remaining members to perform all the functions of the Board.

SEAL.

Sec. 5. The Board shall procure and use an official seal, which shall contain the words, "Maryland State Board of Censors," together with such design engraved thereon as the Board may prescribe.

APPROVALS BY BOARD.

Sec. 6. The Board shall examine or supervise the examinations of all films, reels or views to be exhibited or used in the State of Maryland and shall approve such films, reels or views which are moral and proper, and shall disapprove such as are sacrilegious, obscene, indecent, or immoral, or such as tend, in the judgment of the Board, to debase or corrupt morals.

STAMPING FILMS, REELS AND VIEWS.

Sec. 7. Upon each film, reel or view, which has been approved by the Board there shall be furnished and stamped by the Board and the following certificate or statement: "Approved by the Maryland State Board of Censors," and shall also furnish a certificate in writing, to the same effect, which certificate shall be exhibited to any member of the Board or employe thereof upon demand of the holder thereof. In the case of the motion pictures, such statement shall be shown on the screen, to the extent of approximately four feet of film. In the case of slides or views, each set shall have at least two slides or views shown with a similar statement.

RECORD OF EXAMINATIONS.

Sec. 8. The Board shall keep a record of all examinations made by it of films, reels or views; noting on the record all films, reels or views which have been approved, and those which have not been approved, with the reason for such disapproval.

REPORT.

Sec. 9. The Board shall report, in writing, annually, to the Governor, on or after the first day of November of each year. The report shall show:

1. A record of its meetings, and a summary of its proceedings during the year immediately preceding the date of the report.
2. The results of all examinations of films, reels, or views.
3. A detailed statement of all prosecutions for violations of this act.
4. A detailed and itemized statement of all the incomes and expenditures made by or in behalf of the Board.
5. Such other information as the Board may deem necessary or useful in explanation of the operations of the Board.
6. Such other information as shall be requested by the Governor.

OATH AND BOND.

Sec. 10. The chairman, vice-chairman and secretary shall, before assuming the duties of their respective offices, take and subscribe the oath prescribed by the Constitution of the State of Maryland, and shall enter into bonds to the state in the sum of three thousand dollars, respectively, conditioned for the faithful performance of their duties.

FEES.

Sec. 11. For the examination of each film, reel, or set of views, the Board shall receive in advance a fee of two dollars and one dollar for each duplicate or print thereof, which must be applied for at the same time and by the same person; one-half of all such fees shall go to the Treasurer of the State, and the other half shall go to the three members of the said Board in equal proportions.

Sec. 12. The Board out of the fees collected by the Board shall provide adequate offices and rooms in which to properly conduct the work and affairs of the Board in the City of Baltimore and the State of Maryland, and the expenses thereof shall be paid out of the first money collected by the Board as fees, as heretofore mentioned in this act, and said expenses in reference to said rooms and office shall not exceed the sum of five hundred dollars.

FINES.

Sec. 13. All fines imposed for violation of this act shall be paid into the State Treasury.

REGULATIONS OF EXHIBITIONS.

Sec. 14. Any member or employe of the Board may enter any place where films, reels or views are exhibited; and such member or employe is hereby empowered and authorized to prevent the display or exhibition of any film, reel or view which has not been duly approved by the Board.

REGULATION OF BANNERS, POSTERS AND ADVERTISING MATTER.

Sec. 15. No banner, poster or other like advertising matter shall contain anything that is immoral or improper. A copy of such banner and poster shall be submitted to the Board.

RULES.

Sec. 16. This act shall be enforced by the Board. In carrying out and enforcing the purpose of this act, it may adopt such reasonable rules as it may deem necessary. Such rules shall not be inconsistent with the laws of Maryland.

DUTIES OF PERSONS WHO SELL, LEASE, EXHIBIT, OR USE FILMS, REELS OR VIEWS.

Sec. 17. Every person intending to sell, lease, exhibit or use any film, reel or view in the State of Maryland shall furnish the Board, when the application for approval is made, a description of the film, reel or view to be exhibited, sold or leased, and the purposes thereof; and shall submit the film, reel or view to the Board for examination; and shall furnish a statement or affidavit that the duplicate film, reel or view is an exact copy of the original film, reel or view, as submitted for examination to the Board; and that all eliminations, changes or rejections, made or required by the Board in the original film, reel or view, has been or will be made in duplicate.

INTERFERENCE WITH EMPLOYES OF BOARD.

Sec. 18. It shall be unlawful for any person to hinder or interfere in any manner with any member or employe of the Board while performing any duties in carrying out the intent or provisions of this act.

RE-EXAMINATION AND APPEAL.

Sec. 19. If any elimination or disapproval of a film, reel or view is ordered by the Board, the person submitting such film, reel or view for examination will receive immediate notice of such elimination or disapproval, and if appealed from, such film, reel or view will be promptly re-examined, in the presence of such person, by two or more members of the Board, and the same, finally approved or disapproved promptly after such re-examination, with the right of appeal from the decision of the Board to the Baltimore City Court of Baltimore City.

PENALTIES.

Sec. 20. Any person who violates any of the provisions of this act and is convicted thereof summarily before any Magistrate or Justice of the Peace, shall be sentenced to pay a fine of not less than twenty-five dollars, nor more than fifty dollars, for the first offense. For any subsequent offense the fine shall be not less than fifty dollars, nor more than one hundred dollars. In default of payment of a fine and costs, the defendant shall be sentenced to imprisonment, in the prison of the county where such offense was committed for not less than ten days, and not more than thirty days. All fines shall be paid by the Magistrate or Justice of the Peace to the Board and by it paid into the State Treasury.

Sec. 21. If any person shall fail to display or exhibit on the screen the approval seal, as issued by the Board, of a film, reel or view, which has been approved, and is convicted summarily before any Magistrate or Justice of the Peace, he shall be sentenced to pay a fine of not less than five dollars and not more than ten dollars; in default of payment of a fine and costs, the defendant shall be sentenced to imprisonment, in the prison of the county, or in Baltimore City, where such offense was committed, for not less than two days and not more than five days.

LIMITATION OF SCOPE OF ACT.

Sec. 22. This act does not apply to any exhibition of, or use of films, reels or views, for purely educational, charitable, fraternal or religious purpose, by any religious association, fraternal society, library, museum, public school, or private school, institution of learning, or by any corporation of the first class.

EDITORIALS ON THE SCREEN.

Film editorials are to be flashed on the screens of motion picture theaters throughout the land to assist in the fight against censorship of photoplays. This was decided upon at a meeting of the Motion Picture Producers' Association held in Los Angeles on January 24, and a committee, consisting of H. O. Davis, vice president and general manager of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, Thomas Dixon, Jr., author of "The Clansman," and David W. Griffith, of the Fine Arts Films, was appointed to prepare the film editorials and general protests against censorship, to be used in a campaign for thirty days.

In the editorials the people will be asked to aid the movement for the freedom of the film that it may be on the same plane with the freedom of the press, freedom of speech and freedom of the spoken play, leaving the police powers of each city to guard against improper productions

A 1000% INVESTMENT FOR EVERY EXHIBITOR.

Exhibitors throughout the country write in to say that the Moving Picture World's free pamphlets, "The Motion Picture and the Modern Sunday," and "The Great Arguments Against Censorship" have helped them immensely. We send you these pamphlets free of charge upon request. All exhibitors should have them. These brochures mean preparedness in the war for motion picture peace and motion picture prosperity. Just drop us a line and your two cents will bring you an interest of a thousand percent and maybe more. Send for them now.

MISS GREGORY A STAR IN "ACCORDING TO LAW."

Miss Mildred Gregory is to star in "According to Law" which Gaumont will release early in March as a Mutual Masterpicture, edition de luxe. She plays the part of a cold, unfeeling wife who denies her husband his rights. Howard Hall appears as the husband.

Blackton Again Heads Trade Board

Executive Committee Indorses Actors Fund Campaign—Publicity Committee to Entertain Cartoonists.

THE Motion Picture Board of Trade of America has announced the re-election of Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, of the Vitagraph Company of America, as president. The other officers for 1916 are: Vice-presidents—Carl Laemmle, Universal Film Manufacturing Company; Nicholas Power, Nicholas Power Co.; John R. Freuler, Mutual Film Corporation; F. J. Rembusch, Mirror Screen Co.; W. Stephen Bush, Moving Picture World; W. R. Rothacker, Industrial Moving Picture Co.; secretary, Edward A. MacManus; treasurer, Joseph W. Engel; executive secretary, J. W. Binder.

Directors—J. Stuart Blackton, Nicholas Power, A. J. Gilligham, R. H. Cochrane, Walter W. Irwin, S. L. Rothapfel, Wm. A. Johnston, J. E. Brulatour, P. A. Powers and J. W. Binder; executive committee—Walter W. Irwin, chairman; Nicholas Power, P. A. Powers, Wm. A. Johnston, E. A. MacManus, J. Stuart Blackton, J. E. Brulatour, John R. Freuler, J. W. Binder.

The executive committee of the board voted its wholehearted indorsement of the Motion Picture Actors Fund campaign to place the work of the fund on an assured financial basis.

The appointment of the following members of the Bureau of Standards was recommended: Don J. Bell, Nicholas Power, F. H. Richardson, C. Francis Jenkins and Albert E. Smith.

Cartoonists' Dinner Date Set.

The Publicity Committee of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America met on Thursday, February 10, and organized for the year. Arthur James, of the Metro Pictures Corporation, was re-elected chairman by acclamation, and Paul Gulick, of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, was chosen vice-chairman, a new office, made necessary by the enlargement of the scope of the committee's activities in the creation of a sound public opinion in regard to motion pictures.

Thomas M. Alexander, in charge of advertising and general publicity for the board, was elected secretary of the committee. Mr. Alexander spoke of the importance of the motion picture industry in the industrial and business life of the United States. Plans discussed at the meeting make it an assured fact that the cartoonists' dinner to be given by the board will be an event out of the ordinary. The date was definitely fixed as March 12 and the place as the Hotel Astor. The following committee was appointed to look after the arrangements and to develop ideas for the entertainment: Arthur James, Arthur Leslie, Sam Spedon, George Blaisdell, Terry Ramsaye, P. A. Parsons, Paul Gulick, Carl H. Pierce, J. W. Binder and T. M. Alexander.

Scheduled V-L-S-E Subjects

An Attractive List of Features Offered by the Big Four Producers.

THE Lubin Company has just entered into a contract with Rex Beach, whereby all the output of that widely-known author will hereafter be produced by this company. Preparations are already under way for the production of "The Barrier," "The Silver Horde," and "The Iron Trail." These will probably be put out in the order named.

Essanay is planning some stirring productions of intense dramatic action and strong emotional parts, along lines that get away from the beaten path. "Vultures of Society," which was released last week, was the first of this series. It won universal commendation from reviewers for its strong portrayal of life in the real. This will be followed by "The Discard," which is to be released on February 28, and which is a story of the double life of a mother moving in high circles, and the disaster which is visited upon her innocent daughter as a result. On March 13, Essanay will release "The Havoc," in five reels, written by the well-known playwright, E. S. Sheldon. It will be the first photoplay to be produced in Essanay's new studio. Gladys Hanson, who has been playing with Lou-Tellegen in "The Ware Case," will be the principal of this production, supported by Bryant Washburn and Charles Dalton.

"Thou Shalt Not Covet," which, aside from two of the widely-discussed spectacles now before the public, probably has received more commendation than any other film released recently, will be followed by the Selig Company with "Unto Those Who Sin," available March 13. In this production, Miss Fritzi Brunette appears.

Vitagraph has completed its weekly schedule of releases through the V-L-S-E up until June 5. Beginning with February 28, the releases of this company include "For a Woman's Fair Name," with Robert Edeson, Eulalie Jensen, Harry Morey, William Dunn and Belle Bruce; "The Hunted Woman," ready March 6, which has in its cast, Marie de Bar and her husband, Joe de Bar. This production is a stirring story of the building of the last great railroad through the Canadian Rockies, and is unique in that its characters are people still living in the Northwest. "Colton, U. S. N.," has been changed to "The Hero of Submarine D-2." This will appear on March 13, and will have as its principals Charles Richman and Eleanor Woodruff.

Edith Storey and Evart Overton are the leads in the production scheduled for March 20 called "The Two-Edged Sword." The following week Antonio Moreno, Dorothy Kelly and Evart Overton will be seen in "The Supreme Temptation." "God's Country and the Woman," which has been in the course of preparation for several months past at the Los Angeles studio of the Vitagraph Company, will be shown on April 3. Its principals include Nell Shipman, William Duncan and George Holt.

On April 10 there is scheduled an emotional drama titled "The Vital Question," with Virginia Pearson and Anders Randolf in the principal roles. The succeeding week will mark the release of "Artie," featuring Charles Richman and Arline Pretty. There is a large cast of principals in the film scheduled for April 24 called "A Rift in the Lute." This includes Donald Hall, Dorothy Kelly, Harry Morey, Louise Beaudet and Bobby Connelly. "The Ordeal of Elizabeth," which is due to appear on May 8, will have Lillian Walker, Evart Overton and Donald Hall. During the preceding week there will be released "The Redemption of Dave Darcey," and in their order beginning with May 15 there comes "The Shop Girl," "The Silver Spell," "Degeneration," formerly "The Patriot," and lastly on June 5 "Joan Thursday."

Macnamara With Mirror Films

WALTER MACNAMARA, author of "Traffic in Souls," and of a hundred other successful films as well as author and producer of "Ireland, a Nation," has joined the forces of the Mirror Films, Inc., as head of the scenario department and with the privilege of working out some big ideas which he has in mind. He proposes to work out such big stories as "The Heart of New York," his most recent sensational film with a big human interest back of it.

Walter Macnamara.

Mr. Macnamara began life as a blacksmith and marine engineer and stands as the only man in the amusement world who ever refused a seat in the House of Commons. He was war correspondent for the Associated Press in South Africa and afterward engaged in editorial work in London. Later he blossomed forth as an impresario with such stars as Anna Held and Nance O'Neil under his management.

When he came to America he joined the scenario staff of the Universal Film Company and wrote the "Binks" comedies and special stories featuring King Baggot. It was not long after this that he wrote "Traffic in Souls," probably the most profitable film ever produced. It was timely and came to the public at the moment when the "white slave" traffic was being exposed.

"SUNSHINE DAD" FINISHED.

De Wolf Hopper has finished "Sunshine Dad," his second Triangle-Fine Arts story, and is to appear soon in another American comedy called "The Philanthropist." David W. Griffith is so pleased with the combination that filmed "Don Quixote" that he is retaining the principal members for "The Philanthropist." Edward Dillon will again be the director; Fay Tincher, the foil for the huge comedian, and Max Davidson will have an important role.

Universal Ball Coming

Big Time Will Be Pulled Off at Grand Central Palace, Saturday Evening, March 11.

ONE of the most interesting social events of the year in film circles will take place at the Grand Central Palace on Saturday, March 11, when the Universal Film Manufacturing Company will hold its third annual ball. This is an occasion of great joy to the entire personnel of the Universal, a time when from president to office boy, all rub elbows together, imbibing in that great spirit of co-operation and harmony which has spelled success for the Universal.

Everyone connected with the Eastern branch of the Universal is given some important part in the arrangements for this monster gathering of Universalities, so that all may figure in the success of the great ball. The following committees have been appointed by General Manager Joe Brandt: Chairman of all committees, Carl Laemmle.

Grand Ball Committee: Joe Brandt, chairman; P. D. Cochrane, P. A. Powers, Claude MacGowan, Bert Adler, Julius Stern.

Floor Committee: M. H. Hoffman, chairman; R. H. Cochrane, Al. Brandt, Harry Wolff, John Ward, F. G. Perkins, H. J. Shepard, John Barry at the door.

Decorative Committee: Sam Zeiler, chairman; Julius Lewis, Sam Pelzman, Herman Stern, Teddy Solomon.

Supper Committee: Nat Rothstein, chairman; Paul Gulick, William Sistrom, Raymond Cavannaugh, Jack Cohn, Raymond L. Schrock.

Entertainment Committee: King Baggot, chairman; Paul Panzer, Allan Holubar, William Welsh, Matt Moore, Frank Smith, Harry Myers, Lucian Henderson, Robert Hill, Stuart Paton, Charles Ogle, Ben Wilson, Harry Cohn.

Reception Committee: Miss Mary Fuller, chairman; Misses Dorothy Phillips, Violet Mersereau, Clara Byers, Rosemary Theby, Florence Lawrence, Betty Cray, Jane Gail, Edna Hunter, Ethel Gradin, Eleanor Fried, Blanche Wallach, Diana Nicoll, Florence Warshofsky, Bertha Estreich, Belle Hirsh, Sadie Ryan, Sadie Safran, Lillie Drexler, Olga Gorger, Gertrude Allen, Sadie McIntoch, Genevieve Ryan, Florence Wallach, Anna Wildman, Helga Anderson, Sophie Schenck, Minnie F. Todd, May Dean, Adele Elsowitz.

Press Committee: Paul Gulick, chairman; Misses Adele Elsowitc, Helen Starr, Marjorie Howard, Robert S. Doman, Thaddeus E. Letendre, Arthur Jacobson, Hugh Weir, Alex Goldman, Raymond Cavanaugh, Al Brandt, Franz B. May, Sydney Sampson.

Finance Committee: P. A. Powers, chairman; R. H. Cochrane, Joe Brandt, M. H. Hoffman, S. B. Kramer, Claude MacGowan.

Trade Views "The Ne'er Do Well"

Candler Theater Is Filled by Appreciative House at First Eastern Showing of Selig-Lesser Feature.

THE Candler theater was filled on the afternoon of Thursday, February 10, to witness the first showing of "The Ne'er Do Well," the ten-reel subject produced by the Selig Company, the United States rights of which have been purchased by Sol L. Lesser, of San Francisco. Present as the guests of Mr. Lesser were many prominent in literary and artistic circles, friends of Rex Beach, as well as a host of theatrical and film men. Mr. Beach, author of "The Ne'er Do Well," was present with Mrs. Beach. The writer remarked at the conclusion of the showing that he had in a little over two hours seen visualized on the screen the story on which he spent nearly a year in building.

The theater seats 1,150 and there were no vacant chairs. In spite of the fact that it was 3.15 before the title was thrown on the screen, every one remained until the end, an occurrence not usual in a trade showing. It was a closely attentive house and a sympathetic one, as was unmistakably indicated many times during the afternoon. The music added to the effectiveness of the production. A large orchestra was directed by S. M. Berg, who also had arranged the musical setting. All of the well-planned arrangements were supervised by Mr. Lesser and his aid, E. M. Asher. The projection was a feature of the showing, being under the skilled eye of Will Smith of the Nicholas Power Company. There was but one stop, and that momentary, in the ten reels.

Among those present were Daniel Frohman, Louis Joseph Vance, Ellis Parker Butler, H. W. Savage, Marguerite Wycherly, Florenz Ziegfeld, Jr., Harry Jordan, Hugh Ford, Acton Davies, John F. Miller, M. H. Mark, Mitchell Mark, James Montgomery Flagg, B. A. Rolfe, Frank McKee, Charles Dana Gibson, William L. Sherry, H. R. Raver, Jesse Lynch Williams, William Fox, Cyrus Townsend Brady, Miss Elsie De Wolfe, B. S. Moss, Gilbert Hamilton and William Harris.

"The Ne'er Do Well" soon will be given a Broadway run.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of February 14 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" at the Strand.

CHARLOTTE WALKER was seen at the Strand theater last week in a picturization of her stage success, "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," from John Fox's famous story, produced by Jesse L. Lasky. The photoplay has to do with the love of a young Internal Revenue officer, who is hunting for moonshine whiskey stills in the remote mountain section of Virgina. There he meets "June," the daughter of old Judd Toliver, head of the moonshiners. The two young people fall in love and the young officer wins over the Toliver family. In the cast supporting Miss Walker were Theodore Roberts, Thomas Meighan, Earl Fox, Park Jones and other members of the Lasky organization. "Climbing Mount Matterhorn," the Topical Review, a new series of Parisian and American Fashions in colors, and a comedy feature were on the program. The vocal soloists were Grace Hoffman, soprano, and Bruce Weyman, baritone.

Triangle Program at the Knickerbocker.

Lillian Gish was seen on the screen at the Knickerbocker theater in the title role of "Daphne and the Pirate," sharing honors with Elliott Dexter as her co-star. A spectacular romance of the seas, involving a battle in mid-ocean, the production is the latest work of the Triangle Fine Arts Company, and deals with the days when pirate crews roamed the seas and the black flag and its skull and cross bones were raised to terrorize ships bound on peaceful errands. The story is laid in the seventeenth century, when Louisiana was a French colony. The action takes place in the Green Forest of France and among the crude cabins of the settlers in America, with some stirring scenes on the intervening ocean. Concert features and a typical Keystone comedy completed the program.

"Nearly a King" at the Broadway.

"Nearly a King," which was written especially for John Barrymore, was the attraction at the Broadway theater. This five-part comedy drama is the latest release of the Famous Players Film Co., on the Paramount program, and gives Mr. Barrymore a wide field for the display of his unique comedy ability. The story embraces every phase of the playwright's art, from farce to melodrama, and is filled with rapid-fire action, the star playing two roles throughout the production. The usual weekly events, colored scenics, "Just Gold," a one-part drama, and a cartoon, "Charlie the Animal Trainer," round out the bill.

LUCILLE STEWART, NEW VITAGRAPH PLAYER.

An important announcement in the world of motion pictures is the selection of Miss Lucille Stewart as the new leading woman for Ralph W. Ince in the Brightwaters studio of the Vitagraph Company. She is at present working in a five-reeler written by James Oliver Curwood.

Miss Stewart was born at Sheepshead Bay, New York, and was well known locally as a choir singer, trained under the direction of Mrs. Mary Gunning, mother of Louise Gunning, comic opera star. She appeared in amateur theatricals and later entered vaudeville. After working in several other companies, Miss Stewart entered the employ of the Vitagraph and was sent to the British West Indies under the direction of Henri St. Lupe. Her best work up to the present time is as the society woman in "The Sins of the Mothers."

In the new production which Ince is filming, Miss Stewart's gowns will be not an inconsiderable attraction. Supporting her in the cast are Huntley Gordon and John Robertson.

PICTURE EQUIPMENT FOR BRONX Y. M. C. A.

The Picture Theater Equipment Co. have just installed a Power's 6B moving picture machine, complete, in the Bronx Union Y. M. C. A., at 161st street and Washington avenue, Bronx, N. Y. (City). A special screen was also erected and a most perfect outfit supplied.

"The Screen and the Novelist"

As Seen by George Bronson Howard, Who Is Writing the Stories for Kalem's Big New Series, "The Social Pirates."

"THE screen is a necessity to the modern author," says George Bronson Howard, the prominent novelist and playwright, who is writing the stories for "The Social Pirate," Kalem's forthcoming series, starring Marin Sais and Ollie Kirkby. "He can no longer afford to neglect the motion picture as an important field for his labors. It is necessary both as an outlet for his surplus energy and as a means of bringing him sufficient return to allow him to attempt more ambitious but less speedily profitable efforts.

"The novel, of course, offers the greatest field for the literary worker who is striving to meet high ideals," he declares, "but no novelist can depend upon his novels exclusively. If his novels are worthy, he will starve to death while preparing them as they should be prepared. Thus the novelist must use his ingenuity and art in an allied craft. It is for the particular worker to find his own allied craft, the one to which he is best suited and to which he can give the best that is in him. I will frankly confess that I turned librettist in order to gain more leisure to write the things I wanted to write. Likewise, the short story has proven the life-saver of many a novelist who is ambitious.

"I have spent considerable time," he says, "in analyzing the photoplay with the view of writing expressly for the screen. The adaptation is all right in its way, but to the creator, the story-teller, there is something amiss in a story told through a medium for which it was not intended. It is perhaps a sin of omission rather than of commission. Perhaps there is nothing wrong with the adapted photoplay, but how much better is the story that had its birth and development in the mind of the author with the screen and its possibilities in mind.

"That is one of the strongest reasons for the pleasure I am getting out of writing 'The Social Pirates' for Kalem. From the very inception of the theme for the series, the stories have been built for the screen. To that extent the two clever young women who carry the title 'Social Pirates' are children of the screen, and their lives are full of the exciting adventure and incident that picture audiences delight in. But throughout the stories, which portray the exploits of two fascinating heart-breakers in wreaking justice on unscrupulous men, I have endeavored to weave a thread of satire which I believe will be a welcome relief to the more tense moments.

"I am trying to include a slice of life in each episode," he declares. "The clever ruses and swindles that I saw during my reporting days and in the Orient are furnishing ample material. Were I desirous of posing as a reformer I believe I could almost stand on 'The Social Pirates' as an expose of the refined and sharp-witted tricksters who pick only the very wealthy and seemingly sophisticated for their prey. But my main purpose is to tell a story, and while 'The Social Pirates' will serve its end as a means of shedding light on many shady practices it is the story that interests me mostly. I can assure you that I am more anxious to see the stories as they work out on the screen than any avid follower of the photoplay could possibly be. I have visualized my characters so thoroughly that I am confident my manuscripts give the director just the ideas I wish to convey."

MANHEIMER MOVES.

E. S. Manheimer, proprietor of The Film Exchange, has moved his offices from 39th street to the new building at 48th street and Seventh avenue, New York.

ANOTHER BATCH OF UNFOUNDED RUMORS.

The rumor factory was unusually busy last week, turning out motion picture canards. Particularly interesting was the statement that the Lubin Manufacturing Company had sold to Thomas F. Ryan. Almost as much so was the statement that the Triangle Film Corporation had "gone bust." Both statements were quickly denied by all parties interested or supposed to be. This leaves the rumor mongers back where they started.

CHAPLIN'S PRICE.

Charlie Chaplin has been in town for the past few weeks, waiting for the lightning to strike him. He has several high potential wires out and only such connections as are of high voltage need apply. One line is labeled $10,000 per week, $100,000 in advance and an interest in the company. Charlie is surely bidding for real money.

Olive Trevor Joins Gaumont

AN ADDITION to the Gaumont forces at Jacksonville, Fla., that further strengthens the company is the acquisition of Miss Olive Trevor, an artist's model and dancer. She will make her first Gaumont appearance in "The Haunted Manor," playing the part of a model who endeavors to win the love of the artist for whom she is posing.

Miss Trevor was born in New Orleans, her vivacity and charm being inherited from her French mother, and her dramatic ability and poise from her father, Judge Trevor, who is of American and English descent. After attending the fashionable Ward-Belmot school at Nashville, Miss Trevor visited on the Pacific Coast, where she secured her first dramatic experience. This was in a stock company at San Francisco. Later she joined the Balboa Motion Picture Company, where she played for almost a year.

Olive Trevor.

An engagement in vaudeville followed the Balboa season, but the lure of the screen was too strong to be resisted. Miss Trevor returned to the studio, going with the Universal Company. She also posed for leading New York artists and sculptors. It is interesting to note that Supervising Director Garrick was so struck with a picture he saw of her in the studio of a New York painter that he immediately made inquiries which finally resulted in Miss Trevor going to Jacksonville. Director Edwin Middleton held up the scenes in "The Haunted House" in which the model appears until Miss Trevor could reach Jacksonville.

RAVER TO HANDLE OCEAN FILMS.

ARRANGEMENTS have just been perfected whereby the Raver Film Corporation takes over the exploitation of all films produced by the Ocean Film Corporation. These consist of "Life Without Soul," an unusual drama founded on the famous story; "Frankenstein;" "The Fortunate Youth," by Wm. J. Locke, and a photo-revival of the famous old play, "Driftwood," with Marshall Farnum, and other successes now in preparation.

The Raver-Thomas productions, including "The Other Girl," with James J. Corbett and Paul Gilmore; "The Hoosier Doctor," with Digby Bell; "The Witching Hour," "Alabama," "The Ranger," "As a Man Thinks," "The Embassy Ball," "The Harvest Moon," "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots," "Oliver Goldsmith," and other Augustus Thomas successes are to be distributed in conjunction with Ocean productions to the same buyers in each territory.

The sales departments of the Ocean company have been discontinued and removed to Harry R. Raver's offices in the World's Tower Building.

When approached, regarding the possibility of a definite combination of the Raver and Ocean companies, as indicated by the amalgamation of selling forces, Mr. Raver would make no statement for publication other than to say that the present arrangement was satisfactory to both firms and that no statements regarding the future would seem advisable at this time. He did admit, however, that big interests were working out certain plans involving a large investment and that for the present both the Raver and Ocean companies would continue production as separate organizations.

Exhibition Wins

The Knickerbocker Theater, Under the New Management of S. L. Rothapfel, Shows Miraculous Improvement.

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE most interesting man in all this world is the man who practices what he preaches. He indeed is interesting enough to be a curiosity. He is worthy of a biography at any time.

The man whose picture accompanies this brief description of a splendid work belongs in the enviable category of "The Doers." Recently he came back to New York after a trip through the country which was devoted to meeting exhibitors and talking with and to them about the "Art of Exhibition." By a curious coincidence, he was, not long after his return, asked to take charge of a theater which had, in spite of good opportunities, failed to measure up to expectations. At once he put into practice those ideas and maxims of exhibition which he had expounded with so much enthusiasm on his missionary tour. The field of his activities was the Knickerbocker theater. No need to indulge in post mortems here; suffice it to say that "Dr." Rothapfel was called in as an expert and a specialist. No detailed diagnosis of the patient is necessary under the circumstances.

S. L. Rothapfel.

The first thing Rothapfel did with the Knickerbocker was to give it a thorough overhauling and cleaning. Two carloads of dirt and rubbish were carried off before the actual work of upbuilding was begun. Next appeared a trained staff.

Trained Staff a Necessity.

"That," said Rothapfel with a sigh, "is the successful manager's first and hardest task, the training of a good, competent staff, which will give him actual co-operation. I want my staff to obey my instructions in the spirit, not merely follow the letter. Can you realize what this means? The spirit of the staff is more than 50 per cent. of the atmosphere. My employees are trained to regard the public as their master. There are no successful theaters where the contrary spirit prevails and where the patrons must always hazard a rebuff when they ask a question. No beetle-browed doorman with a cultivated Bowery slang will ever work in any theater which I am asked to manage."

Rothapfel's words were borne out by the appearance and the demeanor of the ushers. Their uniforms were neat and elegant and they were worn by boys who were proud of them. Every boy was on his job, alert and obliging. His language was respectful. I am willing to bet there was not one cigarette fiend among them. The house manager carried a well-bred air. He was energetic, but not at all obtrusive. His appearance inspired respect—not a small matter in a theater where so much depends on appearances and first impressions. The same spirit of courtesy prevailed on the upper and the lower floor and in and about Mr. Rothapfel's private offices. I have never known a busier manager and I have never known one who is more accessible. The way is smoothed for you if you have anything to say to him. Your chance to say it comes quickly and whoever you are you will be heard kindly and patiently. Employes are far more apt to follow their employer's instructions, to absorb his spirit and to give him their fullest loyalty when they see him act as he speaks. His rule of uniform courtesy is observed most scrupulously by Rothapfel himself.

Decorations, lighting effects and above all things the settings on the modern motion picture stage make up the rest of the atmosphere. Soft lights, suggesting welcome warmth and subdued colors, lights with amber effects, are parts of the Rothapfel system of exhibition and, though the facilities at the Knickerbocker are limited, these soft lights contribute their share toward the genial and comfortable and inviting atmosphere. The setting of the stage is impressively beautiful and flatters every good and cultivated taste. Its general aspect suggests the exterior of an ancient temple, there are two fine periscopic side views, one to the right and one to the left; the raised platform in the center affords an excellent setting for the musical performers.

"Music Means Life."

The greatest change in this resurrected theater has come over the spirit and the performances of the orchestra. We have no longer any painful musical renditions of Young's Ode to Melancholy (or it may be the Anatomy of Melancholy.)

"Great heavens," said Rothapfel in his explosive sincerity, "music means life. The orchestra is there to charm the audience, of course, but the first thing necessary is to wake them up. Let them know there is music in the house; the drooling dirges may be all right for a first-class Chinese theater, but a place which caters to live Americans wants plenty of live music."

No Success Without Variety.

With all these improvements I doubt whether the success, which is now assured beyond all cavil, would have been possible but for Mr. Rothapfel's radical departure in the arrangement and treatment of his program. To offer the public a film program produced by one man or by one and the same group of men is to invite disaster. Both here and abroad two of our greatest and most successful film producers have lost hundreds of thousands of dollars in trying this experiment. Along with hundreds of others I was therefore greatly surprised to see the Knickerbocker theater open with nothing but one kind of films. Let us, for the sake of argument, admit that these particular films are the best, it does not by any means follow that the public will pay for a program consisting of only such films. When in addition to the lack of variety you get a program consisting of features never less than three reels in length you simply rebel. It's a cardinal principle in the show world that you cannot make any money out of rebellious patrons. Can you, Mr. Exhibitor, imagine a big first-class house without an animated weekly? There is at least one theater on Broadway whose life might have been prolonged by animated weeklies and other varieties. The Knickerbocker started blithely without such a weekly, without a short scenic, without any single reels, which are so needful by way of relief, without any cartoon, without anything but dirges played to three long features. It simply could not be done. When Rothapfel took hold he still retained Triangle as the piece de resistance, the really nourishing course of the feast, but he added a lot of appetizers and what a dear friend of mine referred to as "Horse Doovers." He brightened the screen with color. He added musical numbers. He varies and innovates every week. He keeps the guest guessing as to the next course.

Brazil Seeks Closer Trade Relations

Intends to Send to the United States Commission Representative of Its Commerce and Industry.

THE Brazilian Government is planning the organization of a commission representing its commerce and industry, which some time during the present year will visit the United States in the interests of closer trade relations between the two countries. A preliminary report sets forth as the chief aims of such a commission the desirability of putting before American capitalists the opportunities for investment in Brazil and the development of a larger volume in exchange of products.

The commission will consist of a president, two vice-presidents, a secretary and eight commissioners. The members will be representative of agriculture and cattle raising, manufacturing industries, exporting and importing, and railways and banking. It is also intended to include on the board experts in tariff and commercial legislation. After a period of preparatory study in Argentine the commission will spend from thirty to sixty days in the United States.

GARSON GETS "THE NE'ER-DO-WELL" FOR MICH.

Harry I. Garson, of the Broadway Feature Film Co., Detroit, Mich., has just closed a deal with Sol. L. Lesser, for the rights on "The Ne'er-Do-Well" for the State of Michigan. It is reported that the price was $15,000,

Mr. Garson also controls the Broadway Strand Theater, Detroit, Mich., in which theater the production will have its premier for Michigan, after which the picture will be handled as a road show. Mr. Garson only handles the larger productions, and is at the present time exploiting "The Battle Cry of Peace," which production he controls in the State of Michigan.

Horsley for Congress

Pioneer Will Make Race in Los Angeles Congressional District and Has Wide Support.

DAVID HORSLEY, one of the pioneers who have become pillars of the motion picture industry, is about to be nominated for Congress by the citizens of the Congressional District in which the city of Los Angeles is situated. At this writing no details are at hand to show on what ticket Mr. Horsley will make the race.

Advices from the coast are to the effect that the support of Mr. Horsley will be strong and wide. It is remembered that Mr. Horsley took a very conspicuous share in combating the prejudice and hostility with which the first moving picture men were met on the spot which today has become their paradise. In the course of this work Mr. Horsley displayed a splendid civic spirit and showed a most pronounced aptitude for public affairs. He indeed became part of the civic life of what may be called the motion picture center of the United States and his persistent "booming" of the city of Los Angeles and the wonderful California climate made him very popular with everybody including the native sons. His saying that the motion picture men came to California to bring their forces and their studios and that they asked nothing in return but the sunshine of California is often quoted by his hosts of friends. If at this day the prominent men of Los Angeles and Southern California are motion picture advocates, not to say enthusiasts, Mr. Horsley has had something to do with the change of heart. At present Mr. Horsley is chairman of the reception committee of the Los Angeles Board of Trade. In the course of the last year Mr. Horsley has entertained Vice-President Marshall, U. S. Senators, Congressmen and Governors of various States, and has in a tactful and very effective way made these prominent people acquainted not alone with his own studio, but with the whole motion picture colony. In this way he has not only gained their good will, but has given them a lot of valuable information which they could never have obtained otherwise. Mr. Horsley has been in the forefront in the fight against local censorship in Los Angeles.

Mr. Horsley has all of the qualifications requisite for success in public life and no man in or out of Congress has a firmer grasp on motion picture conditions than he has. He is an able and fluent speaker as he has shown on many occasions to the delight of all who heard him. He also has the rare gift of humor and has it in a marked degree. It makes no great demand on the imagination to picture Mr. Horsley as the successful and dependable champion of the motion picture interests on the floor of the lower house of Congress.

New Era in State Right Features

STATE RIGHT feature films failed, as a business proposition, under the old plan, is the belief of Agnes Egan Cobb, because the idea was based upon a purely speculative foundation. The element of money was predominant, irrespective of intrinsic quality. You put down so much money, made a big picture and then asked people to buy it simply because it was a big and costly thing. You didn't consider whether the exhibitor and the public wanted the picture. You erred in the conclusion that money could replace experience, judgment, taste and demand. Quality, not money, gets people to the box office.

Agnes Egan Cobb.

Claridge Films, Inc., has been formed to place the state right feature film business on a sound and logical basis. One of the most experienced film buyers in the world, Mrs. Agnes Egan Cobb, is the vice-president and general manager of the new company, which has a financial backing and the active co-operation of several experienced film men.

For seven years Mrs. Cobb has been buying and distributing film, and is perhaps in as good position as anybody to gauge the needs of exhibitors and the public.

Ernest Maupain

ERNEST MAUPAIN, who has been one of Essanay's leading character actors for the past year, is now taking part of heavy lead in the five-act feature, "The Discard," written by Charles Michelson and released through the V-L-S-E. He plays opposite Virginia Hammond, the Frohman star, who takes the leading feminine role.

Ernest Maupain.

Mr. Maupain is exceptionally well adapted to the part, that of a leader of international swindlers, inasmuch as many of the scenes take place in Paris where Mr. Maupain was born and reared. He is thoroughly familiar with every phase of Parisian life.

He is an actor of rare talent and had many years of stage experience both abroad and in America before he joined Essanay. For several years he was leading man with Sarah Bernhardt. He is a man of massive appearance, being six feet tall and having the chest and shoulders of a Fitzsimmons. Volatile and emotional, he is a natural born actor. His physical strength lends grace to his work and his long experience has given him perfect poise and consummate skill in finished acting.

Mr. Maupain first appeared with Essanay in "The White Sister," playing with Viola Allen. He later appeared in "The Man Trail," "In the Palace of the King," "The Raven," "Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines" and "Vultures of Society," and many others. In all these he played important character roles and now makes his appearance as lead.

He is an expert painter and sculptor and has done some remarkable work in bas-relief.

CHARLES E. SCHNEIDER COMES TO NEW YORK.

Charles E. Schneider, of Springfield, Mass., and New Haven, Conn., who operates one of the largest supply houses in the east, will engage in the same business at 145 West Forty-fifth street, New York, trading under the name of the Schneider Moving Picture Machine and Supply House. Mr. Schneider is one of the oldest operators in the country and is an honorary life member of the Operators' Local Unions, I. A. T. S. E., both in Springfield and New York.

MONTGOMERY RUNNING BRIDGEPORT STRAND.

F. T. Montgomery, the moving picture man, has formed a partnership and taken a long lease on the Strand theater at Bridgeport, Conn. According to reports, the New Strand has taken on new life under Montgomery's management and is rapidly becoming the popular house of that city. Mutual Masterpictures are being featured with good music and the highest class of patronage is being received.

RAVER SECURES OFFICIAL AUSTRIAN WAR FILMS

The first consignment of official Austrian War films, secured by Harry R. Raver through arrangement with the Austrian government, has just reached the Raver Film Corporation's New York office and is now being edited and arranged for an early showing. A second consignment of twenty-five thousand feet of negative is due to arrive about April first. These films are delivered into Mr. Raver's hands by a special messenger, whose permits and passports are inscribed with a list of scenes shown in the pictures, together with such official documents as will remove any doubt regarding the authenticity of the films.

The fact that these are really the first comprehensive collection of Austrian war pictures ever brought to this country should make them popular at this time. A special showing will be arranged shortly and exclusive territory sold on the first series, each buyer being given an option on subsequent issues.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

NEW YORK EXHIBITORS, GET READY.

Only One More Call for the Great Rally Which Is to Take Place in Albany, March 1 and 2.

THE Moving Picture World printed in full the text of the proposed censorship bill in the State of New York. If you have not read it go back to your files and see what confronts you. The features of this bill are so bad and leave you so entirely without any remedy or appeal that even the strict advocates of a regulation of motion pictures condemn it without qualification. On Sunday night this iniquitous bill was the subject of a discussion of liberal-minded ministers in the Church of the Messiah in this city. Everybody present condemned it.

How about you, the man most directly affected by it? Can you afford to stand back? There is no state where the exhibitors are more powerful than in New York. That was shown plainly enough last fall when the organized exhibitors helped to bury the reactionary state constitution by such a record majority. Remember this rally at Albany, March 1 and 2 has been called by exhibitors and will be held purely in the interest of the exhibitor. By exhibitors and for exhibitors is the guiding motto. Look in this week's issue of The Moving Picture World for full details regarding program of the meeting. The man who is going to speak on Exhibitors' Grievances, Mr. Louis Blumenthal, is a young, energetic, though very modest man, who started at the bottom of the ladder and who worked himself up by just hard work and clean, honest methods.

He wants to hear from his fellow-exhibitors on the question of grievances and proposed remedies. Write to him care of New York Exhibitors' League, 110 West 40th street, and help along the good cause of organization with some suggestions and ideas of your own. Write and show your interest.

National President Herrington has just written in and promises to be present at the convention. Whether your theater is a small neighborhood house in the suburbs or whether you own a theater right on the main thoroughfare or whether you have a string of theaters, you ought to be at this great meeting March 1 and 2, at the Hotel Ten Eyck, in the City of Albany. Your presence is needed. The legislators will be impressed by a strong convention of motion picture men. The Moving Picture World is doing all in its power to make the meeting a success; you must help by coming. Make your arrangements now.

JERSEY EXHIBITORS ACTIVE.

Two Sunday Opening Bills Introduced at Trenton—Censorship Strongly Opposed.

A WELL attended and very interesting meeting of the Hudson County, N. J., Exhibitors took place last Thursday, February 10, at the offices of Frederick C. Henn, attorney for the organization, in the Spingarn Building, Jersey City. Assemblyman H. Kuhlke of West Hoboken, who had introduced a censorship and a Sunday opening bill in the New Jersey Legislature, appeared before the meeting in response to a request. Mr. Kuhlke said that he favored censorship mainly as an opening to get the support of the church people for the Sunday measure. He spoke in defense of the censorship bill, which he said had been modeled upon the present censorship law in Pennsylvania. Chairman Hespe of the Exhibitors' League called upon W. Stephen Bush of the Moving Picture World, to act as spokesman for the exhibitors in a reply to the arguments of Mr. Kuhlke. Mr. Bush spoke at some length, citing many reasons why censorship was opposed by almost the entire motion picture industry.

After a short reply by Mr. Kuhlke it was decided to introduce two bills in Trenton, to bring about Sunday opening. One bill is a straight repealer, the other is an amendment to the present Sunday law, allowing a local referendum on the Sunday question in each county of the state. These bills were both introduced on Monday, February 14. A committee of Hudson County and Essex County exhibitors was appointed to go to Trenton and be present at the introduction of the bills.

The exhibitors of Hudson County have agreed to organize Union and Camden counties, while the exhibitors of Essex County will organize Atlantic and Bergen counties. Among the men who attended the session at Trenton were Dr. H. Charles Hespe, Messrs. Moody and Higgins, Messrs. Jacobs and Putnam, A. Crawford, G. A. Robinson and the attorneys La Vecchia and Frederick C. Henn.

The next meeting of the Hudson County exhibitors will take place on Thursday, February 17, at the Orpheum theater in Jersey City, at 11 P. M.

TALKING CENSORSHIP IN DETROIT.

Exhibitors Are Divided on the Question of Necessity of Censoring Pictures.

AT a largely attended meeting held Monday afternoon, February 7, the Detroit Motion Picture Exhibitors' League went into a vigorous discussion of censorship from all angles. As noted in this column some time ago, Mayor Oscar B. Marx in his annual address to the common council right after the holidays, urged that the board of estimates allow an appropriation to permit the Recreation Commission to establish a censorship committee. Having the support of the Mayor, the members of the council, the board of estimates and the Recreation Commission, the exhibitors will have to do some excellent work to get the appropriation "killed" this spring. It means that the exhibitors must exert their strongest influence and gather up all the anti-censorship facts to present to these various bodies and thus endeavor to convince them that censorship would be unreasonable, unfair, and un-American.

Not all of the Detroit exhibitors are in opposition to censorship. John H. Kunsky and George Trendle, of T[he] John H. Kunsky, Inc., controling a chain of eight theaters in Detroit, favor censorship on the grounds that it would eliminate immoral, obscene and suggestive pictures—something that the high-class producers do not turn out.

A. J. Gilligham, however, takes another view of censorship. He believes that the National Board of Censorship should be sufficient judge of pictures, as it comprises some of the most intellectual men and women in the country.

EDUCATIONAL CAMPAIGN ON.

Cleveland Exhibitors Carrying on Crusade for "Better Films" —Meetings Well Attended.

THE educational campaign of Cleveland picture theater owners and the "better films" crusade of the half a hundred organizations in the Federation of Women's Clubs, are still in the forefront of public interest here.

The Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League with headquarters in Cleveland, is seeking to convince the public in general and the club women in particular of the failure of censorship laws and to call their attention to the good photoplays condemned by the censors and the weak plays passed by the same body.

To this end the exhibitors have arranged a series of public lectures on the motion picture business, coupled with weekly exhibitions in the screening room of the General Film Company, for the benefit of the club women.

The club women are holding meetings of their own members with noted speakers on the motion picture question and are urging the exhibitors to present for experimental purposes, "model" programs selected by the club women.

Wednesday afternoon, February 9, more than 200 of the club women, were the guests of B. J. Sawyer, president, and C. A. Megown, special representative of the Exhibitors' League, at private exhibition in the screening room of the General Film Company, 1022 Superior avenue. Mr. Sawyer delivered a lecture on censorship, urging a broader view of the photoplay program problem. The club women were then shown four Edison photoplays, which the speaker de-cleared were not only highly moral and educational, but had been shown many times without comment. These films were "Gladiola," "The Way Back," "The Stoning," and "Niagara Falls."

"Think over these pictures for a time," Sawyer urged. "Do not attempt to form your opinions too quickly. Do not imitate the state board of censors, but give serious thought to any objection you have to pictures of this high character. Then at a joint conference, we can see where we agree and where we disagree."

Miss Bertelle M. Lyttle, chairman of the civics committee of the Federation of Women's Clubs, declared there was no doubt of the educational value of the Niagara Falls picture, but expressed doubt as to whether the film would hold the interest of persons who had not seen the falls in reality. "The necessity of combining a thread of plot, a semblance of a story, with view pictures, is quite apparent, however," Miss Lyttle declared.

The next exhibition arranged for the club women will be at Mr. Sawyer's theater, The Manhattan, Superior avenue and East 105th street. At that time, the club women will be asked to present their ideas and act as censors on the films the exhibitors will show. A majority of film manufacturers have written to assure the Cleveland exhibitors that they will co-operate in the plan to have special releases for pictures of interest to children.

Throng Expected at Joint Ball

Screeners and Exhibitors Planning for Big Affair at Madison Square Garden, February 19.

THE costume and civic ball at Madison Square Garden under the joint auspices of the Screen Club and the Motion Picture Exhibitors League will be held on the evening of Saturday, February 19. Governor Whitman is expected to be present, if state business will permit. The grand march starts at 11 o'clock. Music will be furnished by the Twenty-second Regiment Band. Practically every eastern film manufacturer will be represented. There will be present a large number of screen players, many of them in costume.

One of the big drawing cards the committee is banking on is Charles Chaplin, who has been making a visit in New York. Mr. Chaplin has assured the committee that if he is in the city on the evening of the ball, and a week before the appointed date he fully believed he would be in the city on that day, he will certainly attend and join in the festivities.

Tickets, one dollar each, are on sale at the Screen Club, 165 West Forty-seventh street, and at the Exhibitors League offices, Room 403, 110 West Fortieth street, as well as at the various motion picture theaters. Box seats in the balcony are $5 each. Following the grand march each manufacturer will be alloted a stated time in which to stage any surprise he may have for the entertainment of the throng.

Reservations are being received by the committee from various cities, Boston having asked for 100, Baltimore and Washington 250, and Chicago 100. Tom Howard will be master of ceremonies, George W. Lederer and William McKenna, organizers of the grand march, and Billy Quirk, president of the Screeners, announcer. Isaac Hartstall and King Baggot will be joint chairmen of the floor committee. The reception committee will contain a hundred representative men of the industry.

Every indication points to an affair unique in the history of the trade or in New York City either, for that matter.

ARRANGING FOR MINNEAPOLIS CONVENTION.

Plans are already under way for the next convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest, which will take place in Minneapolis next May. A meeting of the executive board last Monday, started things off enthusiastically and from now on, the board promises to be very active in working up a successful convention and promoting harmony among the members of the association.

HERRINGTON TO SPEAK AT ALTOONA, PA.

Fred J. Herrington, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, has accepted an invitation to address the Chamber of Commerce at Altoona, Pa., on March 9. Mr. Herrington's theme will be "The Growth of the Motion Picture and Newspaper, and Its Effect Upon the Community." As Mr. Herrington is now carrying everywhere his forceful arguments against censorship and its evils, it is taken for granted that he will have something important to say on that subject.

HERRINGTON BUSY OUT WEST.

The Moving Picture World has received a letter from National President Frederick J. Herrington, stating that a very successful meeting of exhibitors was held in Kansas City. From Kansas City Mr. Herrington will go at once to Oklahoma, where an exhibitors' meeting and exposition of great importance is being held. Great preparations have been made for a welcome to the National President. Mr. Herrington says he will positively be in New York City to attend the great ball on February 19.

BAYONNE EXHIBITORS FALL INTO LINE.

The eight exhibitors of Bayonne, N. J., under the leadership of Charles Mason, the owner of several houses, will all join the newly formed branch of the National League in Hudson County, N. J. Mr. Mason was among those who went to Trenton to be present at the time the Sunday opening bills were introduced.

Bradford Returns from Southern Visit

Gaumont General Manager Spent Month with His Companies at Jacksonville, Florida.

AFTER a month spent at the Jacksonville, Fla., winter studios, F. G. Bradford, general manager of the Gaumont Company in America, has returned to New York. Mr. Bradford reports that the Gaumont companies are all busy making five-reel features for release as Mutual Masterpictures. During his visit the companies have been strengthened by additional players. Before returning to New York he was able to see three new productions in work.

"The work in Jacksonville was so interesting that I hated to come north," said Mr. Bradford at the Flushing studio of the Gaumont Company in discussing the activities of Gaumont stock companies in the south. "I consider one of the most enjoyable events of my visit to be the witnessing of the filming of the final scenes of 'The Dead Alive.' Since this is the first Gaumont release in which Miss Marguerite Courtot is starred, naturally, I took a great interest in the production. Both the photoplay and Miss Courtot have lived up to expectations in every way. When it is seen on the screen, February 21, I am sure that our faith in Miss Courtot as one of America's really great film stars will be more than justified. The excellent work she has done in the past has been exceeded. Perhaps her strength has been brought out by the sympathetic direction she has received.

"While I was at the Jacksonville studios Miss Mildred Gregory began 'According to Law' under the direction of Richard Garrick. Howard Hall was brought especially from New York to play opposite her. On the way north I have talked with exhibitors in several towns, and outlined to them the story of 'According to Law.' They became as enthusiastic over it as I am myself. I think that we have a feature that will answer those objectors who maintain that photoplays do not make people think. Certainly, the story of a wife who is cold to her husband, wrapped up in society, not caring for children, presents a problem that is deserving of national thought. If motion pictures are to serve any good purpose, are to help in the discussion and settlement of great moral questions, then 'According to Law' will be of great good in addition to telling a story that holds attention from the unusual opening devised by the authors to the final scene.

"Another photoplay which I saw started was 'The Haunted Manor.' Here is a production that certainly will maintain the Gaumont prestige. It has a number of scenes in East India at the court of a wealthy rajah. Edwin Middleton, who directs it as his first Mutual Masterpicture, not only has studied the life thoroughly, but he is being aided by the head of a band of East Indians who are wintering with a circus near the studio. From the circus elephants, lions and tigers have been secured, and with these as local color the spectator will certainly not be able to complain that he is not seeing India as it really is.

"Miss Iva Shepard, who received unmeasured praise from critics who saw her in 'The Drifter,' is starred in this five-reel feature. She appears as an American adventuress with whom the rajah is infatuated. The scene ultimately shifts to America. For these scenes the players go to St. Augustine for settings amid the fashionable surroundings of the winter colony.

"On the way north I stopped in several towns just to talk to exhibitors. I am happy to say that what I heard about the Gaumont five-reel productions made me more positive than ever that it was a wise move for us to enter this field."

Chicago News Letter

By JAS. S. McQUADE.

A Case of the Tail Wagging the Bull.

FROM an advertisement that appeared in the Chicago Evening Post on Friday, February 11, in connection with the promotion of a plan to build a circuit of photoplay theaters in fifty of the largest cities of the country, along de luxe lines, the following paragraphs are taken:

It is not the manufacturers of films or the exchanges handling them who will reap the big rewards of the future in the motion picture business, but the exhibitors who will show how to give the public the very best in photoplay attractions under the finest conditions and in the most attractive surroundings.

The completing of this circuit will be the biggest and best thing the film industry has ever experienced. It will improve the character and standard of the photoplays, because this powerful circuit of high-class theaters will be in position to dictate the future of the motion picture industry, and as the ideals of the gentlemen behind this project are of the highest, this means that the film producers will have to keep on bettering their product to meet the demands of these exhibitors.

Such a circuit will also enable the management of this company to make most advantageous terms with film manufacturers who will be eager to gain the prestige of having their films exhibited in these theaters.

The directors realize that the day of the small photoplay house is over. They will build, lease or operate only large, magnificently equipped theaters, seating from 2,500 to 4,500 people, which means that they will gather the best of the motion picture patronage.

Most of the capital for this enormous enterprise has already been subscribed by some of the strongest financial interests in Chicago, but a limited parcel of the stock is still available in small blocks.

"The biggest and best thing" to be "experienced" in the film industry includes dictation to the producers of films by "this powerful circuit of high-class theaters," managed by officials who are tyros in the business. These men who are only on the threshold of knowledge and experience in the great exhibiting department of the business "realize that the day of the small photoplay houses is over." And they care not. But the film producers who have struggled for over twenty years in building this great business do not forget that the small theaters made the business what it is today. Nor do they intend to forget.

Like the poor, the small moving picture theater, of a higher type, will always be with us; and if this "powerful Circuit" is content to gather only "the best of the motion picture patronage" and let the devil take the gatherings that remain, the small picture theaters will step in and put the devil to rout.

Have these men, who so arrogantly talk of dictation to film producers, ever considered the possibility that the latter have it in their power to outbuild them in the rearing of a greater and more powerful circuit, with unlimited subscribed capital? They will not need to sell stock to the small investor either, as in the case under consideration.

The tail cannot wag the bull.

The Moving Picture and the Child.

On Tuesday, February 8, in an address before the members of the Council of Parent-Teacher Associations, in this city, Dr. Wm. S. Sadler spoke in part on the topic, "The Moving Picture and the Child," as follows:

"The 'movies' exhibit pictures illustrating all the infringements of conventional life. The child is forced early to form a decision, and the parent must now explain all matters regarding the social conventions before the child is 9 or 10 years old. The 'movie' is going to compel adequate instruction in sex hygiene by parents. We have got to keep pace with our children.

"It is unhygienic to take a child to the 'movies' immediately after a meal unless the picture is a quiet, easy, unemotional one. Even mental arithmetic is bad after a meal. One of these new serials, these thrillers, will paralyze the digestion. Anger at the villain and emotion for the heroine is a severe experience, especially for a nervous child.

"The 'movie' is a factor in modern civilization just as much as architecture, and we must make an early adjustment to it. As a destroyer of monotony, it is worth all the millions that it is costing.

"'Movies' are the greatest single unifying influence in family life because they are cheap and the entire family can go.

"They bring out early neurasthenia. We should preserve the neurotic child from shock, as the world's greatest work is being done by neurasthenics.

"No one has any right racially or fundamentally to censor moving pictures any more than they have to censor the literature I read or the food I eat. It's the audience that needs censoring. In time we will see lined up in the 'movie' streets theaters for the young, the old, the unmarried, those old enough to be married, for mixed audiences, for orphans and for neurotics. You can order them a la carte. The thing for you women to do is create a standard for your children and the theaters that fall below it will have to go out of business.

"What we need in the 'movies' is something to produce fewer thrills and more moral fiber. It's better to take your family to a moving picture theater than to go and hang around a beer garden."

At the close of the meeting the organization passed resolutions urging every woman's organization to select films suitable for minors; to see that moving picture posters do not show improper pictures, and that every school shall furnish with the regular school work moving pictures relating to history, geography, civics and the drama, both for the entertainment and instruction of children.

Segregation of Colored People in a Moving Picture Theater Held Lawful.

G. M. Luttrell, owner and manager of the Majestic theater, Jacksonville, Ill., and president of the Illinois state branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, was the defendant in two cases brought against him by the Rev. Dr. Scruggs, on behalf of two minors, Grace and Gladys Mallory, colored girls, for damages, because of the segregation of colored patrons in his theater.

When Mr. Luttrell was in the city at the meeting of the National Executive Committee of the M. P. E. L. of America, held early in January last, he informed me of the matter, and I requested him to send me particulars of the suits. He did so early this month, and I embody them in this article for the benefit of exhibitors generally.

On the 8th day of May, 1915, Grace Mallory and Gladys Mallory entered the moving picture theater of Green M. Luttrell in Jacksonville, Illinois, paid for tickets and took seats in the section reserved for white persons. They were requested three times to take seats in the section reserved for the colored people, but declined, and finally the proprietor was proceeding to compel them to take seats in the section reserved for the colored people, when they asked for the return of their money, saying that they would leave the theater. Their money was refunded, and they voluntarily left.

They afterward brought suit by one of the pastors of the colored churches in Jacksonville, the Rev. Dr. Scruggs, as their next friend, against Green M. Luttrell, the owner of the theater, for damages, for not allowing them to retain the seats they had selected in the section reserved for white people. The suit was heard before J. M. Coons, a Justice of the Peace of Jacksonville, both cases being tried before the justice without a jury, the defendant being represented by Judge M. T. Layman. The justice found the defendant not guilty, and both cases were appealed by the plaintiffs to the Circuit Court of Morgan County.

At the November term, 1915, the case of Grace Mallory was tried in the Circuit Court before Judge Norman L. Jones and a jury, the defendant being represented by Judge M. T. Layman and Attorney W. T. Wilson. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendant, and after the return of the verdict the case of Gladys Mallory was dismissed on the motion of the plaintiff.

In the case tried in the Circuit Court before a jury the plaintiff entered a motion for a new trial, which was overruled by the court and judgment entered on the verdict in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiff took orders for an appeal to the Appellate Court. The time for perfecting the appeal expired some time ago, and no further proceedings have been taken in either case.

The case attracted considerable attention among the citizens of Jacksonville and of the surrounding country, of both races.

Remarkable Film Showing Testimony and Findings of the Illinois Senate Vice Commission.

An International News Service dispatch from Washington, D. C., dated February 10, conveyed the news that the last scenes in a moving picture depicting the testimony and findings of the Illinois Senate Vice Commission were made on that date, in Washington, with Vice-President Marshall, Speaker Champ Clark and Representatives Dyer, Kitchin and Mann as actors.

The picture, which is yet to be named, will consist of ten reels and cost $100,000 to produce. In its remarkable cast are Governor Dunne of Illinois, Mayor Thompson of Chicago and scores of other notables.

Beginning with a scene of the Illinois State Senate in session—the first time, it is said, a moving picture has ever been made of a legislative body actually engaged in deliberation—the picture tells the reasons underlying the creation of the vice commission.

The Washington incident which brought the moving picture operators here was the visit, in 1913, of the vice commission, when it pointed out that the "red light" district in the nation's capital was as vicious as any city's tenderloin in the country. Thursday's actors went through the parts they played in 1913, when they closed the district and drove the undesirables out of Washington.

Chicago Film Brevities.

"The Dumb Girl of Portici," Universal's big production, featuring the celebrated Pavlowa, which had its premiere at the Colonial Sunday evening, January 30, has been showing to fine audiences afternoons and evenings ever since. The engagement at the Colonial has been prolonged for one more week, closing Saturday, February 19.

Joseph Trinz, of Lubliner & Trinz, this city, recently leased the South Shore theater, 6851 Stony Island avenue, Chicago. This theater seats 1,000 people, and an admission of 10 cents is charged for features of all makes. Martin Saxe, formerly manager of the Vitagraph and Biograph theaters on Lincoln avenue, is now manager of the South Shore theater and of the Paramount. Lubliner & Trinz now control the Biograph and Vitagraph, the Paramount, 2648 Milwaukee avenue; the Knickerbocker, Clark and Granville streets, and the South Shore house. Mr. Saxe stepped in to see us the other day and subscribed for the World. He reported fine business on the entire circuit.

C. F. Hately, personal representative of President Aitken of the Triangle Film Corporation, with offices in the Otis Building, this city, tells me that the Colonial theater has been leased for one year by Triangle, for the exclusive use of Triangle programs. The first presentation will be given at the Colonial Sunday, February 27, with Samuel L. Rothapfel in charge. Mr. Rothapfel arrived in the city Tuesday, February 8, and left for New York Thursday, February 10, after arranging for new stage scenery, new projection machines, new interior illumination and decoration, and also for the illumination in front of the house. He will return Tuesday, February 15.

Harry Weis, manager of the Chicago Metro office, informs this office that on the week ending Saturday, February 5, 138 theaters out of 646 in the city of Chicago were showing Metro pictures on a regular yearly contract. The salesforce in Chicago, which was completely reorganized on January 1, includes W. E. Weinschenker and Wm. Weis. To save time, automobile service is used in city work, and Harry Weis' Metro car is a familiar sight in front of the theaters using Metro service.

J. S. Skirboll, district manager of the Metro Pictures Service, has returned to Pittsburgh, after visiting the offices of the firm in Chicago, Kansas City, Des Moines and St. Louis. Mr. Skirboll reported excellent business and stated that the Chicago office now holds second place on the list of all the Metro offices. It is now a race between the Chicago and the New York offices for first place, and the prospects that Chicago will take the lead are said to be very promising.

Theodore W. Komarek, owner of the Michigan rights to F. O. Nielsen's "Guarding Old Glory," called one day last week. He reported very good business in his territory. He stated that "Guarding Old Glory" was shown at the Post theater in Battle Creek for three days, and booked for a return date. Tibbet's Opera House, in Cold Water, showed the pictures for two days, and also booked a return date. The admission at both houses was 10 and 25 cents. For advertising purposes, Mr. Komarek uses a Deagan Unafon with a pianist in a Ford machine, in which the streets of every city throughout the state are canvassed. On the top of the machine is a battleship float, which has proven a great business getter. Mr. Komarek visited Chicago to close with F. O. Nielsen for the rights to "Guarding Old Glory" for the states of Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin. His headquarters are at 1532 West 18th street, Chicago.

Booth Tarkington, well-known author and playwright, witnessed the opening of his latest play, "The Ohio Lady," at the Blackstone, Monday night, February 7. Speaking of moving pictures to a newspaper representative during the final rehearsal of the play, he said: "Moving pictures are destined to become even greater than most people realize. Eventually there will be just as great authors of moving pictures as there have been of books and plays."

George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay Film Mfg. Company, has purchased the stock of that company held by G. M. Anderson, former secretary. Mr. Anderson has gained world-wide fame as the creator and impersonator of Broncho Billy and has been with the company since it was organized. It is not known at this writing what the future plans of Mr. Anderson will be.

Fred B. Smith, of New York, at one time a secretary of the International Y. M. C. A., was the chief speaker at the Sunday Evening Club, Orchestra Hall, on Sunday evening, February 6. During his lecture, entitled "America's Greatest Sin," Mr. Smith made the following fling at moving picture entertainment: "I am no ascetic, but I do not think there has been such a craze for cheap fun in any nation or time since the day when they reclined on ivory couches and the silver bells of Rome called the world to revelry. God pity the younger generation growing up in homes where even the older folks have surrendered themselves to be fools at 10 cents per night. There is a new man in preparation somewhere tonight to rule Chicago. I can tell you he isn't in the moving picture shows. More than likely he is out on some farm in Wisconsin, Iowa or Illinois, and as he does the chores he is saying, 'Oh, if I only could get to Chicago!' He has a vision and he will rule the city in fifteen or twenty years, while the rest of you native Chicagoans hold the bag." Mark, the older folks are called "fools." Did not the Great Master say that he who called his brother a fool was in danger of hell fire? At the close of his lecture Mr. Smith praised the Sunday Evening Club "for its poise, open mind, wide range and sympathy." We are sorry that he cannot be included among the members of the club on his own showing.

THE CENSORSHIP QUESTION.

Ordinance Still in the Hands of the City Attorney—Producers Meet and Elect Permanent Officers.

THE new ordinance as recommended by the Public Welfare Committee is still in the hands of the city attorney. A flood of letters from citizens urging not only the abolition of the present censor board but elimination of all forms of local censorship has been received at the city hall during the week past.

The Betkouski-Wheeler revised ordinance proposing to give the local film commissioner authority to overrule the National Censor Board appears every bit as objectionable as the old board of censors. Perhaps such an arrangement would be even worse. It certainly is not good policy to give one single man the power of five. And furthermore, this single commissioner would be guided in his actions by the police commission and the city council.

It is the same old dog with a different name, or as one of the local papers says in an editorial "that which we call a rose, by any other name would smell as sweet." The city of Los Angeles needs no board of censors, or a single censor, no matter what he may be called. The police power of the community is perfectly ample to suppress any improper motion picture as well as it would any indecent play, book or photograph exhibited to the public.

As mentioned in these columns last week, Mayor Sebastian may ask the Council to submit the question of abolishing the Board of Motion Picture Censors to the voters at the June election.

In that case it is up to the motion picture people to see that this and all other objectionable motion picture ordinances are voted down. This should be comparatively easy if the fifteen thousand or more photoplayers and studio employees get in line and induce all their relatives and friends to vote for the protection and mutual interests of their industry.

The Motion Picture Producers' Association held a meeting Wednesday, last week, and Tuesday, this week. On Wednesday articles of incorporation were filed in the county clerk's office and signed by twenty-five of the leading motion picture producers of Southern California.

According to this document, the organization is a non-profit, co-operative association and is organized "for the promotion of the welfare of the individual producer and for the advancement of motion picture interests."

The twenty-one incorporators are Jesse L. Lasky, David Horsley, H. M. Horkheimer, Oscar C. Appel, Frank E. Woods, Mack Sennett, Frank A. Garbutt, Henry N. Lehrman, H. O. Davis, P. D. Gold, Jr., Thomas A. Persons, Lee Dougherty, H. O. Stechhan, Fred Kley, Norman Manning, D. W. Griffith, George W. Stout, H. L. Ken, Thomas H. Ince, J. H. Blackwood, J. A. Barry, D. Whiting, Lloyd Wright, W. Woodson Wallace, C. E. Millikan.

On Tuesday this week (February 8) the Motion Picture Producers' Association met again at the Hotel Alexandria and elected permanent officers: H. O. Davis, director general at Universal City was elected permanent president of the organization; Thomas Ince, first vice-president; D. W. Griffith, second vice-president; David Horsley, third vice-president; Frank Garbutt, treasurer, and George W. Stout, secretary.

The campaign against censorship will be vigorously carried on by the producers. Griffith, Sennett and Ince are already preparing screen editorials for their coming releases. The first Fine Arts film to carry a censorship editorial is "Daphne and the Pirate," the Lillian Gish play, and the announcement reads:

"We have no wish to offend with indecencies or obscenities, but we demand as a right the liberty to show the dark side of the wrong, that we may illustrate the bright side of virtue, the same liberty that is conceded to the art of the written word, the art to which we owe the Bible and the works of Shakespeare."

EL DORADO FEATURE FILM COMPANY.

The First Production, "The Impersonation," a Five-Reel Photodrama, Featuring Neva Gerber.

The El Dorado Feature Film Company is the name of the latest film producing concern in our vicinity. Bruce F. Bundy, the famous golf player, is the organizer and financial manager of this company.

The managing director is Harris L. Forbes, who was five years with Charles Frohman and stage manager for eight years with Henry B. Harris. When Mr. Harris met an untimely death on the Titanic in the spring of 1912, Mr. Forbes went to California and became interested in the film industry. He was first connected with the Universal Film Mfg. Company as technical director, and later with Kinemacolor, American and Kalem.

The first release of the El Dorado Feature Film Company is "The Impersonation," a five-reel photodrama featuring Neva Gerber, who is ably supported by Lamar Johnstone, Rex Downs, May Cruze, Harry Ogden and Rena Carlton.

The European war has been used as a background for this picture. Miss Gerber plays the role of a Western girl who is studying abroad when the great conflict breaks out. In the filming of this feature Director Forbes was fortunate in securing the use of the Cumnock Academy of Los Angeles which is an exact replica of Shakespeare's home at Stratford-on-Avon. In addition to the use of the academy the graduating class of 1914, comprising the daughters of many wealthy southern California families, played prominent parts in the scenes.

The studios of the El Dorado Feature Film Company are located in Pasadena, Cal., but companies will be sent to various parts of the country to secure the correct atmosphere for the plays and novels which the new film concern are to produce. Noted stars will be featured in all of their productions. The present executive offices of the El Dorado Feature Film Company are located at 40 West Mountain street, Pasadena, Cal.

PASADENA EXHIBITORS ORGANIZE

For Protection of Mutual Interests and to Combat Needless Censorship.

Pasadena exhibitors have formed an organization for the protection of their mutual interests and with the purpose in view to combat any needless censoring of pictures. The first meeting was held Saturday, January 29th, at the Savoy theater. In the meantime the Pasadena Parent-Teachers Federation has been busy with a three weeks' moving picture investigation and a committee has inspected all motion pictures shown in the city. That this action was taken by initiative of the local board of censors was denied by Dr. F. M. Taylor, chairman of the board.

"I have made no addresses before Pasadena Parent-Teacher Associations on this subject," said Dr. Taylor. "However, I accepted a long time ago an invitation from the McKinley Parent-Teacher Association to speak at a meeting on Wednesday, February 9, and when I do speak, I expect to speak plainly. I think it is a good thing for the Parent-Teacher Associations to look over the pictures if they feel so inclined. Certainly they are much interested. Children go to picture shows more than their parents do. However, I only know of the work of the Federation committees inspecting motion pictures through the fact that I was asked questions on the subject on one or two occasions by those in charge."

"RAMONA" FILM GIVEN PREMIER.

The W. H. Clune Production of Helen Hunt Jackson's Story Shown for the First Time in Los Angeles.

On the evening of Monday, February 7, the Clune Auditorium theater was packed to the doors with interested picture producers and fans, to see the first presentation of "Ramona," the novel of early California, written by Helen Hunt Jackson, and produced by Donald Crisp for the Clune firm.

The production is an original and new departure from the regular pictures. It is termed a "cinema-theatrical" presentation of the story. It is totally different. As a film the production is quite remarkable. As a theatrical piece it is even more so, the combination of the two working out in a pleasing manner for the spectator.

The first flash was the short explanation of the cause for the writing of the original story. This was followed by the prologue, and then the first theatrical touches came in. Slowly the dark stage was changed from apparent night, to dawn, and the towering Santa Barbara mission was seen in dim and purple outline against the reddening sky. Natives emerged from the church and met others coming by. The scene was silent and impressive. Daylight came, and with it the songs of the happy people. Then the waning day and night, still and quietly thrilling. Real mission bells were used here. The prologue showed the first Ramona, and was full of interesting scenes. After this came the second theatrical part, the home of Ramona. The presentation was a good deal the same, only the residents of the place sang the morning song and there was more action. Each setting was an exact replica of the one used in the picture, and the illusion was rather startling. The film story then followed and it is indeed a great story, showing the hand of a master at the commanding place, and another master at the camera. Some of the most beautiful scenes imaginable were shown, and the sheep ranch especially was beautiful. The third theatrical part was the heart of a monster canyon in the mountains. Here the lighting and color effects were wonderful. The action throughout the piece was good, and nowhere did anyone watching seem to lose any interest.

INCE'S MEN IN DANGER.

Two of Ince's well-known men came very near to death this week and escaped serious injury in the floods which made hundreds homeless when the Otay dam broke. The story was related by Howard Hickman, the actor, and Otis Gove, a camera man, upon their return to Inceville from the stricken district. Hickman accompanied Gove to the Southern territory in the capacity of director, for the camera man was sent to obtain some marine scenes in the harbor. Having photographed what they wanted the men started back in Hickman's machine. But instead of heading straight for Los Angeles they made a detour to the southeast and found themselves almost in the heart of the flooded section. Had they left San Diego a day sooner it is not unlikely that they would have been swallowed by the waters.

UNIVERSAL CITY TO ENTERTAIN KNIGHTS TEMPLAR.

Big Program Arranged for the Thousands of Guests, Who Will Visit the Picture Principality in June.

Among the many associations, lodges, organizations, etc., that will meet in Los Angeles this season are the Knights Templar, and their official program of entertainment for the thirty-third Triennial Conclave of the Grand Encampment which is to be held in Los Angeles in June next, provides for a day at Universal City.

The Knights attending this conclave, which promises to be the most important gathering ever held in Southern California, will number from six thousand to seven thousand, and they and their ladies will be lavishly entertained during their week in the southern metropolis.

On the morning of Friday, June 23, the midsummer floral and allegorical pageant, "La Fiesta de Los Flores," will take place. It is promised that this will be the most gorgeous floral parade ever given in Los Angeles, so long famous for its beautiful floral pageants. The visiting Knights will invade Universal City that afternoon, where a special program of entertainment will be provided by the management.

The official program contains the following announcement: "2.30 P. M.—Universal City. Entirely devoted to the manufacture of the world's greatest motion picture films; $3,000,000 plant. A visit to this unique city is the desire of every tourist, and this afternoon will be set apart for tne benefit of visiting Sir Knights and their ladies."

The arrangements for Universal City Day were made with Vice-President and General Manager H. O. Davis of the Universal Film Company by Motley H. Flint, chairman of the executive committee and one of the leading Knights Templar in Southern California.

INCE ACTORS IN AUTO SMASH.

While driving to Los Angeles from Inceville this week, George Fisher, the NYMP juvenile actor, and Franklin Ritchie, had a bad accident in Ritchie's big speedster. They intercepted a street car and got the worst of it, the car being thrown eighty feet and smashed. The two men had a miraculous escape by falling from the car just as it was hit. Fisher says he was dazed and remembers sitting up and rubbing his head and he was told afterwards that someone asked him how he was and that he answered, "I'll have a cup of coffee please!" Neither was badly injured but Ritchie is mourning his car and depleted bank account, and thinks that he will be more careful in his driving when he gets his car from the auto hospital.

THE GOAT OF GIBLYN.

Our friend, Charles Giblyn, old time actor, star, director, producer and all around good fellow, has a perfectly good goat, but it is lost.

His surname has been misspelled so often that it has become a nuisance and we are herewith correcting the error for all times.

The last straw was added last week when a publication ran this:

GIBLIN, NOT GIBLETS!

Charles Giblin, the Inceville director, wants it understood that he knows his name is an unusual one, and he would be ever so much obliged to the scribes if they would be good enough to keep it to Giblin and NOT Giblets. There have been two slips this way in the last few weeks. He says it sounds like an operation and he is really perfectly sound.

And the funny part of it is that he spells it G-i-b-l-y-n—and not G-i-b-l-i-n!

AVIATING KALEMITES WRECKED.

"All is not gold that glitters," and "all is not safe that flitters," is what Ham says, and he knows for during the war burlesque, "Ham Agrees With Sherman," just completed, many incidents that will amuse the picture-loving public were secured at great risk. Toward the finish of the picture Ham and Bud found it necessary to make an aeroplane flight. The machine secured was of the monoplane type and had never carried more than one passenger. However, the comedians took their places beside the aviator who was forced to crouch down out of sight. All went well with the flight until they were about to land. The aviator had been instructed to fly down to within twenty feet of the camera to gain a desired effect, and when directly above the camera one of the wires snapped and the monoplane dashed to earth. Fortunately Harry Thorpe, cameraman, jumped aside in time to avoid serious accident. Ham and Bud were badly shaken up, but Le Grone, who suffered severe injuries to both legs, took the accident philosophically, remarking, "It's all in the game."

And now aeroplanes are quite common at the Kalem Studios, for even after the accident Miss Helen Gibson refuses to discontinue her lessons in flying. In a picture soon to be produced she is called upon to make a flight, and not wishing to be doubled has been for the past two weeks receiving lessons from Le Grone in driving a plane. Miss Gibson is now able to take the machine along the ground, and has risen to a height of fifty feet. She is an expert automobile driver and this doubtless has served her well in her present schooling.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

W. Comrie Scott, the British Isles representative of the "Flying A" and managing director of the American Ltd. of London, England, arrived last week at Santa Barbara for a short visit. Mr. Scott came with President S. S. Hutchison from Chicago. He is the only London stockholder in the American. Mr. Scott declares that "Flying A" pictures are great favorites in England.

The American has experienced a great growth in London. The entire concern was, up to a few months ago, housed on Wardour street, but since the photographic end of the business took on great strides, a plant has been erected in Croyden, county of Surrey, twelve miles from London. Croyden is, however, not a suburb, as it is the seventh city in England, with a population of more than a million. The sales office is still maintained on Wardour street.

Mr. Scott stated that they had just closed a big deal with one of the largest distributing agencies on the British Isles which has contracted to take on several prints of "The Diamond from the Sky," and the showing of this great serial will be started there in the immediate future. A representative of this concern was in Chicago a short time ago, coming for the special purpose of seeing this serial and it was on his recommendation that the deal was closed.

Mr. Scott reports that the American has very good contracts with Russia, Spain, Scandinavia and some of the countries not involved in the war.

Mr. Scott will thoroughly familiarize himself with all that relates to the American operations in Santa Barbara, and when he returns to London he will be able to talk about the players and the delightful surroundings in which they are working.

The advantages of Southern California climate to the motion picture industry, in official figures, were recounted yesterday at the regular luncheon of the Rotary Club in the Alexandria by Dr. Ford A. Carpenter, local forecaster of the United States Weather Bureau. He said:

"The maximum sunlight falls on a very limited area, in which lie New Mexico, most of Arizona and Nevada, a small part of Utah and about half of California. In Southern California the desert has been reclaimed to a greater degree than is elsewhere known in the world.

"Our least sunshine (63 per cent.) is in May; our maximum in August (79 per cent.). December and July sunshine are nearly equal. Such conditions are ideal for motion pictures."

The Monrovia Feature Film Company of Monrovia, Cal., is making arrangements to build a plant to cost, we are informed, $200,000. Amusement park with zoo, swimming pool, picnic grounds, moving picture stage, 500 by 100 feet, glass studio, etc., are part of the proposed equipment which will be laid out along the same plans as Universal City. Admission fee of twenty-five cents will be charged to visitors and an additional fee for bathing. The present officers of the Monrovia Feature Film Company are R. M. Francisco, president; C. D. Holmes, vice-president; G. B. Holmes, secretary and treasurer. The above with E. L. Grafton constitute the board of directors; another director is yet to be selected.

Governor Hiram T. Johnson of California, accompanied by his wife and Mr. and Mrs. Reid, were recently entertained by Producer Griffith at his Fine Arts studio. Governor Johnson and his party were escorted through the plant by Mr. Griffith, Production Manager Frank E. Woods, and G. W. Bitzer, chief photographer.

The party watched a scene in which Director Dillon was staging De Wolf Hopper, Fay Tincher and Chester Withey, and last, but not least, "Leo," the ferociously tame nine-year-old lion of the Fine Arts Zoo. Leo, Bennie Zeidman tells us, evidently realized that it was his duty to perform for the Governor, so he loosened one of the sides of his cage and gently strolled up to the California executive, who in turn patted the king of the forest on his head.

The magnitude of the studio amazed Governor Johnson and his party, who were under the impression that it did not necessitate such a large studio as occupied by Mr. Griffith to produce spectacular photoplays.

De Wolf Hopper has started rehearsing on his third Triangle play which is called "The Philanthropist," and was written by Chester Withey of the Fine Arts scenario staff. The play will be staged by Edward Dillon, who directed Hopper in "Don Quixote" and "Sunshine Dad." Fay Tincher will play the female lead with Chester Withey, Director Dillon, Margaret Marsh and Max Davidson in the supporting cast.

F. M. Pierson is the latest addition to the scenario staff of the Fine Arts Film Company. Mr. Pierson's first Fine Arts play is "Betty of Greystone," with Dorothy Gish, Owen Moore and George Fawcett in the cast.

Director Lloyd Ingraham is nearing completion on the production of "Hoodoo Ann," and is preparing for rehearsals on "The Little Apache" from a scenario by Grant Carpenter. Mae Marsh and Robert Harron, who played the leads in "Hoodo Ann," will portray the star parts in "The Little Apache."

Jacques Jaccard and his company of players left Universal City this week on an auto trip to the Santa Barbara Mission, where they are to make the concluding scenes in "The Wedding Guest," a film adaptation from Lucia Chamberlain's fiction story. The leading roles in this production are played by Harry Carey, Olive Fuller Golden, Peggy Coudray and William Gettinger.

The Universal Film Mfg. Company has secured the rights of a new device conceived and patented by Ridley F. Taylor and W. W. Wheatley, both of Long Beach, Cal.

The device is for the filming of cartoons and the players are mannikins, which can perform the most remarkable stunts. The inventors have been working on the perfecting of this device for over a year, in fact ever since the plant at Universal City was started. Taylor was at that time construction engineer at the big picture plant and his association with the film men at that time suggested the possibilities of the mannikins.

To facilitate the making of Western dramas, a Western town, complete in every detail is being constructed at Universal City. The town will be built along the foot of the hill that overlooks the valley and on this hill are to be constructed several oil well derricks and other head structures and several mine shafts and tunnels. The town is being built especially for the use of the Jaccard Company, which is engaged in the making of Western productions exclusively.

Juanita Hansen, of the Keystone Company, has been critically ill with an attack of appendicitis for the past two weeks. Her life was several times despaired of, but skillful nursing and constant attendance by physicians pulled her through.

Baron Erik von Ritzau of the Fine Arts Film Company became the happy father of a bouncing baby boy this week. The baron and the baroness, formerly Elizabeth Pauling, are popular members of the local film colony.

"Powder" is one of the latest features produced by the American Film Mfg. Company at Santa Barbara. It's a war drama with several really sensational battle scenes. Arthur Maude and Constance Crawley play the leading parts.

A photoplayer in the City Council during the next administration, we learn, is the political ambition of local screen players.

At a meeting held in Hollywood this week with Dustin Farnum, DeWolf Hopper, Tully Marshall, Tyrone Power and Hal Wilson playing the roles of campaign organizers, it was decided to finance a political campaign to place a representative of the film profession in the City Council.

One of the organizers stated that with a registration of sixteen thousand moving picture people in this city, a large number of them being taxpayers, they feel that they should have a word in the making of the city ordinances when questions concerning the moving picture industry are brought up.

Each studio in the city is expected to send a representative to a meeting to be held in Hollywood within two weeks.

Hobart Bosworth is to star in a new U feature entitled "The Way of the World." The film is an adaptation of Clyde Fitch's play, and will be directed by Lloyd Carleton.

Somebody told us that Ruth Roland and a young woman belonging to the screen profession were "pinched" in Long Beach, this week, for greatly exceeding the speed limit. Ruth had to come across with five dollars in bail to appear in court on February 6. My, my, how reckless we are getting to be!

Another testimonial to the educational value of motion pictures was filed with the City Council this week in a petition from the board of directors of St. Vincent's College, asking permission to show pictures without the restrictions in the existing ordinance. The amendment suggested is to provide that established educational institutions under the management or control of a board of directors or other responsible bodies, may exhibit motion pictures in the manner now permitted in auditoriums and school buildings under authority or direction of the Board of Education. The request has been referred to the Public Welfare Committee for consideration.

At the completion of "To Have and To Hold," the Lasky feature in which Mae Murray is being starred, Director Melford will at once begin rehearsals for the production of "The Race," with Victor Moore and Anita King in the principal roles. The story of "The Race" is founded on Miss King's trans-continental trip.

James Young, the latest addition to the Lasky force of directors, will begin work on the filming of the famous Belasco play, "Sweet Kitty Bellairs," in which Mae Murray will play the title role.

World-Equitable Program

Fifteen Stars, Actual Personalities from Broadway Triumphs Appearing in Dual Program.

FIFTEEN stars of the speaking stage and screen, actual stars in every sense of the word, direct from their own starring vehicles on Broadway and proven material, owing to their success in former screen effects, punctuate the World-Equitable releasing units during the last two weeks in February and the first two weeks next month.

February 14, the Equitable will offer, for the first time on that program, Carlye Blackwell in Samuel Hopkins Adams' vivid and popular novel, "The Clarion," in which Marion Dentler and a special cast of players appear in support. On the same date World Film will present Frances Nelson in "Love's Crucible," a tale highly consistent with its title. Miss Nelson was last seen in "The Family Cupboard," and "The Dollar Mark," and earned stardom through serious, sincere work.

February 21, Marguerite Leslie, recent star opposite Sir Henry Irving; Cyril Maude and other of the stage's greatest lights, will debut in filmdom in "The Question," Roy L. McCardell's unusual tale, and which was produced for Equitable by Harry Handworth. The World will offer, at the same time, Molly King, the dainty star of the Winter Garden, Ziegfeld's Follies, and other stage triumphs, in "A Woman's Power," distinctly different from anything that has gone before it and a desirable contrast to "The Question."

February 28 will see the noted character delineator, George Beban, in his most impressive play, "The Pawn of Fate," and Mary Boland in "The Price of Happiness," for World and Equitable respectively.

This is Beban's first screen work since his successful appearance at the Astor theater in conjunction with "The Alien," which as a special release, measured up to any dramatic production of the time. Mary Boland completed "The Price of Happiness" after appearing in one of Triangle's sensational plays. Both Beban and Miss Boland add lustre and quality to any program and are but incidents in the new World-Equitable policy of commercializing their products.

On March 6, Charles Cherry, recently seen in a Famous Players feature, will be seen in C. Haddon Chamber's virile story, "Passers By," while World Film will send broadcast on the same date, the noted British beauty and famed stage player, Kitty Gordon, in a play of supreme potency, "As In a Looking Glass." This is Mr. Cherry's first appearance in so powerful a document and Miss Gordon's first appearance on any screen. The week of March 6 is, indeed, an eventful date in regard to the introduction of stellar material in bigger pictures.

On March 13, World Film will offer Robert Warwick in "To Him That Hath," which is now in the final stages of production and which will afford Mr. Warwick ample opportunity to display his versatile talents, while Equitable will release "Man and His Angel," a Triumph feature in which Jane Grey and Henri Bergman will co-star. Miss Grey recently starred in a Triangle production and Mr. Bergman was the principal in one of Metro's pictures.

Week of March 20 will see Holbrook Blinn in "The Unpardonable Sin," from the World Film studios and Frank Sheridan in a picturesque, red-blooded story, "The Struggle." "The Unpardonable Sin" is of the society type, while "The Struggle" is just what its name implies. Another demonstration of the new World-Equitable policy.

March 27, Gail Kane, recently so favorably seen in the Equitable production, "The Labyrinth," will be seen in a most unusual visualization of one of the real novelty tales of the western world, "Her God," which has been in the making for three months and of which the Equitable forces are most optimistic. World Film will offer on the same day, Edwin August in "The Social Highwayman," a contrasting fictional vehicle, now being directed by the star himself. Mr. August recently staged "The Yellow Passport" with Clara Kimball Young.

The first week in April, the final week of World-Equitable's quarter, will be characterized by World with the release of House Peter's first production of the dual program "The Hand of Peril," produced under direction of Maurice Tourneur, while Equitable will end the period with the offering of a tremendous triple triumph, "The Chain Invisible," which will afford the debut of three noted personalities to Equitable and World. Frank Powell, creator of "A Fool There Was," directed "The Chain Invisible." Bruce McRae, one of the most popular of stage stars, plays the leading role, and Richard Le Gallienne, internationally famous author and poet, originated the story. In addition to the trio of personalities, Roy L. McCardell scenarioized the tale.

V-L-S-E Program Service

Big Four Will Book One-Reel Subjects Independent of Features.

With the first release next week of a one-reel comedy through the V-L-S-E, together with the regular releases of the Hearst-Vitagraph News Pictorial, which is being put out through this organization, it is now possible for an exhibitor to get from the Big Four complete program service.

That the release of short subjects by the Vitagraph Company through the V-L-S-E is simply the beginning of other releases of a similar nature to be made by the other producing members of this combination is a report prevalent throughout the trade.

The first of the comedy releases will feature Frank Daniels. This will be followed by comedies featuring Sidney Drew, and reissues of Vitagraph's most popular comedies featuring John Bunny. This order will be maintained in succeeding weeks.

These comedies are to be sold absolutely independent of regular features of the V-L-S-E. In other words, an exhibitor can book any or all of these comedies, regardless of whether he is using the V-L-S-E features or not. This policy differs from that which has usually been pursued by other distributing companies which handle both features and short subjects, the one generally having been used to promote the other.

MORE "GRAFT."

General Manager Joe Brandt of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company has announced that in accordance with the desire of exhibitors throughout the country, who have been recording the greatest success in the history of motion picture serials since showing "Graft," this popular series-serial will be lengthened four extra installments, making the complete serial twenty installments instead of sixteen, as originally intended.

Helen Receives a Present

"Black Beauty" Abandons Sawdust Arena to Share Perils of Railroad Pictures With Helen Gibson.

THE joys of the free street parade and the noisy circus band are no more for "Black Beauty." That famous steed of the sawdust circle is the latest "star" to be lured to the motion picture fold. With or without his consent, "Black Beauty" will spend the remainder of his days in the silent drama, for Kalem has purchased him from the Robinson Brothers Show and signed him to a life contract to support Helen Gibson in "The Hazards of Helen."

The problem of finding the right horse to use in the "Hazards" in which Helen Gibson will be seen in both railroad and equestrian feats was a difficult one because of the necessity of finding an animal who would not become uncontrollable when brought too close to speeding railroad trains. Many had been tried unsuccessfully when Helen Gibson learned that "Black Beauty," who had been her mount when she was the daring star of the Miller Brothers 101 Ranch Show, was wintering with the Robinson Brothers Show in California. Negotiations were quickly completed, though it is said that "Black Beauty's" purchase price would make a satisfactory one-year contract for many a famous screen star.

"Black Beauty" will make his screen debut in "A Race for Life," a one reel "Hazard of Helen" scheduled for release Saturday, March 11. In this episode Helen Gibson, in bewitching riding togs, is displaying her ability as a horsewoman on the bucking "Black Beauty" when she learns that a runaway engine is carrying its helpless engineer to certain death at the Mojave River, where the bridge has been swept away by the floods. With Robyn Adair, Helen takes a perilous short-cut over hill and dale, jumping many obstacles, and reaches a point in the tracks at the time the engine does. Running a breath-catching race for a few seconds, the two riders are about to be outdistanced by the engine when Helen swings to the horse mounted by Adair, and standing on the latter's shoulders, grasps the edge of the engine and swings aboard. The engine is brought to a stop on the brink of the river bank. Incidentally, this "Hazard" gives picture followers their first glimpse of the havoc wrought by the recent floods around Los Angeles.

ANITA STEWART STARTS WORK WITH S. RANKIN DREW.

The announcement that Anita Stewart, one of the most popular photoplayers in the world, has signed a new contract with the Vitagraph Company of America, for an indefinite period, sets at rest the various rumors that she will pose for some other producing company. Despite offers from several sources that proved attractive from a financial standpoint, Miss Stewart declined to leave the company which gave her the first start up the ladder of film fame.

In declining the many offers, however, Miss Stewart voiced the appreciation and thanks she felt for the offers, but her personal interest in the Vitagraph has proven greater than money considerations. Big plans are being made for Anita. She has resumed work at the home studios in Flatbush and will appear in productions under the direction of S. Rankin Drew, specially written for her.

Jay Hunt With Universal

IF IT is true that it takes a man of many parts to make a successful producer of motion pictures, perhaps that answers the question as to the reason back of Jay Hunt's undoubted success in the field of motion pictures. For, of all the present members of the Universal's Pacific Coast producing staff, it is doubtful whether there is another producer whose training has been distributed over as wide a range as has that of this producer of everything from comedy to animal melodramas.

Jay Hunt.

Hunt was born in Philadelphia and it was in that city that he received his early education. Until he had passed man's estate, it had been his ambition to be admitted to the practice of law. He studied with this end in view, but about the time he was to be admited to the bar, he changed his mind and took up the study of art, for which he found he had unusual talent. He continued in this new pursuit until he proved the truth of the old adage that "art is long and life is fleeting," when he became interested in the stage. Thus far he seemed to be searching about, as most of us are doing, for a medium of expressing that subtle something that most people feel. In his choice of the stage, however, he appeared to be more fortunate than the average, for to few is it given that they find their proper niche in three trials.

His first work behind the footlights was in a minor part with John Drew in Philadelphia. From that time, his success seemed to be assured and it was not long before he was sharing dressing rooms with such men as Sothern, Otis Skinner, John Mason, Francis Wilson and others of their standing, and for a time he acted in the capacity of comedian and stage director for E. H. Sothern.

In June, 1910, Hunt was offered his first place in the silent drama. At that time, the Vitagraph company placed him in their New York studios as producer. He remained with that company until 1913, when he came west to Inceville, there to make pictures for the New York Motion Picture Co. Leaving the Santa Monica studios of that organization, he was for a short time producer for David Horsley in Los Angeles, where he directed the action of Crane Wilbur.

In the summer of 1915, he joined the Universal's producing staff at their west coast studios, where he was put in charge of the Murdock MacQuarrie company, directing the action of that character player. Later he was transferred to another of the Universal releases, where he began the making of animal productions. He is still serving in that capacity with Paul Bourgeois and Rex De Rosselli, handling the animals under his direction.

Thus far his productions in the motion picture field have been attended by unusual success, which reputation has followed him to the Universal ranks, where he is now regarded as one of the best producers on the staff.

BLUEBIRD MUSIC PROGRAMS.

With the Carl Fischer Music Co. a contract has been signed by General Manager M. H. Hoffman, of Bluebird Photoplays, whereby this standard music house will compile special music for all Bluebird releases. The worries of the orchestra leader or pianist will be nil when "Bluebird Day" arrives on the weekly schedule, for with each release will be shipped (on a slight rental basis) specially arranged or compiled music with parts enough to supply musicians to the number of thirty-five.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

AN OLD leech in new form is attacking the motion picture business in the guise of the wolf in sheep's clothing. This is found on all sides—for and against censorship, for and against the Constitution of the United States—but always upon the side of fat fees and other personal gains. The name of the leech is lawyer. He is the parasite of the business. He helps to make and helps to break contracts. He points to the avenue for the preservation of public morals and then defends those opposed to it. He advises the owner of the theater and lures the tenant; then he milks the tenant and lures the owner into further difficulties. He defends himself behind the professional cloak with no etiquette touching his scale of fees. As an ethic he is a wonder. As a parliamentarian he is supreme. He fits in on any old side, at any old time and always floats to the top. Look out for him. He is getting to be a little too much on the nine-foot line for the benefit of the motion picture business. We are told that the foundation of all law is common sense. It would seem that a campaign made upon that basis would result in at least as much good to the business as the present operations are bringing it. An eye should be kept upon the lawyers and their ambitions should be curbed.

The Thompson committee which is investigating the operation of corporation operations in Greater New York has found that everything which presents an "off color" has been inspired by legal advice. Lawyers have figured in the investigation as thick as fruit in a plum pudding. The prominence of the legal fraternity in laying the foundation for complaint and in putting obstacles in the way of reaching that foundation has become so pronounced that the daily press is filled with letters from citizens protesting against the legal fraternity. It is not at all surprising that the frame of the public mind has taken this shape. The legal fraternity has for some time been following a path that earns disrespect and suspicion instead of admiration. The average law student of today no longer aspires to the position which one versed in law is entitled to. His one aim is to learn enough to pass examination and be admitted to the bar. Legal practice is to him a second, third, or more remote thought. Sense of pride in his profession is lost in the ambition to become a power in politics, or get connected with something that will bring him quick and fat income. He generally starts out upon the theory that no man can be a good assemblyman unless he is a lawyer. From there he reaches out in all directions upon the broad principle that those who make laws must be lawyers. The laymen, to him, are a subsidiary species entirely subservient to the disciples of Blackstone.

To many this dissertation upon the legal fraternity may appear as wholly foreign to the motion picture business. But it is not. It has been provoked by what appears to be an uncalled for movement at Washington by certain members of the legal fraternity. Certain moving picture interests have placed their case in the hands of lawyers who, while posing as benefactors of the best interests of the moving picture business, have arrayed themselves against the oldest, most experienced and best qualified manufacturers, exchange men and exhibitors in the game. They have practically joined hands with the enemy. The one consoling thought is that they represent but an insignificant portion of the moving picture trade, and one of the chief aims of this lawyer bill is that if a commission for national censorship for motion pictures is established at least two members of it shall be lawyers. Do you get the gentle hint? It is quite natural to assume that should such a commission be created the one who draws up and successfully advocates the adoption of the bill will be among the first to be considered as an appointee and the interests with which he has so adroitly allied himself will probably name the second choice. It looks like "you tickle me and I will tickle you."

There is another point I wish to drive home. The lawyers bill is not a true moving picture measure. The lawyers who have prepared and presented it do not represent people who have the future of the moving picture business at heart. They are people who have been engaged for years in the old line theatrical business and they are in a position to grasp the first opportunity to jump back into it if the backbone of the moving picture business can be broken. They did not go into the latter business voluntarily. The competition of the photoplay forced them into it. They never will give up hope that "the legitimate will come back to its own." They know, as well as Dr. Crafts knows, that a bewildering maze of legislation and an unbearable burden of taxation can bring about such a result.

With the clergy crushing it on one side and the legal fraternity on the other what an up-hill fight common sense has! And yet the preamble to the constitution of the United States reads "We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice * * * promote general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and posterity, do ordain," etc.

Notwithstanding the bills they have pending at Washington provide that a branch of the commission on Federal censorship shall be established in New York the censorship fanatics of Brooklyn have induced Assemblyman Ahern of that borough to introduce at Albany a bill for the establishment of a New York State Board of Censorship. The national measure provides for the appointment of commissioners at salaries ranging from $7,500 to $8,000 per year. The New York measure calls for a board of three men at $5,000 per year, and to make the pap good the term of office is fixed at six years. This is nothing less than a bid for support of a nefarious measure. It proposes to impose an unwarranted additional tax upon the manufacturers and exhibitors of moving picture films, for they must bear the burden of fees which will be imposed to make the board self sustaining. It is another step in the effort to crush moving pictures out of existence. It must eventually, if made a law, destroy the only real amusement the common people have. It is a crime against them and devilish in design against those who created the amusement. Where taxes are imposed upon commodities the producers have the alternative of imposing the tax upon the common people by raising prices. The moving picture people have no alternative but to go out of business. Moving pictures are not food and clothing, and the common people can do without them if forced to do so. But let those who are forcing this issue take warning. Of one thing we are quite certain. There will be a new assemblyman from Ahearn's district after his term expires.

A man who is most prominent in financial affairs in this city, noted for his support of charitable institutions and his interest in religious work stated the other day that after reading the address made by Rev. D. Cyrus Townsend Brady at Washington against the proposed Federal censorship bills he was convinced that a conspiracy exists against the motion picture industry, "since reading the address," he said, "I have gone carefully into the matter. No sane man can fail to see that this agitation is at least discriminatory. I fail to see any merit in the movement because its development thus far has produced only a gigantic picture of political graft. This is amply shown by the multiplicity of censor boards throughout the country. When I first learned of the Federal censorship movement I was inclined to believe that the problem would be solved, but since I have learned that the local authorities propose to enforce their own laws as well. I must admit that the crusade is not one of good faith. I am opposed to anything that is not clean and wholesome and that takes in any action that smirks of political intrigue. It seems to me, and to many others with whom I have talked over the matter, that to amend the laws so as to make it criminal for any one to make, ship, sell, lease, convey or exhibit an indecent moving picture film should suffice. This certainly would end all discussion as to censorship and its constitutionality and the advocates for clean pictures would have a powerful weapon in their hands. No maker or handler of moving pictures would desire, or could afford, to be continually dragged into court. The people and the courts would become the censors and convictions in a few cases would purify the market more quickly than the combined efforts of all the censor boards. We cannot deny that moving pictures are a powerful factor in the amusement life of the common people and they would consider it a serious loss if deprived of it, which I believe will eventually follow if the censor advocates are not less drastic in their measures."

LANNING REJOINS UNIVERSAL.

Frank Lanning, one of the best known character actors in the Los Angeles photoplay colony, this week joined the Universal forces at their Pacific Coast studios, where he will continue to enact roles of the character lead type.

Spokes From the Hub

By Marion Howard.

THE Film Club met Sunday evening at the Brunswick with Gustave Frohman and Alice H. Grady as guests and speakers. It admitted new members including Earle Williams, Edith Storey and Edgar L. Davenport. The president gave a resume of her recent New York trip. Mr. Frohman was introduced as one of a family whose name spelled all that was excellent in the dramatic field. He talked (while seated) about woman's influence in molding matters relative to the betterment of the films and gave some statistics, declaring less than 5 per cent. of the films had educational value. He placed the blame on the managers who are indifferent, or who naturally think first of the box office, and who too often let others select their films, etc. He deplored the "punch" idea and declared that the better class pictures will prevail in the end. Mr. Frohman is erecting a two-story building here at 20 Winchester street and will be assisted in his endeavors by Mrs. Carter of New York City, who has done good work there in the cause of educational films. Miss Grady also spoke, as did Rufus Gillmore, author of "The Alster Case." He is residing in the Hub at present. Mrs. Florence LaP. Brackett, chairman of the inspection committee, gave a report of the films seen since last meeting and the president told of coming releases.

Theodore Roberts has made another hit as Pudd'nhead Wilson, and we liked it rather better than the speaking version so readily recalled for its entirely novel plot, through thumbprints, which caused undoing for the guilty. There was one thing, however, which spoiled the afternoon for me, and that was the unnecessary introduction of a hideous snake in a cabin scene. It had no place there, had nothing to do with the play and caused cold shivers to meander down my spine, and, no doubt, others were affected unpleasantly. Why snakes, anyhow?

"Who's Who in Society," presented by George Kleine at the Copley theater, was laughable and more, for it was a good detective story and, as in "The Alster Case," the real thief was unsuspected until the close of the play. It is a clever satire on the newly rich and capitally done by a well-balanced company. Kate Sergantson is the image of Lillian Lawrence, a Hub favorite.

To James S. McQuade's review of "Thou Shalt Not Covet," I want to pay tribute and say that it voices the sentiment of all intelligent people who have seen the play. By all odds it is the strongest of its kind seen here. It impressed me at the "Big Four" run-off so much that I made up a party of "fans" and went over to the Fenway to see it more in detail. Tyrone Power seems made for the part, and he had the house with him all through, after seeing the impossible woman he was tied to. There were thrills enough to hold the closest attention of all, but what impressed me deeply was the fine character of the man amid temptation which seldom comes to any human being and which not one in ten thousand could resist. It was superbly done and left a good taste in the mouth. One of my party who seemed bent on looking for defects made the remark that she thought the man's beard ought to grow a bit after that stay on the Island. Kathlyn Williams did a fine piece of work.

Another V-L-S-E offering was "The Island of Surprise," featuring William Courtenay, well supported by a capable company. Here was another case of mind gone wrong, but with the hero this time, and two women instead of one, as in the case of the castaways in "Thou Shalt Not Covet." Eleanor Woodruff does some pretty good work. I thought the monkey well behaved. Great credit is due Paul Scardon for the details, for never once did we feel that we were not actually on a South Sea Island. A feature of the first presentation of the film at the Boston theater was the presence in front of the star Mr. Courtenay, he being here at the Park Square theater in "Under Fire."

George Kleine is producing some of his early releases at the Copley theater (formerly the Toy) starting in on Sunday evening with "The Lion of Venice" which caused so much favorable comment when seen here within a year at the Exeter. Cabiria is on now at popular prices and ought to interest many who failed to see this masterpiece when at the Tremont Temple last year. In conjunction are some war pictures to me unnecessary, in view of all we read of the horrors of this war.

One of the Metro successes, "The Vampire," was put on at the Park Monday for the week and scored heavily though seen here before by thousands of Mme. Petrova's admirers. I think it one of her best efforts and never does the Vampire in her assert itself unpleasantly. I liked particularly the closing reels when Jane Lagrange is being shown the sights of the Capital and the passing soldier by that young man who stood for so much and who aroused the soul of the woman. Especially reverent was the final scene, picturing the Saviour and the Magdalene. Again we see in this picture Petrova's love for dumb animals as shown in the peacock, monkey and kitten. On the bill was the long anticipated "Mme. La Presidente," with Anna Held making her bow in the pictures. I was disappointed in Miss Held's interpetration for she certainly made no effort to make her eyes behave as told in the song so identified with her in musical comedy. The rolling of her orbs was at times grotesque and unnecessary. Still she was chic, graceful and fascinating enough for the purposes besetting her. Good work was done by Herbert Standing, Page Peters, Forrest Stanley and dear Lydia Yeamans Titus. The French atmosphere was carefully preserved and showed skillful directorship all through. The film is preceded by a series of pictures of Miss Held in gorgeous costumes and this took with the ladies present. It follows closely the original play except in the accidental undress scene which was quite proper, compared with Fannie Ward's, for she remained on the scene en deshabille most daringly, but it got by the censor here. The production is a credit to Morosco and ought to take immensely.

I cannot recall a more beautiful play as to costuming and stage setting than "My Lady's Slipper," with Anita Stewart and Earle Williams, who do such good teamwork always. Never once did we get out of the atmosphere created by the director and producer, Ralph Ince. It is a most pretentious series of pictures which will live long in memory. Joseph Kilgour was a conspicuous figuer as King Louis, and I thought Julia Swane Gordon an ideal Marie Antoinette. Miss Stewart (who so strongly resembles Viola Allen—the one of ten years ago) seemed made for the part and doesn't she meet the camera well? She is one of the very few who can stand a close-up without adding or emphasizing lines, but of course she has none. This was another Fenway success. Later in the week we had our second Mary Page episode and what may seem inconsistencies are presumably a part of the mystery plot. I wonder how they are to string it all out to fifteen and hold our interest.

I want to refute a statement that our atmospheric conditions in New England are not conducive to good camera work, for the opposite is proved in the series of pictures put forth by the Mutual Film Company showing scenes all through this part of the land.

I have seen some mighty good things at the runoffs of late like "The Yellow Passport" featuring Clara Kimball Young with a well-balanced company including John Sainpolis, so long here with the Castle Square and other theaters, always doing good work and socially popular. He looked the Russian, who well deserved his horrible fate for pursuing an innocent girl. It is the first villian's part played by him here since "The Bishop's Carriage."

We congratulate the Metro on securing the Drews with their clean wholesome comedy—minus slapstick. I notice when the announcement appears on the title that all sit up and smile in anticipation of a jolly quarter hour. We want more George Ade fables, too, as they are a scream from start to finish.

I was disappointed in "Diamonds are Trumps" for we expect something fine with the Selig trademark. All went well until the close when the most impossible situation was produced with a young girl and heavy villain—a thief at bay and no one put wise in a dance to the situation. A spineless young cad of a detective was told to call at a certain hour, but it was a clear case for the police. The finale caused everyone to laugh audibly with the spectacle of the two men with faces daubed as a result of a scuffle, the villain on the broad grin, instead of being hustled off in the "Black Maria."

I saw a "Trip to the Fair" the other night at the Exeter, and also "A Tribute to Mother," two good Universal short subjects full of human interest and well done. Eddie Lyons has an opposite a young girl who might easily serve as understudy for "Little Mary," for she is much like her, evidently unaware of the resemblance as there was no effort to imitate. Several noticed this. The fair scenes at night were wonderfully well done and the little story was not inconsistent—rather human on the whole.

BRITISH NOTES

THE growing tendency of American manufacturers to release their products upon cooperative lines, generally as the so-and-so program has for some time been the topic for discussion amongst the middlemen of the trade, the exchanges or renters. Five houses of strength and repute in the States, two hitherto unheard of by the English exhibitor, have adopted similar plans for Britain. Three are already in execution but two as yet—Kriterion and Fox—are in temporary abeyance pending establishment arrangements. Of the three in action the most illuminating results are without a shadow of a doubt the Metro features released here through Raffells. In the significant sense of the words they have "caught on," particularly with the middle-class exhibitor, and the number who have booked the series "en bloc"—a procedure usually regarded with the utmost disfavor—is more than ample evidence of their success. Throughout the country there is a stronger inclination by showmen to see before buying and it is this one factor alone, the smart organization of trade shows in London and the provinces where the exhibitor can see one or all of the program that has laid the foundation of the Metro system. There have been and are now upon the British market American films comparable with the best imported that have turned out financial failures through nothing more than faulty handling.

Somewhere, somehow, sometime, hidden away under identity tantalizingly anonymous there is a mysterious personality entombed within the prison walls of an American film house in Shaftesbury avenue who even in these days of winged progress sits and ruminates. He professionally describes himself as a "rum 'un" but his bitterest critics do not countenance any natural eccentricity and I really cannot think the appellation was chosen to imply a preference in intoxicants. Yet when he relates to his clients the following experience their comments invariably take the form of a mild diatribe upon temperance. Nevertheless it is not without its moral to traveling exchangemen. To use his own words, the "new 'un" was ten "quid" short when reckoning up his accounts in Glasgow the other Tuesday. He had only just arrived by the midnight express from St. Pancras so none of his Scottish friends could have had time to "initiate" him. The "rum 'un" ruminated more furiously than ever he had done before at number one-six-six. During the course of the day the London office was surprised to receive a telegram from him which read:—"Please wire ten pounds. Have had pocket picked." The money was sent together with a very humorous query, much too personal to print but which he of the "double mask" will show to his American friends if they are strong enough in persuasive power. And the whole truth of the matter was the cashier in London had not handed the "rum 'un" his expense money on the previous Monday afternoon and since his joy at not losing ten pounds simmered down the "rum 'un" has been further ruminating the point.

The "cabby house" is the filthy pseudonym bestowed by viewers to the premises of D. Horsely at 95 Wardow street, London. A "house-warming" party was held last Wednesday by D. W. Russell when he introduced the first cub comedies.

* * *

That there is often more danger in the name of a film than in the story itself, was recently evinced by the curtailed careers of two visualizations of notorious novels. A London renting-house this week announces a kinema translation of Hubert Wales' book "The Yoke" which was banned and even prohibited from private circulation a decade ago. The production as a picture is harmless but its name is the most dangerous one could choose from the library list and unless there is a titular change it is unlikely the film will be seen in public.

The customs returns for last year in the film industry are now available and show a considerable increase upon previous years despite the war. Upon the stock imported to Britain the U. S. A., as usual, comes first with £1,113,000 out of the total of £1,210,000. France is next with £69,000, while the other countries are represented together with £28,000 worth of imports. From these it will be noticed there were a considerable number of re-exports, i. e., films exported after arrival and viewing on the London market. These account for something like £169,000.

The newspaper-reading public of the country has been treated during the past week to details of a performance of "Oliver Twist" in a Los Angeles theater starring Sir Herbert Tree, Constance Collier and Charles Chaplin. Gratuitous publicity campaigns of this kind invariably have their humorous side. Apart from confidential assertions by scribes who "positively know" that Charlie was born in nine different towns, that he was educated alternatively at a Quaker school and a Grammar school one writer worries his mind, and the public's, with the query—"Is Charlie of military age? And if so will he —? Yet I don't know if that would be well. Those feet!"

London Trade Topics.

The Vitagraph Company, having decided to undertake its own hiring with exhibitors upon the Blue Ribbon and Broadway features, is making hurried preparations for the launching of its first serial "The Goddess." It will most likely be released here in May and the publicity campaign will be an exhaustive one to a degree, not one but several daily newspapers having agreed to display a literary version of the picture concurrently with the appearance of each installment. An unusual testimony to the story as a journalistic attraction is furnished by the fact that some editors are paying for it at usual fiction rates. That new press agent of theirs is some hypnotist.

"The Second Mrs. Tangueray," considered by dramatic critics to be Sir Arthur Pinero's greatest play has been biographed in London with Sir George Alexander in his original role. Others in the film are Hilda Moore, Marie Hemingway and Mary Rooke. It will be released here in May.

A circumstance acclaimed in the trade with the utmost satisfaction is the announced appearance in the States under the auspices of the Universal Company of two subjects by the London Film Co.

The Holmfroth Producing Company have made arrangements with Nat Gould, the well-known author of turf and sporting stories to adapt certain of his works to the exigencies of the screen. A start will be made in the early Spring at the company's studios in Yorkshire.

* * *

"The finest emotional actor on the screen" is the neat tribute paid to Henry B. Walthall upon his performance in "The Avenging Conscience" by the dramatic critic of the "London Evening News."

The actor Henri de Vries and his wife left London last week for New York where besides appearing in a theatrical production he will fulfill a short engagement in motion pictures. His scripts will be selected from several in his possession at the present time, most possibly "Submarine F7," one of the adventures of "Arsene Lupin," and a successful topical playlet doing the vaudeville halls here, entitled "War-Mates."

D. W. G.'s "Birth of a Nation" has been withdrawn from the Scala theater and it is likely to make a provincial tour under the auspices of a leading vaudeville circuit before reappearing in town.

Stanley Bishop of the Globe Film Company of London has brought back with him from the States the first of the Irene Fenwick features which he will release along with the Billy Merson comedies the firm are diligently producing here.

The term "commuter" given in its plurality as the title of an excellent Kleine comedy is seriously puzzling our trade viewers. It has already had a dozen different interpretations at the trade show the other day, each as distant from the real meaning as the title is from the character of the play. The dictionary definition of commute is "to modify" and is one generally used in legal or judicial parlance. Probably it may have a different construction in the States but after one has seen the film the inappropriateness of the title in its English sense is marked. In the art of film making the title is a factor of first-rate importance. The only reason why some films ever get on to the public screen is because they have good titles, but it seems often the idea of manufacturers that if the production is good any old designation will assume the same quality.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Have Some Decency.

MAYBE you do not care a whoop what people think of you; even if you don't, have a little regard for the other man, the man who does have a respect for himself and his business. Don't seek to create the impression that motion pictures are made in brothels with courtesans for players. In a recent batch of material comes two items. One is from Boston and is taken from the house organ of the Metro agency. The other is from Seattle and is lifted from Tom North's bright sheet, the VLSE Pals. Editor Furber, of the Metro Film Facts, goes outside his jurisdiction to pick up a horrible example, not because he has to, but because he knows that the New England exhibitors are touchy. He says:

CENSORSHIP seems to have no terrors for some who have donned the film armor if a page "ad" that I noted in a Pittsburgh film bulletin signifies anything. Here the picture of a nearly nude woman is shown in connection with a recent feature production, the title of which signifies something for a stag party. And to make it still more offensive and harmful, it is announced as "An audacious art study that passed the National Board of Censorship." Then it goes on to say: "Therein lies the magnet. But far more important is that which lies back of it—that keeps the temporary gasp doing."

When an exhibitor is encouraged into the showing of indecent pictures, and when I say indecent I mean indecent in name as well as in story, there is one mighty vision that should loom up to him before he thinks of so lowering his standard, and that vision will be "CENSORSHIP." If any one of the proponents of censorship could secure a copy of the "ad" I mentioned, it would be a mighty weapon before any legislative body. Never mind if the picture isn't "as bad as it is painted;" here is an exchange who offers it as "An audacious art study that has passed the National Board of Censorship;" words that smack of the barker before the midway show who announces "ZIR-A-A, the girl who dances without moving her feet," and after a wild flow of adjectives warns you not to tell your wife what you see inside. Can we afford to allow cancers to eat at the vitals of our business foundation?

"Audacious pictures" have no place in the programs of the exhibitor who has the real interests of his business at heart. "Can 'em;" you might almost as well advertise a leper as your principal attraction.

That is half of it. Now go to the other side of the continent and listen to what Tom North has to remark:

Appears in the Nude.

One exhibitor of Big Four Features has an entirely wrong conception of what constitutes good advertising when he tries to draw the public to his theater with hand bills heralding the fact that Edith Storey in the Island of Regeneration "appears in the nude," and "nude" is in very heavy black type and is the first thing one notices.

There are dozens of things that one could feature in their advertising of this picture without alluding to anything that is bound to make a bad impression. Those things do not appeal to any but the more degenerate and at best such things will kill a picture house in a short time if advertised in this way. There is absolutely nothing in the picture to offend the most critical, and the exhibitor referred to says so in a small line below the word that really attracts attention. But why feature this word "nude" if there is nothing to offend or awaken immodest thoughts?

It is plain that the exhibitor referred to really tried to arouse in the minds of the readers of his dodger thoughts of seeing something salacious and that the public would pack the house to see this. Don't do it again, PAL, for the picture never was made with that end in view and to the best of our knowledge you are the first to ever feature this part of the picture in advertising it. You could have ordered a thousand heralds in three colors on this for two dollars and they would have made ten times the impression your poorly printed dodger on cheap paper made. It cost you a great deal more to advertise the way you did in this case than if you had used a few of the heralds which go with this feature.

Perhaps you've been on the street in summer time. Some poor mongrel cur trots along. Some one yells "Mad dog" and the first thing you know the street is in an uproar and the pup and some innocent bystanders get all full of bullet holes. The dog wasn't mad, at least not until they started to do things to him.

For some years now a few exhibitors have been doing their utmost to play on sensationalism, and a few manufacturers have helped them along. The public has been told that "This is the limit!" that this other "Barely passed the censors," or was "Prohibited by seven state censors," and the information is added that "We have it all." Hand bills and some newspaper advertisements carry pictures of nude women. Sometimes the exhibitor will go to the trouble of having these cuts made where he could borrow or rent decent cuts.

And these same people wonder why there should be all this talk on censorship.

It is not so much what pictures are as what they are supposed to be that is making the censorship trouble. A few exhibitors, comparatively few in proportion to the entire number, spend their time and a little money trying to make people believe that pictures are sensational and vicious. Just one man cannot only hurt his own town but affect the judgment of perhaps an entire county. As a result we are facing a Federal censorship. What we really need is the equivalent to the pure food bill as applied to picture advertising. Mrs. Smalley produced an effective and telling allegory in "Hypocrites." It taught a lesson, but it was treated like a burlesque show because the average exhibitor advertised it like he would the naughty Parisiennes or any itinerant "turkey."

Already we have kisses measured by the inch and gambling limited to small footage. Just keep on advertising and we will presently reach a stage where the properly denatured pictures will interest no one. It pays in cash money to be decent.

Good Advice.

Luke Scott is getting the Clansmans, the V-L-S-E organ in the Kansas City-St. Louis territory, in better form each issue. In the last he offers this excellent advice:

Did you ever watch horses taking heavy loads up a hill?

One will strain and jerk, moving up a couple of feet and then being carried back nearly as far.

They either will lunge into the harness on the start and then with a strong, steady pull will slowly but surely forge on up the hill.

Now watch the exhibitor who is playing any way to get the money. He makes a big splurge when he has a special program and leaves the other six days of the week to take care of themselves.

In other words, he bases his entire success upon the quality of his program and then does not thoroughly advertise that. He merely jerks the people in once a week.

In direct contrast to this man is the exhibitor who is endeavoring to make every end of his business show a profit.

His house is kept spick and span.

He makes the comfort and satisfaction of his patrons a personal matter.

He carefully studies the market and selects his programs.

He makes a good sized spread on his special nights, but he also boosts his house and his other programs and he does this every day in the week.

He advertises in every new and unique way he can. He makes his house pull.

His policy pulls.

His program pulls.

His advertising pulls.

He is constantly and steadily impressing them with the fact that his house is the one which can give them the most for their money in every way.

To create a clientele, don't jerk them in for one night and let them stumble back of their own accord.

And here's one point to add to the above. The man who seeks to make business by advertising one real feature a week and trusts to that to make business for five or six decidedly inferior programs is making another mistake. If he puts half of his program appropriation into a single show and splits the rest over the remainder of the week, the people who are brought in by the big show may come again and find the other-day programs so much inferior that they seem even worse by contrast.

Some anonymous exhibitor, who might be Mr. Scott, also contributes some paragraphs on billboard advertising and offers the suggestion that Victrola boxes are just the right size for one sheets and a date. Each box will yield four good boards and where there is a chance to get them they may be had at small cost.

Something New.

The Old Mill, one of the Hulsey houses, is using a series of "Merchants Keystone Matinees." This is something that seems to us to be brand new. It is not a new name for the old Farmer's Matinee. This is something different. It is nominally for the merchants themselves. The Hulsey houses use the feature programs, but they realize that some people are just foolish enough to run contrary to form and to desire light, short subjects. They know, too, that in business hours men have no time to loaf through a ninety-minute program where they might drop in to see a reel or two and take a load off their feet and their minds at the same time. To this end they run a special program of comedy subjects from half past ten until the regular matinee at two o'clock. All short stuff and all light, just the sort of thing the tired business man is supposed to prefer and generally does. This is for the larger towns and might not work well in small places, but it brings the business back to where the downtown houses made their first great appeal. You go to see Smith. He is out but will be back in half an hour. You do not fidget around his office for thirty minutes. You drop into a picture show and come back if you wish. You cannot do that on a five-reel feature and lots of men who used to be regular picture fans lost the habit when the long subjects came in.

And since the chief appeal is to business men, the advertising medium is blotters for the business man's desk. And they are blotters that absorb ink instead of smearing it all over the sheet.

Good, If—

Here is a good scheme if you are in a town where the telephone company does not apply the toll system. The item is taken from the house organ of the Orpheum, Aberdeen, S. D.

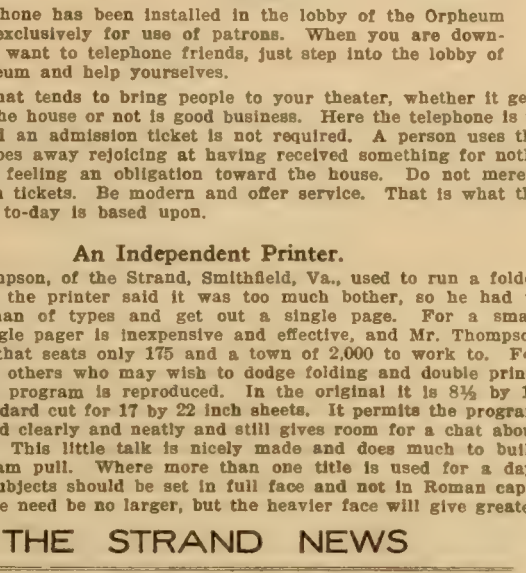
FOR OUR PATRONS.

A telephone has been installed in the lobby of the Orpheum theater, exclusively for use of patrons. When you are downtown and want to telephone friends, just step into the lobby of the Orpheum and help yourselves.

Anything that tends to bring people to your theater, whether it gets them inside the house or not is good business. Here the telephone is in the lobby and an admission ticket is not required. A person uses the 'phone and goes away rejoicing at having received something for nothing and still feeling an obligation toward the house. Do not merely sell admission tickets. Be modern and offer service. That is what the patronage of to-day is based upon.

An Independent Printer.

W. F. Thompson, of the Strand, Smithfield, Va., used to run a folder program, but the printer said it was too much bother, so he had to humor the man of types and get out a single page. For a small house the single pager is inexpensive and effective, and Mr. Thompson has a house that seats only 175 and a town of 2,000 to work to. For the benefit of others who may wish to dodge folding and double printing costs, the program is reproduced. In the original it is 8½ by 11 inches, a standard cut for 17 by 22 inch sheets. It permits the program to be displayed clearly and neatly and still gives room for a chat about the features. This little talk is nicely made and does much to build up the program pull. Where more than one title is used for a day, the smaller subjects should be set in full face and not in Roman capitals. The type need be no larger, but the heavier face will give greater



THE STRAND NEWS

VOLUME I. PUBLISHED BY THE STRAND THEATRE, SMITHFIELD, VA. NUMBER 9

For the week of Dec. 27th The Strand offers one of the strongest programs ever offered in any city. During this week you will be able to see any kind of picture that most appeals to you. There will be a wonderful fairy tale which will appeal to the grown-up as well as to the children, a sublime Biblical tragedy, detective dramas, and society dramas without parallel, together with mirth-provoking comedies.

Of course you remember Aladdin and his Wonderful Lamp, that wonderful Arabian Nights tale that thrilled as well as amused you when you were a child. The costumes and settings in this elaborate production are true to the tale and the time. It is not often that you have an opportunity to enjoy such a magnificent feature. Bring the children.—At the Strand Monday, Dec. 27th.

To meet the demand of several of its patrons, The Strand has made arrangements to present a Biblical tragedy. No better selection could be made than "the Shadow of Nazareth" which comes on Wednesday, Dec. 29th. In the production of this enthralling story passages from the Scriptures have been used as a basis, supplemented with a few imaginative scenes to carry the play to a tremendous climax. This sublime production has been produced with due reverence for its sacred theme and will be appreciated by old and young.

The strong story of a young man, a crook, but with a heart of gold, who rescues a child from a terrible fate at the risk of his future liberty, is one that will appeal to all who are so fortunate as to see the feature at The Strand on Friday, Dec. 31st. "Alias Jimmy Valentine" is a wonderful character, ably portrayed by the famous Robert Warwick. It is a convincing, logical story, giving opportunities for strong, natural acting and sincere emotionalism.

display and make the program look more important. It will be seen that there is even room for an advertisement.

Mr. Thompson writes that they have Metro, Famous Players, World Film and other subjects and get from ten cents to a quarter according to the quality of the offering, which is going some for a small town. His partner, Mr. Barrow, manages the house and plays cornet in the orchestra, with a piano and violin to complete the trio. It takes hustling to make a 175 house pay, but even through the pre-Christmas stagnation they better than broke even.

Has Two Sides.

W. H. Bird, of Fort William, Ont., writes that he is out of a house just now because the four in Fort William were consolidated and only the largest was kept open, though there seems to have been room for more than one. Two should have been kept going to freeze out in advance possible opposition.

He sends in a novel stunt that has two sides to it, and he writes:

"I have read with interest some of the schemes used by the houses presenting pieces of film to patrons. My idea goes them one better inasmuch as I hand out a printed photograph of one or more scenes from the feature then running. I enclose samples. I am an experienced cameraman and laboratory worker, therefore the manufacture of these little samples is easy and the cost is small. From an examination of the prints you can, no doubt, dope out the system of manufacture. I take out only prints with cut or torn sprocket holes, so there is no real damage done the film. I splice the frames, make a negative of the combination and then print from this, giving out the slips in an envelope suitably printed."

Just what Mr. Bird means is better shown in the reproductions than can be explained in print. It will be seen that some of the slips are but a single frame. Others consist of frames from two or three scenes and a frame of the title. When taking the cuttings does not rob the reel, the scheme is unusually good, but there is always the danger that others will follow the idea and be less careful of the parts taken with the result that presently the reels will be all full of jumps. Each frame or series means the loss of two other frames. It is not unlikely that the companies would be willing to supply the exchanges with clips. Mr. Bird uses the regular velox post cards, cutting them up to suit. It would probably be cheaper to use the double weight paper, which come with unprinted back and therefore sells for less in proportion to the area. The idea is decidedly ingenious, and if Mr. Bird has any more schemes we should like to hear from him. He should be able to send in house stuff, pretty soon. A man who can do things is apt to be in demand.

Complete.

The Majestic, Grand Junction, Colo., usually does keep a hustle on. A new idea is a detail program in its house sheet. It does not date the days, but otherwise the scheme is good. It looks something like this:

Correct.

A correspondent who has nothing to do with the exhibiting and writes on other matters and adds, "I enclose an advertisement I clipped from a paper. I don't think much of a house that features the value of its prizes rather than the value of its program, do you?" Most assuredly we do not, but a lottery banks on the value of its prizes and this house seems to be running a lottery and using the pictures as a subterfuge. Some day the lottery manager will be talking to the judge, but not until he has had time to do more than his share toward putting the pictures out of business.

A Bulletin.

A. M. Welliver, of the Colonial, Muncy, Pa., sends in his weekly Bulletin, which is merely a one page program about ten by twelve. He does not explain how he works it, but presumably it is distributed by boys. The part reproduced shows only the program proper. Above

Neatly Done.

D. Gus Schneider, publicity man for the Strand, Providence, R. I., sends in a full-page advertisement recently put out to advertise the continuation of Paramount. Because he has a full page he does not experiment to see just how much type he can get into the space. He lays out half of the page in telling cuts and in the rest he tells about the people and the films, and says comparatively little about the house at this time because he knows that if he can get the people interested in the plays they will be interested in the house that shows them. The advertisement is reproduced in miniature, not to permit you to read it but to show how the space is well filled without being so overcrowded that not even an ardent fan could bring himself to read it. Here the make-up is open and inviting, and a man may start to read a part and finish it all because he finds it interesting.

All But the Town.

The Eastern theater, "somewhere in America," offers a complete mailing program folder, a sheet seven by twelve, two folds. One side is the program for the week, the other side carries announcements of the features and it is so folded that the two big features show on the outside, one of them being pulled in to permit a space for the address to be written. A cheap paper clip holds it together in the mails. The scheme is good since it does away with envelopes and adds to the advertising, and they give all the information any one could ask, except the name of the city. Two samples sent show each about a quarter of a post mark that suggests it is Columbus, but which one is not explained.

The program section is particularly good, light line rule panels enclosing each program change. Hours of performance, street address and scale of prices all appear, but the prices vary from week to week to match the bookings, some features costing ten and fifteen cents and others five and ten. If it is at all possible, the bookings should be so arranged that as a rule definite prices are required on certain days instead of being changed to accord with the weekly schedule of film. It is always better to let the people understand that each Monday and Friday, for instance, are fifteen cent days. Then there is less apt to be argument and mistrust.

One novel feature is an organ recital each Sunday evening which precedes the first evening show.

Hitting the Trail.

The Trail, the house program of the Star, Trail, B. C., offers this catchline:

Hitch your wagonload of lonesome evenings to the Star.

Neat and good enough to be pulled up into prominence and permanence. The editor says the patrons "ask and ask and ask" for the program. This in a little talk to advertisers prospective. This is because the Trail is a nicely edited sheet, though with strong suffragette tendencies. Evidently they believe in playing up for the patronage of the ladies on the proposition that the men will have to come. That in itself is something of a suffragette argument.

Truth compels the comment that the poetry is about the same grade as that George Editor Carpenter blames on his office boy.

Is C. L. Present?

Mr. Laemmle should write whoever is responsible for the Canadian Universal Bulletin to use the brains God gave him, if he was given any. The issue dated Dec. 27 has been sent in by our local correspondent. Page four contains a note in a column of gossip to the effect that "owing largely to adverse press criticisms" the Farrar Carmen has been a failure in Toronto. In the next column there is a headed story to the effect that Grace Cunard is more profitable to exhibitors than Miss Farrar. This is in exceedingly poor taste and whoever is responsible for this effort to make advertising capital from attack on the wares of a competitor should be called upon the mat. It is rotten ethically and bad business commercially, for to attack the offerings of another concern always suggests a fear of this opposition.

Well Done.

The Gaiety Theater Company, Santa Maria, Cal., recently took over that house. It announces the fact to the public through the medium of a neatly printed card. There is nothing special about it, but it is just generally good. The type is not fancy, but it is a little more ornamental than a body face. There is no display other than an initial letter inset, but is well set. The card stock is not expensive, but it is good. It is something that the average man will like without knowing that he likes it or why. It is parallel to the man who is so well dressed that no one notices that he is well dressed. The wording is like the rest, not too modest and yet not in the least exaggerated. The envelope, too, is white and of good quality with merely the name of the theater, town and state, but it is printed in such a black ink that you are apt to notice the quality, even here. When they get around to it, we should like to see some of the house advertising.

For Mailing Lists.

George Editor Carpenter has a new idea for getting a mailing list with all live addresses. He points out that most theaters pay for considerable juice and that it should be possible to coax from the light company its list of patrons if they are assured that the list will be put to no improper use. This gives a select list and a correct one.

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising for Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throw-aways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. Mr. Sargent tells all he knows and this includes what several hundred successful exhibitors have told him. More than 100 examples. An introduction and then 299 pages of solid text. All practical because it has helped others. It will help you. Handsome clothboard binding. By mail, postpaid $2.00

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticized, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is enclosed.

Here's Mr. Jarr!

ABOUT every so often Roy McCardell gets a flash at the steam gauge and sees that it needs a little blowing off, so he writes a letter and feels better and it keeps us busy for eight weeks afterward explaining that Roy doesn't mean that all editors are liars and thieves. Please take that fact in hand before you read what Mr. McCardell has to say:

> I noticed recently in your Photoplaywright department a dissertation, inspired by exasperation, on "boobs."
> Your strictures were mild; a "boob," in his ignorant selfishness, laziness and insulting suspicion, is the lowest form of animal life. Even the photoplaywright who is supposed to be successful is still a beginner, a student and a learner—in the face of the fact that, in spite of many obstacles, the art of the screen is always advancing. Advancing in a way that should inspire all of us concerned with its welfare, to keep pace with the noticeable constant improvement in pictures and their presentation. Though you spoke feelingly of "boobs," no one should confuse these pests with the sincere and hard working beginners, who have the mental equipment to start with.
> I am sure that there is no writer for the screen who does not devote a great deal of his time to the oftimes thankless job of instructing earnest beginners (or those the established writer believes to be earnest) by guiding them past pitfalls whose location the established writer learned by bitter experience, hard work, patience in the face of many trials, much expense and many bitter disappointments.
> I do not believe, and never have believed, that the average amateur photoplaywright has any chance to earn his salt, no matter how hard he may labor or how long and patiently he may strive. With but few exceptions, there is no place in photoplay-writing for the average person. I do not care how many scripts the average amateur may write. It it not "What have you written?" that is important, but "WHAT HAVE YOU READ?" In other words, what is stored in your mind? No mechanism can generate more power than is fed to it. The steam boiler must have coal, and the electric motor must have a generated current. Therefore, allowing for the exceptional genius, who is few and far between, no one is capable of writing good photoplays unless he is capable of writing good fiction stories. No one is capable of writing good fiction stories unless he has read long and well, has studied and has worked. You think your department is for the amateur, but it is not. It is a great and constant help for the capable and the well read men and women, who are already established photoplaywrights, or who are fitted to be such. I find it necessary to have a reference library—my tools—that is comprehensive and in which I have invested a great deal of money. I do not write a scenario that does not actually cost me at least twenty-five dollars in overhead charges. It is the same with every other established writer. The advance of the photodrama has been such that there is absolutely no more place for the casual amateur in writing for the screen than there is in his writing for the Saturday Evening Post.
> And while you were paying your respects to "boob" writers, you might have made a few just remarks on "boob" manufacturers—producers. Happily, many of these are seeing the light. But many, especially among the long established, cannot bring themselves to pay a fair price for a scenario or to treat a trained and able writer with any courtesy whatsoever. Many of the oldest heads of long established producing companies cannot be brought to realize that hardly any director is capable of both writing and directing a scenario. The director who "writes his own stuff" must necessarily "stall," while actors on salary, extra people, automobiles and other costly adjuncts, together with the mechanical force at the studio, must wait—all on pay—till the director-author is ready to "shoot."
> Very few of the big manufacturers realize that a scenario prepared by a man who knows how, will save its cost several times over in time and money; and result, and nine times out of ten, in a better picture than the one the director must write or extemporize. The same holds true of feeble amateur scripts, bought cheaply, from which the director is expected to pad out a good picture.
> It is useless to write or tell the average manufacturer these things. He will only learn them from bitter experience and after the loss of much money and prestige. Some of the old and, at one time, money-making concerns, are on the toboggan because their heads would not heed these palpable facts. Yet the average manufacturer is intolerantly impatient of any suggestion, and especially is he impatient of any criticism of the most stupid and silly pictures that his concern may turn out. Audiences may jeer them, exhibitors refuse them, but the average producer is perfectly satisfied, because he used to make big money out of such slush. If you write and protest at your pictures being murdered by ignorant and incapable "directors," who have distorted them to gratify their appetites for "hokum," the chances are your letter will be burked by an underling secretary; or if you do get a reply it is generally curtly to the effect that the writer has seen pictures of yours that were just as bad as the one he has produced that you complain of. This is true enough, as the pictures he speaks of, went through the same process as the one you complain of.
> There is great improvement, however, I am happy to say. But self satisfied stupidity still reigns in many studios. The average "scenario department" is a collection of conceited incompetents, no member of which could hold down a job as reporter on the Dogtown Gazette. Just yesterday, I received a synopsis which had been held at one studio—supposedly one of the biggest—for eighteen months! It was the synopsis of "A Jay in Peacock Alley," with the full scenario of which I won The Morning Telegraph Comedy Scenario prize contest of $1,000, a year ago!
> So when you take up the "boob" question again, say something about "boob" producers. Don't be afraid, they will not read it. They never read anything except the fulsome adulation ladled out to them by their salaried press agents and sycophants.

We are entirely "with" Mr. McCardell in his statement that this department is not for the amateur but for the professional writers, but where in Tophet does Roy suppose that we found these professional writers. We take beginners and turn them out professionals where it can be done, and if others read the department well and good. If it amuses them it certainly does not hurt them any and it does help those who can be helped. More than half of the writers who are making money today owe a lot to this department and are willing to acknowledge it, and if we thought we appealed merely to the amateurs we would go out and look for a more honest job, but we have handraised so many successful writers that we know the good or part of the good the department has done in the last four years; a formative stage in writing.

We would perhaps do even better if writers had more persistence and did not quit because they cannot make immediate sales. But we do save the ones worth while because they have persistence and if manufacturers of film would only do their share and try to make real pictures from real scripts instead of taking whatever junk a director passes over, there would be still more names on the list of the arrived. But so long as directors write their own stories or are permitted to take the stories of their friends, just so long will there be poor pictures and discouraged authors.

Measured Close-Ups.

Here comes a new one. A student wants to know if there are different range close-ups and whether the writer should specify an eight foot close-up or leave it to the director. The question is asked in good faith and perhaps it bothers others.

It is not possible to specify a close up on John and Mary taken ten feet away. John may be three feet away from Mary or only eighteen inches. In the latter case the cameraman can come in closer and still get both in the field. For that matter he may have a lens that will give a proper field at ten feet and another operator may have a camera with a lens of a different angle that will require only eight feet. To give the distance of the camera from the subject it would be necessary to know the exact placement of the players and the angle of the lens.

It is quite sufficient to tell what you want to get and leave it to the director and his cameraman.

Technique of the Photoplay

(Second Edition)

By EPES W. SARGENT

Not a line reprinted from the first edition, but an entirely new and exhaustive treatise of the Photoplay in its every aspect, together with a dictionary of technical terms and several sample scripts.

One hundred and seventy-six pages of actual text.

Special chapters on Developing the "Punch," Condensing the Script, Writing the Synopsis, Multiple Reel Stories, Talking Pictures, Copyrights, etc.

In cloth, two dollars. Full leather, three dollars.

Operators' Union Directory, I. A. T. S. E.

NOTICE: Each union is entitled to have its roster of officers, meeting nights, etc., listed here once per year, free of cost. Preserve this list, as it will not be republished. The mail address of the secretary should be included, and the address of the regular meeting place, if any.

Local Union No. 320, Savannah, Ga.

A. F. Rehm, president; C. C. Courter, vice-president; J. C. Tyson, secretary-treasurer; Desmond Waters, business agent.

Local Union No. 360, Edmonton, Alta, Canada.

William A. Allen, president; Alfred M. Malley, vice-president; Thomas Ormiston, secretary; Charles S. Stuckey, financial secretary; Philip Barber, business agent; J. McNabb, sergeant-at-arms. Regular monthly meetings held last Sunday of each month at Gem Theater.

Local Union No. 199, Detroit, Mich.

John A. McDonald, president; Sam Johnston, vice-president; A. M. Booth, recording secretary; William G. Kennedy, treasurer; Jack Edwards, business agent; Abe Feldstein, sergeant-at-arms. Meetings held first and third Wednesday of each month at Musician's Hall, Macomb street.

Local Union No. 279, Houston, Texas.

L. M. Andler, president; A. J. Bohne, vice-president; Wm. B. Green, financial secretary; A. Avolas, recording secretary; R. L. Vanden, business agent; W. Kunz, sergeant-at-arms. Meetings held first and third Mondays of each month.

Manufacturers' Notice.

It is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 125.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

Explain how the rectifier is started, and exactly what happens in the entire process. Suppose you had a G. E. mercury arc rectifier working on 110 volt supply from one side of a three wire system, and were ordered to connect to the outside wires, thus jumping the supply voltage to 220, what would you do?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 119.

The Roll of Honor on Question 119 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, New York; G. Betz, Osgood, Indiana; Wilson Hays, Barton, Maryland; E. I. Wilson, St. Joseph, Missouri; Leon Brantley, Nacogdoches, Texas; W. E. Bryner, Springfield, Illinois; A. H. Cuff, Gravenhurst, Canada; T. Richards, Blaine, Washington; F. F. Bell, Palestine, Texas; P. R. Dey, Winnipeg, Canada; Seth Wiard, New Haven, Connecticut; R. I. Ogden, New Albany, Indiana; J. R. Andrews, Burlington, Vermont; D. A. Davis, Butte, Montana; James Pooley, Toledo, Ohio; Carl Schmidt, New Ulm, Minnesota; John M. Alexander, Ottawa, Canada; Charles S. Stuckey, Edmonton, Canada; M. Nosti, Tampa, Florida; J. H. Hanson, Whiting, Maine; Walter Collins, Tiffin, Ohio; G. M. W. Richmond, Geneseo, New York; O. J. Bean, New Bedford, Massachusetts; Leonard Pagenhardt, Westernport, Maryland, and T. Glucksman, New Orleans, Louisiana.

Question 119 brought out the greatest number of correct replies, or at least approximately correct replies of any one of the questions up to date; also a large number attempted to reply to this question who frankly admitted that, until 119 was reached, they had been afraid to tackle any of the questions for fear of "exposing their ignorance." Now that is the wrong idea. As I have told you before, gentlemen, there is no need to be ashamed of the fact that there is something you don't know. Possibly those who have been operating for several years really ought to be ashamed of not knowing some of the things covered by the questions, but, even so, it is better to study and make a stab at answering, because if wou do that you will really learn something, and learn it in a way that you won't forget it in a hurry. If you are wrong nobody will know it but the editor, and he will admire you for having at least tried, and when the right answer appears you will be looking for it and you will remember it too.

The selection for publication lay between Brothers Smith, Crawford, Hays and Wilson. I think on the whole that Neighbor Crawford's reply will best serve the purpose, however, and it is therefore selected.

Reply to Question No. 119.

By W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Question:

Explain fully just what "flicker" is. What is "travel ghost" and its cause? Why does a properly proportioned three-wing shutter cause less flicker than a two-wing, speed being equal? Is the screen ever entirely dark when the picture is being projected?

The Answer:

As the shutter blades either partly or entirely shut off the light (Now don't say he is wrong there, because with the old two blade inside shutters the flicker blade of some machines only partly shut off the ray.—Ed.) the screen is alternately light and dark, and if these flashes of light and darkness come too far apart, or are of uneven duration, the eye sees the darkness in the form of a "flicker." Flicker may be reduced to a minimum by speeding up the machine, but in practical projection it is accomplished by using a properly proportioned (as nearly as possible 50-50) shutter, and not running the projector too slowly. Flicker is more evident with a large picture than with a small one; also when the screen illumination is high. As you say in the Handbook, the more spokes there are in a wheel (within reason of course) the less you will see them when the wheel is revolved rapidly. The same thing applies to the cutting of the light by the shutter at least to a large extent. Speed being equal, flicker will be greater with a properly proportioned two-wing shutter than with a properly proportioned three-wing shutter, for reasons already explained. If a film is run in a machine with the shutter removed there will be streaks of light running up and down on the picture. The reason for this is that when the picture is pulled down by the intermittent sprocket, by reason of the fact that white objects in the film register more strongly in the eye than will the dark ones, the eye, to a certain extent, follows the movement of the white object across the dark one, and that is what is called "travel ghost," though it is, of course, shown in an exaggerated form when the shutter is removed. In ordinary practice, travel ghost means streaks of light either up or down from white objects in the picture, and it is particularly noticeable where the white object is surrounded by very dark ones, as, for instance, in a white-letter black-background title. It may be caused by several things. (a) Shutter not properly set; (b) shutter blade too narrow; (c) too much lost motion in the gears of the machine; (d) too many "joints" between the intermittent movement and the shutter, each one having a little play, which in the aggregate amounts to enough to give the shutter expressive circumferential play. The remedy for travel ghost will depend on its cause.

Yes, where a modern three-wing outside shutter is used the screen is entirely dark, so far as projection light be concerned, three times to each movement of the intermittent, or twice where an outside two-wing shutter is used.

[I believe Brother Crawford's reply covers the ground briefly and with a very fair degree of completeness. There were some points in Smith's, Hays' and Wilson's answers that were made a little more clear then Crawford made them, but on the other hand, there were other points they did not handle so well and—there you are.

And now I want you to understand this. So far as the Roll of Honor is concerned it means that the man has the right idea—that demonstrates in his answer that he understands the proposition involved. He does not have to put it in publishable language to get on the Roll of Honor. In fact some of the answers which reach the Roll of Honor would almost constitute a case of assault and battery on the American language, but through it all I can see that, while the man does not know how to tell it very well, he does understand the subject under discussion, and that is what counts.—Ed.]

Where to Apply.

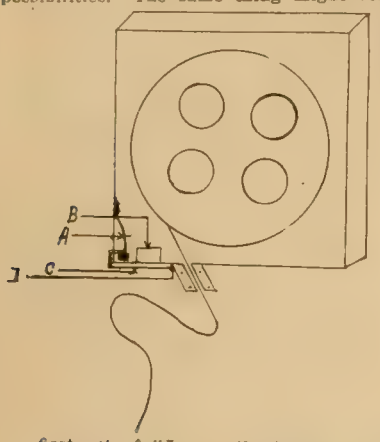
D. Moses, Brooklyn, New York, asks:

To whom should I apply for examination for license as moving picture machine operator? Have had some practical experience in an operating room, and have studied hard.

Apply to the Board of Examiners, Room 2518, Municipal Building.

Not a Bad Scheme.

J. H. Anderson, Carroll, Ia., sends in the following. I cannot at all agree with him that it is a proposition suitable only to be used by "Jimmy the Usher." This idea strikes me as having quite some possibilities. The same thing might very easily be applied in a way that would flood the entire magazine with pyrene, a fluid which does not injure film in the least. Following is Brother Anderson's letter:



This is one for "James the Usher," as a real operator does not need such a thing, and as it is of no value to the operator I don't expect much space. In the sketch, A is an ordinary hammer from a clock, fastened to the end of the upper magazine; B is a small glass vial filled with fire chemicals; C is an ordinary piece of film fastened to A and at D. In case of fire, or the least bit of trouble, the first act of "James, the Usher," usually is to run out of the operating room. Should such a thing happen, film C would be the very first thing to catch fire when the fire reached the upper loop. Its burning would release A, which will break vial B, thus allowing the chemicals to run down between the fire guard rollers and thus prevent the blaze from reaching the reel on the upper magazine. In the new Power's magazine the space between the edge of the film and corner of the magazine is 3¾ inches with a 14-inch reel, and 5¼ inches with a 10-inch reel.

Yes, I think the plan, as outlined, is O. K. and I believe this particular thing could be very easily worked into something quite valuable. No matter how careful or how competent an operator may be, there is always the possibility of accident and fire, but with modern fire traps the blaze seldom gets into the lower magazine, so with the upper magazine flooded with chemicals, there really could not be any fire at all, or much if any damage either except a mess to clean up, since, as I have pointed out, pyrene does not injure film in the least.

No Cause for Alarm.

J. H. Graves, St. Louis, Mo., says, in part:

I notice the I. A. T. S. E., is devoting about one-fourth of its entire new official publication to what amounts to a projection department. Don't you think, Friend Richardson, that their trying to butt into this field is rather absurd, after they opposed the spread of knowledge for all these years? And also don't you think it is rather ungrateful, and that you have made a bit of a chump of yourself in plugging for an organization that is now perfectly willing to preempt your field—if it could?

No. I don't think anything of the kind. So far as being 'ungrateful" is concerned, why I have had a wide experience with labor unions, and long years ago ceased, save in isolated, exceptional cases, to expect anything even in the faintest degree approaching gratitude from a labor union. It is not in the nature of the animal; never was, and I guess never will be. As to what the official journal is doing, why I have no earthly objections—absolutely none whatever, except in one particular, viz.: I have read some of the supposed-to-be expert dope therein set forth and have found it to contain a really remarkable number of misstatements; so much so that one article dealing with the location of projector and screen was rather amusing in its utter lack of understanding of the action of diffused light. My objection is that the writer thereof be allowed to mislead operators by promulgating ideas of light action which have absolutely no basis in fact, thus hampering the work we have for years been seeking to accomplish.

This is a big world, my brother, and there is ample room for us all. The projection department of the Moving Picture World stands absolutely on its own bottom, and I want it to stand that way. If anybody can conduct a better department, by all means let him do it. This department cannot possibly be, in any shape, way, manner, or form, injured by any one, except through the process of evolving a better one, and up to date although many have tried that, none have succeeded. As to the future, why, as I said in the first place, I am not doing the least bit of worrying about official journals or anything else except how to so conduct this particular department that it may do the greatest possible amount of good to the industry, and to the moving picture operator. This department could, as I have time and again told you, continue right along, and really not be appreciably hampered, even though it never received one single communication of any kind from an operator. How is that do you ask? Why, it is perfectly simple. There are, in this country, a very large number of managers who have been operators, and the mail from them alone is sufficient to fill the pages of two projection departments, if I wanted to have it that way. Moreover the projection department could turn around and cater directly to the managers and, whisper, that would be the really popular course, from a purely business point of view, for it to take. But it is not going to take it as long as I am at its head, and that I have faith to believe will be for quite some time yet, unless the Go-devil and I go to the mat once too often, in which case there will be a new editor and—I should worry.

As an afterthought I might add to the foregoing by saying that whereas a properly conducted official journal is of value to an organization in certain ways, it cannot be in the least degree an aid so far as the public be concerned, because it does not reach the public—also it cannot in any degree help the organization with the employer (in this case theater manager) because, even though he may see it (doubtful), he regards it as biased (as it very naturally is and must be), and antagonistic to him. In fact the most well intentioned argument or statement made in an official journal is more than likely to be twisted around and misconstrued by the employer, and thus do as much or more harm than good. The editor had, during many years, an exceptional opportunity to watch and observe the effect of official union journals, and, whereas in some instances the publication has accomplished a considerable amount of good, as a general proposition it is to be doubted that they are worth the money they cost when the account is all balanced.

Film Faults.

Ernest Nicolazzo, Kenosha, Wisconsin, says:

I have been a reader of the Moving Picture World for two years, and have found that there is nothing in the field to equal it. Also I have a Handbook. This is the first time you have heard from me, but I now have a good reason. Enclosed you will find some pieces of film amputated from the Fox feature "Carmen," booked through a Chicago exchange. These reels were received on Thursday, December 23d, and as soon as the film came in I started to inspect it. It was in bad shape, and I immediately called the manager and had him telephone the exchange and inform them of the condition. The exchange promptly denied it, and said the film was in good shape when it left there. Now, mind you, this film had not yet been placed in our projector. On a former occasion we had a feature from the same exchange which was in even worse condition than this one. We took the matter up with the exchange manager and received no reply whatever. In addition to the faults I am sending you, the reels were plastered with oil from beginning to end. You will please understand that the enclosed faults are only a few of those I cut out of the five reels. Projection in Kenosha is, I should say, equal to that of other cities in this part of the country. All the boys are members of the I. A. T. S. E., No. 361, and, of course, are proud of it. I wish you a very happy and prosperous New Year.

I took the matter up with the general manager of the offending corporation at headquarters here in New York City. This gentleman expressed surprise that such a thing could possibly be, and made the statement that the company was exerting every effort to keep its films in perfect condition. Well, that may all be true, but if it is I would suggest that the aforesaid company immediately go out and purchase half a dozen additional "efforts," because they need them. I do not like to publish the name of the corporation sending out films in bad condition until it has been proven that they are not making proper effort to stop it. However, the manager of the Chicago Exchange in question seems to be in a you-go-to-the-devil frame of mind, and we are therefore going to keep an eye on his future performances. If he maintains that attitude he is very likely to hear something drop, and it will drop so hard that his teeth will be very apt to rattle. I don't want to do it, but I'll bet dollars to doughnuts that if it comes to a show-down I will make him back pedal on the matter of sending out films in poor condition; also I will cure him for once and all of refusing to even reply to letters of complaint.

From Manchester, N. H.

J. W. Remillard, Manchester, N. H., says:

It has been such a long time since I have seen anything in the department concerning projection in our beautiful city that I have concluded to ask space to present ourselves with a little boost. I have been a reader of the department for four years, and the more I read it the stronger is my conclusion that I could not, or at least would not, get along without it. Also am possessor of the second edition of the Handbook, Swoope's book on Electricity, and the Hawkin's Guide, and it's me for the new Handbook when it is released. I believe we might say that projection is good in Manchester, and what is more the boys are working hard every day to improve. (That's the dope, gentlemen. Shake. I like that kind of talk. It spells progress, and speaks of progressive men.—Ed.) I would call your attention to marked paragraph of the attached newspaper clipping. The reason for this is that two of the newest theaters in our city found it would be impossible to use the projecting room if placed where it was originally designed to go, and in modern theaters built entirely of cement an error is always costly, especially when the theater is entirely completed before the owners think of the operating room. In our newest theater, which will open to the public Jan. 10, the operating room was placed in the rear of the balcony, and when measurements were taken it was found to be absolutely useless, being too low for the audience in the balcony, and too high because of the peculiar way the roof or ceiling had been built, with a big beam supporting the roof coming right down in front of the operating room.

Glad to hear from the Manchester boys. The part of the clipping referred to reads: "The operators of Local 195, headed by Master Operator John A. Callahan of the Auditorium theater of this city, will gladly give to any prospective moving picture theater owner any information desired as to the best location of the machine operating room to get the best results in projection."

Yes, my brother, it is positively amazing to watch the amount of what cannot be classed as anything else but pure, unadulterated stupidity on the part of architects who undertake to plan moving picture theaters without knowing, or (apparently) caring anything whatever about the requirements of practical projection. Manchester is not the only one. The Strand theater right here in New York City, a house costing, it is claimed, more than two hundred thousand dollars, was built what is nothing more than a ridiculously inadequate "coop," with the ceiling so low they could not get the machines in until it was torn out and raised up, the whole thing being reached by an iron ladder. Imagine it if you can. And yet they got fearfully angry because I had the nerve to criticise that kind of a proposition, and do it in good, plain language, calling a spade a spade. The action of the union is to be commended. However, I would suggest that it would be even better if the Manchester manager had consulted a projection engineer, whose business it is to be thoroughly familiar with all the various details of such things as this, as well as thoroughly familiar with all the multitude of different motor generator sets, mercury arc rectifiers, projection machines, etc. The editor of this department himself conducts that kind of business, and there are others. The fees are very moderate, and I venture the assertion that the purchasing of knowledge of this kind would be one of the best business investments a theater manager could make with an equal sum of money.

Books.

O. W. Hamman, Etna Green, Indiana, says:

> You certainly bear the O. K. stamp, for without you and the department the Moving Picture World wouldn't be very much to me, although I am not an operator. How about the Handbook so many of the boys talk about? I don't just understand, as I do not find anything of the kind listed in the department. Also please tell me where I can get books on the motion picture business. I have a book entitled "Motion Picture Operation," by Horstmann & Tousley. Is it all right, or all wrong? How about the "Hawkins' Electrical Guide?" Should I get the complete set, or which ones would suit my purpose?

Very naturally it is a source of satisfaction to know that you are pleased with our work, but nevertheless there are other departments in the World which are equally interesting and instructive if you study them. The Handbook is a work of instruction to moving picture machine operators and managers. The second edition is long since entirely exhausted, and the new book is not ready yet; watch for announcement in the World later. The book, "Motion Picture Operation," by Horstmann & Tousley is neither all right or all wrong. The book contains considerable which is of value, particularly on the electrical end, since Messrs. Horstmann and Tousley are experts in electrical matters. On the other hand, the book is extremely weak on the practical end of operating—in fact I consider it as having but little if any practical value on the optical end of things, or on practical operating. This is but natural, when we come to consider that neither of its authors are or ever were practical moving picture machine operators. The Hawkins' works, as I before said, are very excellent, and whereas some of the volumes are more valuable than others to the operator, still I think I would get the whole nine volumes, and having gotten the Hawkins' set and the new Handbook I believe you will have everything that can be purchased anywhere—meaning by this that within the covers of the Hawkins' Guide and the Handbook will be found everything of value to the operator that can be found anywhere. This, however, must be qualified by the statement that "Optic Projection," by Henry Phelps Gage and Simon Henry Gage, contains a considerable fund of information on the theoretical optics of projection, and I favor adding this work to the operator's library. It won't help him much in his practical work, but it will give him a considerably broader viewpoint of the optics of projection, and in that way cannot fail to be beneficial. The price of "Optic Projection" is $3.00. A great deal of it will be of no practical value to the operator, but there is enough that will be to justify its purchase.

I believe, Friend Hamman, that this sets forth the situation, as I see it, so far as books be concerned, and sets it forth fully and completely.

Won't Object to the Price.

E. I. Wilson, St. Joseph, Missouri, sends in answer to Question 117 and says:

> I have devoted more time to the study of shutter problems than to any connected with the business, with the possible exception of proper control of the arc, therefore I feel reasonably sure of myself in answering this particular question. Apropos of your reply to Sherman, Texas, December 25th issue, with regard to the cost of the Handbook, I believe there are very few operators who will object to any price you may find it necessary to ask, as we all know it is worth many times more than any charge you could or would make.

It is not necessary, Brother Wilson, to wait until you are sure you can answer a question correctly. We are glad to have your reply anyhow, and if it is incorrect the fact that you have tried to answer will fix the correct reply in your mind when you get it. If your reply is incorrect nobody will ever know that you have answered except the editor. As to the Handbook price, why I am glad you feel that way about it, but I want to keep it just as low as is possible, because I would rather see the book within reach of every operator in the United States than have the glory of putting out a high priced book.

Warning Signal.

T. L. Wood, Ardmore, Okla., says:

> Will you please express your opinion as to the merits of a warning signal, sketch of which is hereto attached. I have had it working on my machine for some time, and it has proved very successful. The sketch is not drawn to scale, nor is it a very good one, but I guess you can get the idea.
> I have your Handbook and the Hawkin's Guide, and I would like to put my hand in yours and shake it "reel" hard.

As to the warning device, why it seems to be a very practical thing, and there is no apparent reason why it should not work perfectly, provided there is room enough between the top of the upper magazine and the ceiling of the operating room—which is not, I am sorry to say, the case in all instances. The idea is very clearly conveyed by the drawing, and I think our readers will have no trouble in understanding the idea. The bell may, of course, be placed at any desired point in the operating room. The only criticism I can make is that when the contact is made the bell would continue to ring until roller G was raised up, unless a switch was installed, and if the bell was cut out by a switch one might forget to throw it back in, and there would be no warning. Broadly speaking, however, without intending it as a criticism, I would suggest that the best possible "warning" is for the operator to be right there on the job beside the machine. With regard to the cut you ask for, I referred that matter to the Nicholas Power Company and it has been sent.

First License Card in Jersey.

James F. Cripps, Digby, Nova Scotia, says:

> Am mailing you one of my 1916 calendars today. You may recollect meeting me, I think it was 1909 or 1910. At that time you suddenly appeared upon the scene at which was then Keith and Proctor's Jersey City theater, and when after showing you over the house Mr. Hughes, the manager, brought you to the operating room, and when he introduced you as Mr. Richardson I nearly fell off the stool. I was at that time chief operator in that particular house, and am glad to say you gave my work your approval. When you first started your dope in the department, I could not get you at all, but I've had your number for quite a long time now, and, by the way, it is not 23 either. I follow the department very closely, and on several occasions have been able to adjust some of my troubles through reading of the experiences of others. It may interest you to know that I hold the first license card issued in Jersey City, secured it in 1911, just before I left for this field. I have made good, and attribute that fact to knowing how to get a good picture and to be able to locate my troubles with regard to projection. The managing end (I am now manager of the Bijou Dream, this city), came easy. I could go on writing for pages, but know you must be a very busy man. However, it seems as though I were writing to a very old friend. Yes, I belonged to the union while in New York. In closing let me wish you a bright and prosperous New Year.

Yes, Brother Cripps, as it happens, I remember that visit very well indeed, because Manager Hughes was the brother of a personal friend of mine who lives in Stroudsburg, Pa. I also remember the beautiful theater and the, at that time, very excellent projection—meaning that the projection was very good indeed, judged by the standards of that period. It is just barely possible that you may receive a visit from me next summer. Mrs. Richardson was born and raised at Centerville, N. S., just a few miles from Digby. She has relatives living in both Centerville and Digby. Next summer I expect to make a Co-devil trip via Montreal and Quebec to Gaspe Point, which is some little distance this side of Labrador, returning, always providing the roads will allow of it (a proposition I am not at all certain of as yet), through Nova Scotia. That, however, is still a matter for speculation. Maybe so; maybe not.

The calendar is a beauty. Many thanks.

Yes, when I get letters from operators, particularly the old timers, I myself feel as though they come from a personal friend, and expect on very rare occasions these letters are from friends, too. I am glad you boys feel that way about it. I certainly have tried to the very limit of my ability to be your real friend. The pressure to take a "popular" course which I felt very certain would not, in the long run, be in the interest of the operator, has often been very strong, but I have stood out against it, and in every instance have done exactly what I thought was in the ULTIMATE best interest of the men. You fellows can believe that or disbelieve it, as you will, but your belief will not, and cannot, change the fact. Many times in the past I have received abuse from short-sighted ones who did not have a broad, comprehensive view of the situation, because I took some action they thought was against the interest of the operator, or did not take some action they thought ought to be taken, only to find these same men, later on, apologizing and patting me on the back, freely admitting that I had done exactly the right thing. You see, gentlemen, here in this office of mine I have a view, through correspondence with theater managers and operators, and through personal touch with big men in the business, of the entire field of the moving picture industry, in-so-far as pertains to projection and things allied thereto, therefore I am perhaps in as good a position as any one man to be able to judge of what is really in the interest of the operator, or to decide what is likely to work out to his interest in the end. The individual operator, even through he be on the road, cannot possibly have any such view of the entire field as this. The view of the heads of the organization is of necessity more or less warped by individual desire and interest, as is also that of the heads of the various exhibitors' leagues. I, however, have no interest in the world to serve, except the best good of the moving picture machine operator and the projection end of the moving picture industry. My position does not depend on any body's vote, or on anything else except doing my work well, and I am fortunate in being connected with a paper which will back me to the limit so long as I am right, and you can bet I am pretty careful not to go into a thing until I am sure I am right.

Well, I have gone a long ways afield in answering your letter, but one thing just leads to another. I started out talking to you, and wound up by talking to every operator in the United States and Canada, plus a considerable number in other countries.

Examining Board Appointed.

M. Nosti, Tampa, Florida, sends in answers to some of the questions, and says:

> I would like to compliment Mr. Hicks, proprietor and manager of the "Venus" theater, this city. Owing to the sudden illness of his operator I was sent to take charge of projection at the Venus. He runs four reels of Mutual to packed houses and although there was a big crowd waiting every night, he never once instructed me to "speed 'em up," but, on the other hand, told me to run them at proper speed, which I have tried to the best of my ability to do.
> At last the examining board has been appointed. It consists of two operators, and the city electrician, one of the operators being a member of the local, Mr. E. G. Kemp, and the other a moving picture theater manager, Mr. Ed. F. Kane, who carries motion picture machine operator's licenses from several cities, including Savannah, and Atlanta, Ga., and Jacksonville, Fla. We are to be examined next week. Later on I will let you know how things are progressing. Attached find clippings from local paper. In closing I wish you a happy and prosperous New Year, and all the success in the world. I also trust we shall see at least as great an improvement and advancement in the projection during the coming year as we have in the past.

My compliments to Manager Hicks. Evidently he is a real manager and not a mere imitation. The clipping referred to speaks of the school the local is conducting for the benefit of its members, and comments on the good accomplished by such a course.

It appears to me that the examining board ought to be a very efficient body. A licensed operator who is also now a manager, a member of the local union, and the city electrician. I think we cannot quarrel with that proposition very much. I will be very glad indeed to have a report, either private or for publication as to how the combination works. I might add that Brother Nosti is teacher in the school; also the clipping says he is an enthusiast in unionism.

Resistance Question.

Frank Welsh, Springfield, Massachusetts, asks:

> Would you kindly advise me as to the formula used for finding the amperes at the arc when there are two 110 volt rheostats connected in series, and again in multiple on a 220 volt line, A.C. and D.C.

The Handbook, Brother Walsh, sets that matter forth very fully. However, for your benefit, here it is as briefly as I can put it. In order to get the precise amperage, it would be necessary that the arc voltage be measured with a voltmeter, because the amperage will depend not alone when the rheostative resistance, but when the sum of the rheostative and the arc resistance and the latter varies considerably, and sometimes quite rapidly, according to the carelessness the operator displays in handling his light. For the purpose of calculating arc resistance, it is therefore necesary to either measure or assume an arc voltage, and I have selected 35 as the average A.C. arc voltage, and 48 as the average D.C. arc voltage, although the former may vary between 30 and 37, or even as much as 40, whereas the latter may vary anywhere between 45 and an extreme of 60. In building a rheostat to work on a projection circuit, manufacturers take the foregoing into consideration, and the resistance of a rheostat is calculated to offer a sufficient amount of resistance when working in conjunction or in series with the resistance of a projection arc, to deliver a certain given number of amperes, say, for instance, 40. The formula therefore is, voltage minus drop across the arc divided by ance equals amperes. Now let us put this into practice according to your question, assuming a 40 ampere rheostat; 110 volts—48 (average D.C. arc voltage) =62, and 62÷40 (amperage) equals practically 1½ ohms, which is the resistance contained in a rheostat working in conjunction with a D.C. arc delivering 40 amperes thereto, qualified by the fact that due to variation in arc voltage this is only approximate. Now to get at your question. Two 40 ampere rheostats would therefore have 1½+1½=3 ohms resistance, and the arc itself would, according to ohms' law, offer a resistance equal to 48÷40=1 1/5 ohms, therefore with two 40 ampere rheostats hitched in series with a projection arc we would have a total of 3+1 1/5=4 1/5 ohms resistance, and your problem simply revolves itself into how many amperes would we get with a 4 1/5 ohms opposed to 220 volts. Voltage divided by ohms gives amperes, therefore 220÷4.2 equals a little more than 52 amperes—above the capacity of the rheostat you will observe. This is by reason of the fact that there is only one arc, whereas each rheostat is made to work against he resistance of a separate arc. The thing can be figured out precisely the same way for alternating current, using 35 instead of 48. As to D.C. and A.C. there is no difference except that the wire coil resistance offers a slight inductive resistance when used on alternating current. This, however, cannot, I think, be figured out; it would have to be measured.

Impossible Questions.

J. A. Vetter, Stanton, Iowa, says:

> I am going into the moving picture game, and I would like to ask a question or two. In your opinion what is the best for results—a mercury arc rectifier or rotary converter, also which is the easier to handle; also which is the best current saver? (If I answered those questions in the department, Brother Vetter, the advertising department would come over and reduce me to a mere grease spot; also all manufacturers except the one whose device I recommended would promptly join the ranks of the enemy.—Ed). What length of throw do you think would give best results, or does the distance make any difference? Am building a new theater, and would be very thankful for any advice you would give.

Yes, the distance makes a very considerable difference, as does also the size of the picture. In the first place, with a picture not larger than say 16 feet, it makes little difference in results as between a 60-foot and a 100, or even 125-foot throw, always provided your lens system is properly matched up. When you have a very short throw, however, say under 50 feet, with a good sized picture, you are obliged to use a short focal length lens, and under those conditions the results will for several reasons, not be the best. I would suggest, if you can get it, that 75 feet is an almost ideal distance, always assuming the picture is not to be more than 16 feet wide, of course. As to the size of the picture, you must remember that with a 16-foot picture the photograph in the aperture of the machine is magnified about two hundred times, and in area it is magnified more than thirty thousand times (I have not stopped to figure it out, but it is more than thirty thousand), and the magnification of any defect in a film is in precisely the same proportion, so that it will be very much more visible in a large picture than it is in a small one; also the light requirements for a given brilliancy increase very rapidly with the size of the picture. I don't know what the size of your house is, or what kind of house it is supposed to be, but assuming it to be an ordinary small-town theater, seating say two or three hundred, I do not think you need anything larger than a 16-foot picture, and if you propose to save on current you had better reduce it to 14 feet. In this connection the type of screen is of much importance.

Not Through Lack of Interest.

J. H. Pooley, Toledo. O., says:

> Enclosed find my reply to question 119. It is my first answer, though not through lack of interest, as I have been following the questions carefully. I believe this to be a great work, and that all the men will soon be able to see the benefit to them personally. I have my lens system matched as recommended by the tables and am getting excellent results. Am anxious to see the new Handbook, as my old one is very nearly worn out through constant use.

All of which, I think, requires no comment, other than to say that the men are being benefitted, whether or not they realize or admit it.

Amberlux Lenses.

The more the writer examines into the performances of the "Amberlux Lens" the more he is convinced that it has considerable genuine merit. It is one of the few moderate priced things that seem to really deliver the goods, in that it softens the light without destroying its brilliancy. As I have many times pointed out, the attempt to soften the light by means of coloring the condensing lenses is not a good proposition, nor have I ever agreed with the tinting of screen surfaces, but the Amberlux lens seems to obtain the desired result without objectionable cutting of light brilliancy.

THE NEW HANDBOOK.

In reply to many inquiries received from our friends, we beg to announce that the third edition of the Motion Picture Handbook will be ready for mailing to purchasers early in March. The price has not yet been determined.

Definite information as to price and exact publication date will be given in an early issue.

An Electrician on the Cause of Static.

S. E. Shaw, Buffalo, N. Y., sends a very sensible article on static and its cause. He says:

> After reading George Lawrence's article on Static, I am inclined to believe that his theory about the "current in the human body" is entirely incorrect and his mistake is due to a misunderstanding of static electricity.
> In the first place there can be no current in the body in this connection and at the best is only a static charge. The human body is in contact with the ground and any charge in it would be immediately equalized by the ground, so it could not possibly become connected with the film in any way. His observations are dependent on climatic conditions. Dampness is the worst enemy to the formation of static charges, and in his article he mentions the fact that he cannot use X-back film because of the dampness of his locality, which is probably responsible for his good fortune with static.
> Static cannot be formed by friction except by friction of two dissimilar non-conductors. By non-conductors I mean substances which have a high dielectric strength. I do not believe that a static charge could form on the emulsion side of the film, because there is enough silver in the emulsion to carry off any charges which would tend to form. The film in passing through the velvet of the magazine is charged on the back side. As it approaches the nearest metal part, the difference in potential between the film and the metal part causes a spark to jump which in turn does the dirty work. The nearest metal part is really connected with the ground, through the tripod. This does not agree with the general opinion that is prevalent with your correspondents, but, nevertheless, it is a fact that the wood of the tripod is a fairly good conductor, and enough in most cases to carry the charge to the ground. For this reason I do not believe that a brass handle has much influence on static. It may be possible, however, that some tripods are made of such wood, so well seasoned and so well filled with shellac, etc., that they do not present a path for the "juice" and the brass handle in connection with the body offers a path. It is my opinion, though, that this would increase instead of decrease static.
> You speak of your experience in the Grand Canyon. Friction with the woolen carpet causes non-conductor parts of your body to become charged. As the woolen carpet is an insulator, the charge cannot escape. When you come near the door, the charge tries to find a way to the ground, and as a result, a spark jumps. This proves two things, first, that wood is a conductor of static electricity, and second, that there is no charged contained in the body due to any personal "magnetism." The same phenomena could not occur while standing on a floor or the earth. There are only two kinds of static electricity, viz., negative and positive. If a charge is piled up on any body, it will tend to become equalized when brought near an uncharged and comparatively infinitely large other body. Some claim that the tendency is for the body to have no charge at all, while others agree that the tendency is for the body to contain just as much negative charge as there is positive charge. In either case, the result is the same, the body is neutral.
> We are using an Ernemann B, and find that the best way is to keep the camera or film as damp as possible. The sprocket is close to the magazine, and the discharge shows that the sparks jump to the teeth of the roller, that is the outside edges of the film. Sometimes the sparks are crosswise. I believe that this is due to the film becoming charged in passing through the lower magazine, and jumping edgewise to the metal parts of the take up. There is undoubtedly something in having the camera of a uniform temperature by such means as freezing. The camera being warm, if it is taken into the cold, the celluloid being a poor conductor of heat, will remain at a different temperature from the metal parts of the camera and the velvet, which is possibly more favorable for the formation of charges.
> The above may not be the exact truth, but I believe that you will find it more so than most of the articles so far.

The Making of a Photographic Objective.

H. C. Lord, Professor of Astronomy at the Ohio State University, has written a very interesting brochure entitled "The Making of a Photographic Objective." It is a description of a course of applied optics offered at the Emerson McMillan Observatory of the Ohio State University.

Curiously enough, in spite of the fact that America at present leads the world in quantity if not in quality of lenses ground for a myriad purposes, there are no schools in the United States or England in which even the practical rudiments of the lens grinder's trade are taught.

Professor Silvanus P. Thompson in his inaugural address as President of the British Optical Convention held in London in 1912, states:

> In the universities and colleges the only people who are learning optics are merely taking it as a part of physics for the sake of passing an examination for a degree, and care nothing for the application of optics in the industries. They are being taught optics by men who are not opticians, who never ground a lens or calculated even an achromatic doublet, who never worked an opthalmoscope or measured a cylindrical lens. Further on he speaks as follows: What is wanted is an establishment where the whole atmosphere is one of optical interest; where theory and practice go hand in hand; where the mathematician will himself grind lenses and measure their performance on the test bench; where braincraft will be married to handcraft; where precision, whether in computation or workmanship, will be the dominating ambition.

There is practically no literature of any kind printed in English upon the practical craft of lens grinding and the brochure and course offered by Professor Lord will doubtless receive its just renown as the pioneer course in a little known subject.

While the cinematographer is naturally primarily interested only in photographic and projection objectives, it is interesting to note that in spite of its great magnitude and immense importance, it is only a small branch of the enormous production of spectacle, telescope, microscope, binocular, range finder, transit and level, and other precision instrument lens grinding industries.

War conditions have cut the former large importation of foreign ground lenses to almost nothing and given an undreamed of impetus to the American lens grinding industry.

The making of optical glass which has been almost entirely a foreign product has assumed a new aspect to American glass manufacturers, and while our native glass works have not yet been able to approach the quality of foreign optical glass, there has been a great improvement and it is not unlikely that they will soon be able to equal, if not surpass, their foreign competitors.

Optical glass is nothing more than a very perfect kind of glass which has been exquisitely annealed. You are all familiar with the intense green of window glass when seen edgewise; a piece of white paper will hardly be changed in color when seen through twelve inches of a good optical crown. The best optical glass is not made in this country, but must be purchased from either Schott & Genossen of Jena or Mantois of France. The Jena glass has become very celebrated and most of the lens makers state that their lenses are made out of it, and as a consequence most people thing that Jena glass means a certain kind, while, as a matter of fact, their catalogue of 1909 shows about seventy different varieties. These differ in optical qualities and chemical composition, and cost from about a dollar to five dollars a pound, with a few special varieties costing as much as fifteen dollars.

A Beginner.

Lewis Wener, Canada, writes:

> Enclosed find a piece of negative film which is the first I ever took in my life. It is a street scene. I developed it in a Kodak film tank, and used the same chemicals which I used to develop my Kodak films. I just wanted to try it. How is it? It's on Eastman stock. Also would like to have you tell me where I could get the daylight negative loading film.

Mr. Wener sends a very creditable sample of an exterior scene which is very good indeed for a first attempt. He would have had even better results if he had mixed up developer according to the formula furnished in each box of Eastman stock.

It is not probable that you can obtain Daylight Loading stock at the present time on account of the war, but if there is any to be had, it may be purchased of the Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, N. Y.

Why not load your magazine at night or use a changing bag and avoid paying the extra price for Daylight spools?

Music for the Picture

Conducted by Clarence E. Sinn and S. M. Berg

Inquiries.

QUESTIONS concerning any phase of the work of the orchestral leader in a photoplay theater may be addressed to the Moving Picture World and the answers of Mr. Berg will appear in a Question and Answer Department, which will be a regular feature of our Music Page.

MUSICAL SETTING FOR "SILAS MARNER."

(Released by the Mutual Film Corporation, Feb. 19.)

Suggestions prepared by S. M. Berg (by special arrangements with G. Schirmer, Inc., Music Publishers, New York).

This "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is intended as a partial solution of the problem of what to play for the picture and to assist in overcoming that chaotic condition encountered when the film is not available until almost the hour of showing, resulting in the first performance being a mere rehearsal.

For the benefit of those readers of the Moving Picture World who are exhibitors of Mutual films the following suggestions for an accompaniment to "Silas Marner" were prepared by the photoplay department of G. Schirmer, Inc. This advance publication will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film story he is to portray with his orchestra.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will assist the leader in anticipating the various cues, which may consist of the printed sub-title (marked T) or by a described action (marked D).

The story is laid in England and the principal character is Silas Marner, a weaver, who in his youth was falsely accused of thievery which had been placed upon his head by a friend he trusted. Embittered with life he lives alone, weaving continually, loving nothing but his hoarded gold. When it is stolen from him he is inconsolable until Eppie, a little child whose mother died, comes into his life. The little one grows up, adding sunshine to the old man's life, until she reaches womanhood. The picture closes with Silas happy in his old age.

Note particularly Church Scene 7½, Rain Storm 62½, Flashes of Virginia Reel 76 to 81½.

The theme selected is "A Love Song," Bartlett.

Time schedule: seven reels (about 6,940 feet) 105¾ minutes.

Time.		Sub-Titles or Descriptive Cues.	Music.
0	D	Opening.	The Force of Destiny Overture—Verdi.
5½	T	"To think that I have loved you since you were a child."
6¼	T	A false friend.	A Love Song—Bartlett. (Allegretto.)
7½	T	On Sunday morning. (Church scene.)	(Theme.)
10	D	When the congregation leaves the church.	Organ Solo.
13	T	"You escort Sarah home. The Deacon is ill."	Repeat: A Love Song. (Theme.)
17½	D	When Silas leaves the Deacon's cottage.	Enchanted Hour—Mouton. (Andantino.)
20	T	In the morning.	Misterioso No. 1.*
25	T	Silas is tried by the members of the congregation.	Nocturne—Karganoff. (Andante non tanto.)
26¾	T	"Brethren, if the spirit tells you that Silas Marner is guilty."
28	T	"False friend and false sweetheart."	Repeat: A Love Song. (Theme.)
29½	T	Silas Marner establishes himself.
32½	T	As the years pass.	Dialogue—Helmund. (Andante con moto.)
35	T	"My mother once had such a sickness as yours."
38	T	After several doses.	Romance—Karganoff. (Andante sostenuto.)
39¼	T	"I haven't time to doctor the whole village."
41¼	T	The Squire's elder son.	Inspiration—Edwards. (Andante.)
42¾	T	"You'd better not let father see you in this condition."
46	T	Some weeks later.	Intermezzo—Huerter. (Moderato grazioso.)
47	T	Molly the barmaid.
49	T	"How would you like to marry."	Le Retour—Bizet. (Allegro vivace.)
50¼	T	In the morning.
54	T	"Shall I tell her of your—"	Spring Flowers—Wood. (Andante.)
55	T	As the months pass.
57	T	"You ain't sent me much money."	Repeat: A Love Song. (Theme.)
58	D	The hunt meet.	Allegro vivace No. 1.*
59¾	D	When Dunstan leaves the dead horse.	Hurry No. 1.*
66	T	"Some stray peddler must have stolen the gold."
66½	T	"Poor old man. He's daft now sure."	Repeat: A Love Song. (Theme.)
68¾	T	"I'd rather die than acknowledge—"
69	T	On Christmas day two years later.	Peace on Earth (Hymn).
70	D	Church bells ringing.
71½	T	On New Year's Eve the Squire entertains.	Minuetto—Beethoven.
74	T	"I wish you wouldn't make us—"
76	D	At the ball.	Virginia Reel.
77½	T	When Molly falls in the snow.	Repeat: A Love Song. (Theme.)
79	A	"My gold! My dear lost gold!"
80	D	At the Ball. (Flash only.)
81¼	T	"You will find the Doctor at the Squire's."	Serenade—Rubinstein. (Allegretto.)
81½	D	At the Ball. (Flash only.)
83¾	T	"No, it came to me. I have a right to keep it."
85	D	When Silas returns to the cottage with the Doctor.	Repeat: A Love Song. (Theme.)
85½	T	"You are poor and I am rich."
86¼	T	Three years later.	Idilio—Lack. (Allegretto grazioso.)
90	T	The Squire's elder son is wed.
90½	T	"Would you be willing to adopt that child?"	Arabian Night—Mildenberg. (Andante sostenuto.)
94¼	T	"I wish to speak to you."	Repeat: A Love Song. (Theme.)
94¾	T	"Here I Is Daddy."
96	T	On a Sunday morning ten years later.	Evening Twilight—Hallen. (Andante.)
99	T	"I am having the old stone-pit drained."
101¼	T	"This solves the mystery—"	Evening quietude—Kretschmer. (Molto tranvillo.)
102½	T	Everything comes to light.
104	T	Your adopted daughter is my child and I have come—	Repeat: A Love Song. (Theme.)
105¾	T	The End.

NOTE: For the convenience of readers of the Moving Picture World a price list of the numbers suggested in the above cue-sheet is to be found in G. Schirmer's advertisement on page 1371.

Misrepresentation.

By S. M. BERG.

ALL eyes are now turned upon the motion picture industry. A few days ago President Woodrow Wilson was the guest and principal speaker at the first annual dinner of the Motion Picture Board of Trade. The President's bride, formerly Mrs. Norman Galt, also honored the affair with her presence, and among the other guests were supreme court judges, governors, senators, representatives and authorities on science, religion and education. Also a certain small but energetic coterie of politicians and professional reformers anxious to clean our pictures and possibly in doing so impart some of their own purity and godliness to the legion of famous artists of Europe and America who are portraying their masterpieces before the film. And withal, certain well-known New York politicians admitted that next to politics, motion pictures was a very thriving industry.

In the heart of all this great enterprise there is, however, a malignant, cancerous growth which, unless uprooted and cast out, will set back and crush those high aspirations and ideals that so many are striving to maintain. Misrepresentation is this disease, and many are the sufferers.

The manufacturer starts the ball a'rolling by making such blatant statements to the public as "The director has been secured at a princely salary, the temperamental star has been guaranteed a percentage of the bookings, $50,000 has been spent for the settings, which will be burned to ashes in the closing scene," or "A yacht has been purchased for $25,000 and will be fired to produce a sensation." A certain press sheet describing a late release stated: "Thousands of men, women and children flounder helplessly in the water." "A sensational and realistic train crash produced at an expense of $40,000," which probably was a studio production with toy trains.

A director producing a modern society drama presents as an allegory a nude woman, depicting shame and anguish, which is seized upon as a fitting poster to advertise this triumphant production. They announce that a popular actress is starred in the film and create the impression that she is to appear thus. The people overcome by curiosity flock to the theaters and see a mediocre picture with a flash of the widely and brightly advertised "sensation." Preying upon curiosity and by keeping just within the pale of the censors they secured for their exhibitors crowded houses. Indeed, they showed, to a slight degree, what they advertised, but such methods of "pulling the crowd" are to be heartily condemned.

The exhibitor will tell the public that he shows ten reels of first run films. Enter the theater and listen to the remarks. Then judge for yourself. "Why, I saw this down town a month ago," and "Gee! they had this over to the 'Bullet Hole' last Sunday." Another theater's star announcement is "Symphony Orchestra." We pay our dime for admission, crane our necks and strain our eyes in vain, but, alas, "Symphony" has taken on a new meaning; viz.: violin, piano and drums.

For our patrons' amusement and for the better presentation of pictures we are installing a magnificent organ at a cost of $25,000.

$$\frac{$25{,}000}{X} = $5{,}000.$$ (In reality, no doubt.)

Step inside and get cooled down. Our ice plant now working.

(Two fans, and one out of condition.)

A well-known theater charging 25c and 50c admission and presenting an excellent entertainment of motion pictures advertises an orchestra of 40 musicians, which actually consists of the director, 20 musicians and a relief orchestra of three musicians, in all 24. Why this misstatement? Does it bring them any more business, or will it create disgust in a patron who will be curious enough to count the orchestra? Are we on a par with the traveling show that advertises "With a company of 80 people" when, including the ushers, stage hands and even the dressers, the total does not equal 80?

The foregoing are only a few of the many gross misrepresentations that are published daily, and they can only result in lowering the prestige which too few are striving for. It should be the task of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America to promptly devise ways and means of checking this great and growing evil, Misrepresentation.

"The Doings of George."

By S. M. BERG.

No doubt many readers at some time in the past have paid a visit to the late Victoria Theater at 42d street and Seventh avenue, New York City. Second only to the show itself was the director of the orchestra, George May, who half of New York would recognize by the back of his head without ever having spoken to him. For eleven years he acted as leader and first violinist until the day the theater was closed and operations were begun to tear it down in order to make way for S. L. Rothapfel's luxurious Rialto.

It was with some curiosity that the writer attended a performance at the Crescent Theater in Brooklyn, now renamed the Triangle, to learn how Director May would play pictures.

William H. Kemble is presenting Triangle films exclusively, and two performances are given daily, commencing at 2:15 and 8:15. The orchestra is seated in the pit and George has under his direction twenty musicians, the instrumentation consisting of four first and two second violins, viola, 'cello, bass, flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, trombone, two French horns, two trumpets, drums and tympani, and harp. Besides, a relief trio is provided for the comedies—banjo, violin and cymballist.

There is nothing temperamental about George, but results are his specialty. The applause received at the end of the orchestral selection clearly showed that the audience appreciated the music. The footnote on the program: "It will be a pleasure for Mr. George May, directing the Triangle orchestra, to render any selection during the intermission that may be requested by our patrons," demonstrates that Mr. May is out to make a bigger success playing the film than he did playing vaudeville. Manager Kemble did a good thing when he decided to "Let George do it," and "George is doing it, and doing it well."

VICTOR MOORE AND ANITA KING IN "THE RACE."

Victor Moore, one of the leading comedians of the American stage who has definitely retired from vaudeville and musical comedy to appear for an extended period in Lasky productions on the Paramount Program, will be the star in a new production now under way, entitled "The Race." Anita King, who traveled across the country last autumn from the Pacific to the Atlantic by herself in an automobile as the Paramount Girl, will be featured with Mr. Moore in this production. This is a happy continuation of star and leading woman, as Mr. Moore and Miss King made individual and united successes in the photoplay entitled "Snobs."

"The Race" is founded to some extent on Miss King's adventures in her transcontinental tour. Many of the exciting episodes which happened during that eventful trip were photographed and will be incorporated in the story.

Victor Moore, as a comedian of the screen, has already won for himself a place among the favored few. His first Lasky production was as the star in "Snobs." This was followed by his appearance in "Chimmie Fadden" and subsequently in the second of a series "Chimmie Fadden Out West."

Gazelle Marche

GAZELLE MARCHE, the charming young actress who takes the leading feminine role in "Should a Baby Die?", was born in Utica, N. Y., nineteen years ago. Her early girlhood was spent in the middle west and south. Outdoor life was one of the principal pastimes for the younger element, which accounts for Miss Marche's being an expert in riding, swimming and shooting. These qualities being recognized by friends, she was advised on coming to New York some eighteen months ago to endeavor to secure an engagement with one of the picture producers. Her wonderful blonde hair and contrast of dark eyes was at once recognized by the Biograph Company as having an excellent photographic value. Combined with the requirements her ability to ride and swim, they gave her the first opportunity.

Gazelle Marche.

Five months at that studio under one director gave her a wonderful insight as an actress. On account of being permanently located in New York, she was compelled to refuse the Biograph's offer when her company was sent to the Coast, but she immediately was chosen for the cast in the feature production of "The Valley of the Missing," produced by Wm. Fox. Shortly afterwards, Theodore Wharton induced Miss Marche to play the part of Innocent Inez in "The Exploits of Elaine." This wonderful serial brought out Miss Marche's true dramatic ability, after which she was much sought for by producers as their lead in several feature productions.

Thus was Miss Marche's good work recognized when Chas. K. Harris was casting for the feature production, "Should a Baby Die?" The manner in which she has handled her part in this feature proves success is hers.

Miss Marche is the niece of the late Senator Hoar and a great-granddaughter of Sir Edgar Bound of England.

MR. BERST REORGANIZES PATHE DEPARTMENTS.

J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, has re-arranged to some extent the various departments of the business. W. A. S. Douglas becomes director of production and leaves shortly for the Pacific Coast, where he will supervise in the Balboa studios the making of a new serial. P. Allen Parsons is manager of publicity and advertising, with Bertram Millhauser and Harry J. Walsh as assistants. George A. Smith becomes manager of publicity on serials, with H. W. Francis, formerly of the Pathe News, as his assistant. E. J. O'Connor remains in charge of the poster department. All of these departments will, of course, receive the personal attention of Mr. Berst.

RAVER BECOMES PRESIDENT ITALA COMPANY.

At a special meeting of the board of directors of the Itala Film Company Harry R. Raver, former secretary and treasurer of the corporation, was elected president and treasurer, the office of secretary being given to D. J. McGowan.

Mr. Raver's connection with the Itala Company dates back four years during which time he successfully directed and managed its American and Canadian affairs. "Cabiria," D'Annunzio's great film spectacle, was exploited under his management, this being the first motion picture presented in this country at a two dollar admission and proved the stepping stone to the successful presentation of high-class pictures in first grade theaters.

LINCOLN JOINS LUBIN.

E. K. Lincoln, the former Vitagraph star, and featured in "The Littlest Rebel" and many other noteworthy productions, has joined the Lubin Company at their Philadelphia studios as leading man and will appear in their feature releases. Mr. Lincoln will be seen in the near future with Ethel Clayton in a play by Shannon Fife entitled "Ophelia."

Mutual Program

Three Masterpictures of Good Character and Several Shorter Productions for Week of February 21.

THE Gaumont (Mutual) company will lead off the Mutual releases of the week of February 21, with the Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition, featuring Alexander Gaden in "I Accuse."

The Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition, of that week to follow this production will be "The Oval Diamond," and "The Craving." The first is from the Thanhouser studios, and features Barbara Gilroy and Harris Gordon. The second is an American Film Company production and has in its leading roles William Russell and Helene Rosson.

"I Accuse," has a striking and complicated plot. The tale weaves itself around a young judge, who finds it necessary, though very distasteful to himself, to condemn the father of the girl he loves to prison. Added to the dramatic tensity of this situation, is the fact that the father is a clergyman, the loved and revered shepherd of a village flock. Jealousy and intrigue form many of the serious complications which work themselves out in an unexpected manner.

"The Oval Diamond," the Thanhouser five-reeler, is a detective story, filled with thrills from the moment "Robert" (Harris Gordon) discovers something mysterious about the pretty girl (Barbara Gilroy) he sees secluded in the garden neighboring his uncle's house, until the two escape, wed and are prepared to "be happy ever after" with the oval diamond safe in the young husband's pocket.

"The Craving" is an exceptionally strong and interesting drama founded on the struggle of a young man to suppress an inborn desire for strong drink. Psychologists disagree as to whether or not such craving can be transmitted from one generation to another, but whether they agree or whether they do not in no way affects the interest which this plot creates.

In addition to these three Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition, the Mutual Film Corporation has some excellent photoplay of shorter length scheduled for release during that week.

"Life's Harmony" is a three reel American drama, picturing a quiet little New England village. There is the village organist, who is also a music teacher, "Josiah Pringle" (George Periolat), who must give place for a younger man with new fangled ideas "Gordon Howard" (Alfred Vosburgh). There is the village choir. There are all the little homely touches which appeal to the hearts of all those who have ever been in any village. Frank Borzage, the director of this picture, has succeeded in making an admirable photodrama out of the simple theme. This will appear on Tuesday, February 22.

Wednesday, a three-part Thanhouser drama entitled, "The Reunion," and featuring J. D. Gilmore and George Marlo will appear. This is a romance of the civil war. It is a story of a young girl who went with the army as a red cross nurse and of a young soldier, who met on the battlefield. They were separated by the exigencies of war, and it was after fifty years of waiting that they were reunited again. J. L. Gilmore plays the role of the old veteran, Isolde Illian as "Martha," the pretty war nurse.

Anna Little and Thomas Chatterton will appear to advantage in the American three-reel feature, "Double Crossed," which will be released on Friday. This western story is filled with thrilling incident, not the least of which is a runaway train stopped on the verge of destruction as it thunders down a long slide. Thomas Chatterton directed the picture, at the same time he played the leading role.

Comedy releases for the week of February 21, include "Ruth's Remarkable Reception," a Falstaff funny picture, featuring Francis Keyes and Jay Yorke; "Too Much Married," a "Beauty," with Carol Halloway and John Sheehan in the leads; "Perkin's Peace Party," a Falstaff featuring Louise Emerald Bates and Walter Hiers, and "Cooking His Goose," a Beauty, with the funny English comedian "Orral Humphrey."

The usual Mutual Weekly and "See America First—Keeping Up With the Joneses" releases will appear on Thursday and Sunday.

GOLDBURG SEVERS CONNECTION WITH OCEAN FILM.

Jesse J. Goldburg, the organizer and heretofore vice-president and general manager of the Ocean Film Corporation, has severed his connection with that organization, commencing the week ending February 12.

More Bluebird Branch Managers

General Manager Hoffman Adds More Hustlers to His Already Large Staff.

GENERAL MANAGER HOFFMAN'S appointments have demonstrated the excellent judgment that has made him so successful as an executive and verifies the correctness of decision Bluebird promoters arrived at in turning over to Mr. Hoffman the entire control of their productions. To previous announcements of a few of Mr. Hoffman's appointments the following are to be added:

C. Hague, of Toronto, has been given general charge for the Dominion with central offices in Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Calgary, Vancouver, Regina and St. John. Messrs. Byerle and Taube are managing the Montreal office. E. A. Langley is visiting exhibitors in association with the Toronto office.

Over in Philadelphia V. R. Carrick is pushing the Bluebird proposition with marked success attending his efforts. The distribution in Eastern Pennsylvania, District of Columbia, Delaware and Maryland is in the hands of the Fairmount Feature Film Exchange. Robert Lynch has been appointed general traveling representative in that territory. He was until recently, manager of the Electric Theater Supply Co., in Philadelphia.

Buffalo and contiguous territory is in charge of J. M. Ryan, who is making excellent progress in a territory filled with strong opposition. Denver and the inter-mountain territory is under the supervision of Carl Stearn, who has secured the best houses in Colorado for Bluebirds. In Denver, Mr. Stearn made a noteworthy conquest of the Tabor Grand Opera House, for many decades the leading legitimate theater of the city. Under the direction of the veteran manager, Pete McCort, all great stars of the drama have appeared upon its stage in the life-time of the house. The Tabor Grand started to exhibit pictures with Bluebirds and gives them a three days showing.

Indianapolis has another hustler in O. W. Moore, who is working Indiana's fruitful exhibition field with remarkable success. San Francisco and surrounding territory is in charge of Chas. I. Luntz, who is making fine progress in one of the hardest fields in the country. The Portola theater and the Turner & Dahnken Circuit were among Mr. Luntz's first contracts, and other prominent exhibitors are fast falling into line.

Lois Wilson

THE Universal Film Manufacturing Company is famous for contests. The "Handsomest Man in America" contest now on, is attracting nation-wide attention, before any one has forgotten the famous beauty contest last year. Least of all, has Lois Wilson forgotten it, as for her it was certainly the first step on the ladder to fame.

Lois Wilson.

"Just think," says Miss Wilson, "less than a year ago I was accountant in a business house in Birmingham, Ala. Every morning I went to my pokey old desk, never dreaming what the future had in store. Then suddenly, I was chosen by a committee of prominent men in our state as winner of the Universal Beauty Contest in Alabama, and life began for me. En route, with the other 'beauties,' we stopped to watch the production of 'The Peasant Girl of Portici,' Anna Pavlowa's great picture, being made in Chicago, under the expert direction of Louis Weber. Thank goodness, Mrs. Smalley happened to catch a glimpse of me, and thought she could use my type. I was 'in pictures' almost before I knew it, and now, although I can hardly believe it myself, here I am, leading woman for Warren Kerrigan! I am really the happiest girl in America, as well as the luckiest!"

Universal Has New Technical Director

H. H. Barter, in Charge at Universal City, a Man of Wide Experience in His Field of Endeavor.

H. H. BARTER, the new head of the Technical Department at Universal City, has had a wide experience in the electrical and engineering world that adequately qualifies him for any of the numerous problems that confront his department in the course of a day's business at the capital of the film world.

The new technical director graduated from the University of Illinois at Champagne and shortly thereafter went west and entered upon railroad work in the State of Washington and in Alaska. For seven years he was in the employ of Stone and Webster, an engineering corporation of Boston, distributing and erecting steam and hydro-electric plants in the western Pacific states.

Barter, who is a member of the American Society of Civil Engineers, planned and installed the electric distributing system on the grounds of the Alaska-Yukon Pacific exposition at Seattle in 1909, and at the same time managed the business of the Seattle Electric Company which had the contract for furnishing the distributing system to the exposition in 1914.

Barter went to San Diego to take charge of the illuminating and electrical engineering work of the Panama-California exposition. He designed and installed the entire illuminating system of the big fair and also installed the electrical system of the Southern California show.

In March, 1915, Barter became director of works of the exposition upon the resignation of F. P. Allen. Barter remained with the exposition until the first of January this year, rounding out the full period which he was asked to serve.

Upon the decision of President Davidson and the other officials of the exposition to extend the fair for another year, Barter was asked to continue as the head of the department of work, but he declined, having decided to accept the offer of H. O. Davis, vice-president and general manager of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, to become technical director for the big motion picture company at Universal City.

Barter joined the Universal staff about the middle of January and his systematic way of transacting business already has assisted very materially in expediting the weekly product of the Pacific Coast studios of the company.

SIGNING UP FOR MUTUAL.

The Strand Theater Company has closed a contract with the Mutual Film Corporation for Mutual Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition, beginning Feb. 27. This contract is for top run service to the Strand theater in Indianapolis, the premier house of Indiana. The contract was closed on the occasion of the recent visit of John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, to Chicago, where he was in conference with E. C. Devine, president of the Strand Theater Company. The details of the transition of the Strand program to Mutual feature service were worked out there and the deal closed. Prior to this announcement there were many rumors in Chicago and film offices serving that territory about the impending change at the Strand which holds a commanding position as the most famous picture house in that territory.

Public Service Film Company

New Comer in the Field Secures World's Rights to the Five-Reel Spectacular Drama "Defense or Tribute."

Two old New Yorkers well known in the theatrical life of the city have recently entered the film field and incorporating under the name of the Public Service Film Company they have established offices at 1482 Broadway. The new comers in filmdom are Joseph Leblang and his associate, A. L. Jones. Mr. Leblang who is a self-made man in the fullest sense of the word, has achieved success solely by his own efforts. Mr. Jones has been connected with Mr. Leblang in his various enterprises in the show world and both men are popular in their chosen fields.

Joseph Leblang.

The first essay of the Public Service Film Company was the purchase of the eastern rights of the Chicago Tribune in the authentic scenes from European battle fields. These pictures have had a great success not only in New York, but likewise in Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and elsewhere. The new corporation announces that it has now secured the world's rights to a monster five-reel historical and spectacular drama entitled "Defense or Tribute." The film visualizes the evils of unpreparedness in the light of past history. The watch words of the new corporation are integrity and quality. Mr. J. P. Collins, well-known in the film world in connection with his exploitation of "Dante's Inferno" in the state of Pennsylvania, is the general manager of the new corporation. Mr. Collins' energy and business acumen are well known in the film world and make him a valuable asset to the Public Service Company.

A. L. Jones.

STRONG CAST FOR "THE HAUNTED MANOR."

That Gaumont is sparing no expense to make "The Haunted Manor" a feature of unusual strength is evidenced by the remarkable cast placed at the disposal of Director Edwin Middleton. The stellar role being that of an adventuress, Miss Iva Shepard has been cast for the part. In her support are the following players, Gertrude Robinson, Earl O. Schenck, Henry W. Pemberton, Mathilde Baring, Robert Clugston, Olive Trevor, James Levering, John Mackin, and Harry Chira.

E. S. MARTIN BOOKS GAUMONT PLAYERS.

Any motion picture actor or legitimate player not wishing to work for the Gaumont Company must keep out of the way of John S. Martin. Mr. Martin sits in Gaumont's New York office and plays spider for thespian flies. Sooner or later they are caught in his web, and usually it is sooner rather than later. With Miss Marguerite Courtot's capture, he established a record for big game.

TANDY RETURNS FROM PLEASURE TRIP.

C. E. Tandy, manager of the Southern Paramount Pictures Corporation, and S. A. Lynch, both of Atlanta, Ga., returned to New York after having spent two weeks in Cuba. After conferring with the officers of the Paramount Pictures Corporation in New York City, he left for the South.

DEATH TAKES DE ROSSELLI'S SISTER.

Rex de Rosselli of the Universal Company was notified by telegraph this week of the death from pneumonia of his sister, Marguerita de Rolf, at Peoria, Ill. Only a year ago last Christmas the latter's husband, who had been associated with Mumm's at Paris, passed away.

The Week's Vitagraphs

Popular Players Will Be Featured in the Offerings for the Week of February 21.

ANTONIO MORENO, Charles Kent, Leah Baird, Hughie Mack, Louise Beaudet, William Dangman, Van Dyke Brook and other Vitagraph players of prominence are to be seen in the releases of the week of February 21. The releases are "Kennedy Square," in five reels; "The Road of Many Turnings," in three parts, and two one-reel comedies, "Hughey, the Process Server," and "Freedy's Narrow Escape."

Scene from "Hughey, the Process Server" (Vitagraph).

In "Kennedy Square," a delightful tale of the South is disclosed. The picture was made from the novel by that name of F. Hopkinson Smith, produced under the capable direction of S. Rankin Drew and featuring Antonio Moreno and Charles Kent. The film is a Blue Ribbon feature in five parts, released February 21.

"The Road of Many Turnings," released on February 26, is a Broadway Star feature of unusual strength, produced under the direction of Van Dyke Brooke, featuring Leah Baird in a dual role. She is supported by Louise Beaudet, Emmanuel A. Turner, Gerald Gordon and others.

"Hughey, the Process Server," released February 21, gives Hughie Mack an excellent chance to display the comedy ability for which he is famed. Under the direction of Wally Van, Hughie endeavors to mix sleuthing with process serving and gets into many amusing situations.

William Dangman is to be seen in another of the "Freddy" series in a one-reeler produced by Frank Currier, entitled "Freddy's Narrow Escape," released February 25. Freddy aspires to become the son-in-law of a local judge and almost elopes with an old maid instead of his real sweetheart. How he escapes is told in an amusing vein by Edward Montagne, author of the comedy.

V-L-S-E OFFICE CHANGES.

From the home office of the V-L-S-E comes the announcement that a new sub-office has been opened at 204 St. Catherine street, Montreal, under the charge of H. W. McCullum. The sub-office at St. Louis has been changed to a regular branch and is under the management of S. W. Hatch.

The New York sales force has been augmented by the addition of M. Morrison and William H. Irvine. S. J. Mayor has been added to the Washington, D. C., force. R. Bins has joined the sales force at Philadelphia, and H. P. Allen has been advanced from shipper to booker in the Atlanta office.

IVA SHEPARD IN "THE TOUCHSTONE."

Miss Iva Shepard, who did excellent work as a vampire in the Gaumont Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition, "The Drifter," promises to reach vast dramatic heights in a startling, unusual role in Director Edwin Middleton's latest five reeler, "The Touchstone." Work has been recently started on the Masterpicture, De Luxe, at the Jacksonville Gaumont studio. Miss Shepard has in the leading part a splendid opportunity for the display of a colorful personality, intensely virile screen method, and a charm and strength of artistry rarely found in stage or screen leading women.

Pressmen Versus Agencies

Henry MacMahon Thinks the Former Should Be in Charge of Publicity Campaigns.

"INGENUITY or stupidity of press campaigns—other things being equal—spells success or failure," remarked Henry MacMahon, the publicity expert, the other day. "It is better to let a trained theatrical press agent handle your campaign than to entrust it to an advertising agency. The pressman is versed in all the ways of inducing people to pay for being entertained, whereas the advertising agency specializes in the marketing of commercial products and too frequently tries to apply its methods of selling soap or cheese or lard to the exploitation of art. Furthermore, the good pressman has the ear of the newspapers which is far more effectual than waving the big stick at them via the counting room. Putting the advertising agent in charge and making the pressman his understrapper is a most serious mistake. The biggest successes of Broadway and of the country generally have been won where the press representative has had a free hand."

Henry MacMahon.

Mr. MacMahon enjoyed the free hand he refers to in the Boston publicity campaign of "The Birth of a Nation," and as the special feature representative of the same production in New York. For the last six months he was the Triangle's press representative. Among the stage successes of recent years with which he was identified were "The Clansman," "Pomander Walk," "The Bluebird" and "The Story of the Rosary." He has worked at the dramatic desk, has contributed many signed articles to the magazines, and thus knows the journalistic angle as well as showmanship. Addressed care of this office, he will be glad to confer with heads of films, of organizations and with prominent exhibitors who desire real money-getting publicity.

Wilmuth Merkyl, New Petrova Leading Man

WILMUTH MERKYL, regarded as one of the foremost of the younger leading men of the stage or screen, has been engaged by Metro and will make his bow under Metro auspices in "The Soul Market," in which Mme. Petrova is starred. This is an original story, written by Aaron Hoffman, the well known playwright and author.

Mr. Merkyl had a long and varied career in grand opera and on the speaking stage, before he went into motion pictures. He was recently starred in "The Fortunate Youth," and before that was leading man for Helen Ware, in "The Price," Betty Nansen in "The Celebrated Scandal," Marguerite Clark, in "Gretna Green," and other notable productions.

Wilmuth Merkyl.

Mr. Merkyl made his professional debut in grand opera at the Royal Opera House in Berlin, and since adopting the stage, has appeared all over the world, playing several languages. He has appeared in India, China, Japan, South Africa, England, Australia, and in Canada and the States. He had the leading male singing role in "Adele," and appeared with Hazel Dawn in light musical comedy.

Berlin Letter

FILM Censorship in Germany is continually growing stricter. Preceding the war there were only two boards of censorship in the country, stationed at Berlin and Munich. Berlin exercised control over the whole of Germany, exclusive of Bavaria and the Bavarian Pfalz. These two districts received their censorship permits from Munich. Since that time, Wuerttemberg has established a censor-central at Stuttgart; films for the Rhein province and Westphalia are censored in Dusseldorf; Alsace-Lorraine kinemas cannot show pictures without a Strassburg permit, and Saxony is dependent upon the Leipzig censor, although no film is censored in the last-named city unless accompanied by a Berlin card. In addition to these main censors, practically every city, town and village in the country has established an independent board, which very often forbids films which have passed all of the main boards. Thus a film may have successful runs in every city in the country and finally strike a snag in the person of some village burgess. This gauntlet which every film is now required to run has caused manufacturers to exercise much more care in the making of films. Many producers even make some of their doubtful scenes twice—one for Germany, the other for some of the foreign countries which demand stronger moments.

Notwithstanding the added censor pressure, less films have been forbidden, owing to these precautions, than in the preceding year. This fact may be better emphasized by the following figures gleaned from the Munich board of censors, which has always been considered perhaps the most rigid in Germany. The Munich board, which in 1914 examined 4,173 films, in 1915 censored 3,525 pictures with a total length of 934,606 meters (approximately 3,115,350 feet). From this number, 3,184 films were passed, 117 partly forbidden and 224 entirely forbidden. The length of the forbidden films totals to 64,896 meters (216,320 feet). The forbidden pictures in 1915 amount to less than half of the number forbidden in the preceding year.

The censors at present especially discountenance detective films and to a great extent comedies, in particular such as direct the mind toward lower moral channels. War pictures—actual, dramatic and comic—are looked upon with favor, as are all educative pictures—nature, industrial and actual. Carefully prepared dramas and wholesome comedies are also assured of success with the central proofing boards.

The Nordische film, "Revolutionshochzeit," has been having a very successful run at the Union theaters. This film, taken from Sophus Michaelis's drama, well merits mention as one of the finest film dramas of the year. With an interesting plot as a basis, with elegant settings and beautiful outdoor scenes, as the Nordische so well understands these essentials, the film has been perfected by the splendid acting of Valdemar Psilander, Betty Nansen and Nicolai Johannsen. The plot is laid in France during the revolutionary period of 1793, and the entire presentation is so real that one may well imagine himself to be really living in this turbulent period.

The Atlantic Film Aarhus production, "Der Weg zum Guten," founded upon paragraph 51 of the German statutes book, passed the Berlin censor this week. The film, a criminal-physiological drama treating with the theory of heritage, has already been sold to a number of foreign countries and, according to reports received, is meeting with signal success. Parties who have seen this film are universal in acclaiming that it will be one of the season's biggest features. "Der Weg zum Guten" features Alfred Abel, who by his splendid play in this film has strengthened his hold upon the title of one of the country's greatest character actors.

The Mozart Lichtspiele on Nollendorfplatz presents this week a new Erna Morena film, "Der Weisse Tod" ("The White Death"). Again in this film Miss Morena shows her thorough knowledge of the film art. "The White Death" affords Miss Morena excellent opportunity for showing her ability, inasmuch as with her play two actors who measure up to even Miss Morena's possibilities. Heinz Salfner demonstrates that obtrusive mimicry is not necessary for successful character portrayal as shown on the screen. Hermann Wlack, while not so original as Mr. Salfner, brought out in a pleasing manner the fullest possibilities of his role. Beautiful Alpine scenery added to the charm of this finely enacted picture.

Two films worthy of mention are the Eichberg productions, "Robert als Lohengrin" ("Robert as Lohengrin") and "Das Tagebuch Collins" ("Collins' Diary"). "Robert als Lohengrin" features Berlin's most popular humorist, Robert Steidl, in a three-act comedy which shows Berlin's favorite laugh-maker at his best. "Das Tagebuch Collins" is an interesting criminal romance in which an innocent man is accused of murdering his friend. Through the clever work of the prisoner's sweetheart the guilty parties are uncovered. Praise is due to Miss Ellen Richter for her splendid interpretation of the fiery Spanish dancer about whom the plot revolves. Both films are especially good in photography and settings.

Martin Berger, formerly of the Mercedes Film Company, has entered upon the manufacture of films, together with Max Altmann. Mr. Berger, who is one of the best posted men in the Berlin trade, is responsible for a number of excellent films, and it was therefore not surprising that the new concern's first film, "Kindertraenen" ("Child-Tears") fulfilled all expectations. Mr. Berger features Edmund Loewe, who plays the leading role in a very pleasing manner.

Benefit performances for soldiers stationed in Krakau garrisons will take place in that city on the sixteenth and seventeenth of this month. The main attraction is the Desmond film, "Seifenblasen" ("Soap Bubbles"), to which music for the occasion has been composed by Professor von Woikowsky-Biedau. Miss Olga Desmond will personally appear before the screen between the third and fourth acts.

ESSANAY TO PRODUCE "THE HAVOC."

Production is practically ready to start on Essanay's next multiple reel feature to follow "The Discard." on the V-S-L-E. program. The photoplay is "The Havoc," in five reels, written by the well known playwright, H. S. Sheldon. It will be the first photoplay to be produced in Essanay's new studio, which is now practically completed. Sets have been arranged in the new studio, Essanay's other two studios being tied up with other productions. A temporary lighting system has been arranged, work on the overhead crane lights still going on.

An all star cast has been engaged to appear in this production. Gladys Hanson who has been playing with Lou Tellegen, the betrothed of Geraldine Farrar, in "The Ware Case," on Broadway, will take the leading role.

Miss Hanson is well known in the Frohman productions, playing for many years with E. H. Sothern. Her first work was a part in "The Spoilers." She later appeared with Cyril Bellew and Minnie Madern Fiske. She will be supported by Charles Dalton, the well known stage star, in the heavy lead part, and Bryant Washburn, as juvenile lead.

The play is one of intense dramatic action and with strong emotional parts, and bids fair to be one of the best produced of the Essanay program.

LAMBART OUT OF MIRROR FILMS.

The following statement comes from the offices of the Mirror Films, Inc., at 16 East Forty-second street:

"Captain Harry Lambart, who has been identified to some extent with Mirror Films, Inc., is no longer connected with the Mirror Films, Inc., in any capacity. Action leading to the retiring of Mr. Lambart from the organization was taken at a meeting of the Board of Directors and such action was taken with the approval of each member. As Mr. Lambart had, at the time of the action, no official position with the company, no office has been left vacant by him.

"Mr. Lambart resigned as a member of the executive committee of Mirror Films, Inc., some time ago, at the same time resigning as vice-president."

Mr. Lambart, prior to his joining the Mirror Films, was for a long time with the Vitagraph company.

ANDERSON RETIRES FROM ESSANAY OWNERSHIP.

Gilbert M. Anderson, secretary of the Essanay Company, has sold his stock interest to George K. Spoor, president of the concern. Mr. Spoor and Mr. Anderson, the initials of whose names formed the basis for the title of S. and A. (Essanay) company, were among the pioneer film manufacturers. Mr. Anderson has not announced his future plans.

Mrs. McGabb Explains a Love Scene.

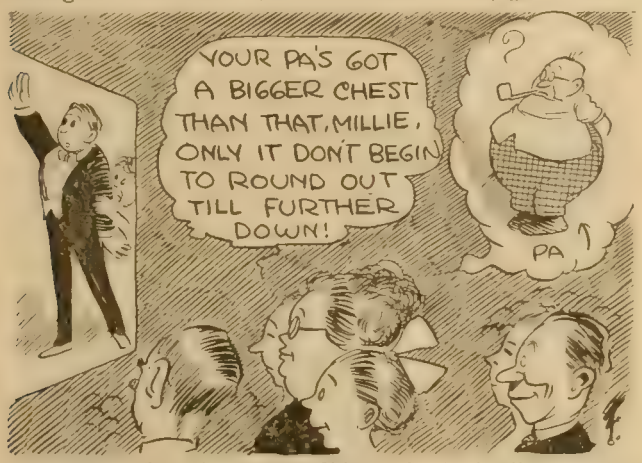
(Mrs. McGabb has brought her sixteen-year-old daughter, Millie, and Millie's school chum, Rosie Simms, to witness a six-reel romance, featuring J. Romeo Mushman, the popular screen idol. Mrs. McGabb has seated herself between the two girls.)

Millie—Oh, Ma! can't me and Rosie sit together?

Mrs. McGabb—No, you can't! Let you two together and you'd do nothin' but sit and hold hands and moon about curly hair and his lovely eyes like you didn't either of you have a brain in your head!

Millie—Aw, Ma, we wouldn't neither—would we, Rosie?

Rosie—Honest, we wouldn't Mrs. McGabb. Oh, look, Millie! Don't he look grand in a dress suit! Ain't he got a swell figure! His chest swells out like a—like a—



Mrs. McG.—If you'd ask me I'd say he looks like a potato bustin' it's jacket! Your Pa's got a bigger chest than that, Millie, only it don't begin to round out till further down.

Millie—Oh, look, Rosie, he's goin' to kiss her! O-o-o-o-ah!

Rosie—Don't he make love grand! Say, Millie, wouldn't you like to run your fingers through his hair like she's doin'? So long, and soft, and wavy!

Mrs. McG.—She's probably measurin' to see how long since he's had it cut. Or maybe she's wonderin' if there'll be cuttin's enough so's she can stuff a new sofa pillow.

Millie—Look, Rosie, he's goin' to propose to her! Look, he's gettin' down on his knees!

Mrs. McG.—If he kneels down in them skin-tight pants something else'll pop!

Rosie—Aw! Ain't that too bad—the fillum has busted! Why does something like that always have to happen right at the most exciting moments?

Mrs. McG.—He probably did pop, and they're waitin' while somebody goes for a needle and thread. There, it's all right again. I guess—

Millie—Aw, it's all blurry now—the machine's out of focus! That's better now, but I couldn't see whether she said "yes" or "no," could you, Rosie?

Rosie—I think she must have refused him, for he's walkin' up and down, bitin' his finger-nails. Maybe he's poor. She musta loved him, because she lets him kiss her. See—he's pleading with her and—

Millie—Oh, why does something always happen when—look, all you can see is the bottom of one picture and the top of another. What makes it do that? Don't it look funny! All you can see is his feet in one and their heads in the other. You don't know which to watch.

Mrs. McG.—If you'd ask me, I'd say his feet. They look funny walkin' up and down all by themselves. Like a pair of lost soles.

Millie—They've fixed it, but I do wish I knew what he was sayin' to her! Could you read that sub-title, Rosie? That's the second one I've missed because it went before I could read more than the first line. Oh, look! That's his rival, and they're goin' to fight! Look! Look! Aw, say, now we've gotta let these people by and miss it all! Why can't they make people wait till the end of a reel before they let 'em into the seats! It takes all the good out of the pictures!

Mrs. McG.—Humph! I wouldn't care how much good it took outa the pictures if it didn't take all the shine offen my shoes! Just a minute, Mister! Would you mind comin' back here and steppin' on my other foot, so's they'll both be mates? I hate to have one squashed a different shape from the other!

"Hop, the Devil's Brew" Is Impressive Production—The DeHavens in "The Wrong Door."

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

"Hop, the Devil's Brew."

IT MAY appear like overheated enthusiasm, nevertheless, we venture that "Hop, the Devil's Brew," produced by the Smalleys, is the most complete and the most authentic of photoplays dealing with the illegal traffic in opium. The picture is more than good; it is excellent, considered either as dramatic entertainment, or as a faithful depiction of actual conditions to be faced in some of the coast cities in the United States. Phillips Smalley and Lois Weber, to whom first credit is due for a superior production, are said to have had the cooperation of San Francisco customs officials in preparing the scenes demanding detailed knowledge of the opium trade. If they did not have such assistance, the perfection of the detail in the picture is the more remarkable.

For want of a better word, the story in "Hop, the Devil's Brew" may be called natural. Combined with such a quantity of unquestionably realistic incidents, it all seems like a page out of life, and the restrained acting of Mr. Smalley, as the inspector, and Lois Weber, as his wife, addicted to opium, contributes to the impression. They are never theatrical and they never allow the production to become theatrical. The plot, simple and direct, progresses so smoothly that we are unconscious of calculated effects and because of this, the effects are all the stronger.

Passing over the happenings in the personal drama, which might sound ordinary enough in the telling, it is worth while to note a few of the outstanding features of the production. No highly colored newspaper story ever gave the reader so complete an idea of how opium smugglers operate and how government inspectors work to check them. On the "Queen of the Orient," docked in a Pacific coast port, we see both ends of the game—the secreting of opium in life preservers and blocks of wood that may be surreptitiously landed on shore, also the tactics of the inspectors familiar with the tricks of opium dealers.

Of course, there are confederates among the city officials and in the Chinatown district, where we have most convincing pictures of Lee Gow's establishment. Settings are ideal, types of depraved characters are not overdrawn, and from first to last there is a wealth of interesting detail. Too much emphasis cannot be placed on this quality of the picture. And it would be unfair to omit mention of the perfect photography and exceptionally fine lighting effects. The picture is another triumph for the Smalleys, artistic producers who know what to include and what to pass by in gaining an effect.

"The Wrong Door."

Melodrama and farce intermingled, and a good deal of the DeHavens, Carter and his wife, Flora Parker, are found in "The Wrong Door," a picture not easily catalogued, but fairly entertaining. No one is likely to take the story seriously, or to respond to the producer's thrills when he essays melodrama, so it is best to regard it as a comedy with variations. If an audience makes a mistake and laughs at the wrong time, why no harm is done.

In his screen performance, Mr. DeHaven retains the personality of a musical comedy actor. He is dapper, quick of movement and whatever the situation, his presence is apt to give a comedy twist to the scene. As Phillip Borden he is supposed to manage a steel foundry and he sits before a large desk in an office with his name on the door, but he never would be mistaken for a business man. At his club, in the theater where he goes to admire the pretty Frou Frou, or joy riding after a festive evening, Mr. DeHaven appears more in his element.

Probably the most interesting scenes in the production show a theater as the audience watches the dancing girls on the stage, and the same young women as they appear in the not over private privacy of their dressing room. There is so little pretense of plausibility in the story that to enumerate inconsistencies would be useless.

Mr. DeHaven and his stupid friend "Bumps," played by Ernie Shields, often succeed in being amusing, whereas Mrs. DeHaven is a pleasing, if somewhat colorless Frou Frou. Settings are adequate.

"Love's Crucible"

A Brady-World Film Production Introducing Frances Nelson as a Star—Some Telling Situations.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

WHEN presented on the stage, Jules Eckert Goodman's play, the inspiration for this Brady-World Film picture, went under the title of "The Point of View." As a screen offering, with the plot based on the trials of an artistically ambitious girl placed at the mercy of designing young men possessing more money than morals, "Love's Crucible" is not strikingly original. But that, of course, does not indicate the absence of appealing qualities in the story, in the production supplied by Director Emil Chautard and in the acting of Frances Nelson. It is pleasing to note the rapid rise of this young actress, who in all respects seems to merit a place on the roster of World Film stars. She has a really engaging personality and a distinct gift for emotional expression that has ample scope in this production.

The success of the picture, for it appears like a success, is largely due to the sympathetic playing of Miss Nelson and to Director Chautard's ingenuity in contriving new ways of registering familiar incidents. One scene, in particular, is worthy of mention because it is certain to impress an audience by reason of its suggestiveness—not an offensive suggestiveness, however, for the story demanded a clear indication of a changing situation, and the director's method of conveying his meaning was quite adroit.

Myra has left her country home, is installed in a studio and has for a neighbor, a youth of pleasing presence whose companionable attentions are in reality only a cloak for less innocent motives. When it becomes necessary to show that the barrier between these two young people is about to be removed, the girl, after a very well acted scene, slips the key to her door over the transom between the two rooms. This is enough to make plain the altered relationship without undue emphasis.

In subsequent passages of the drama, which follows the too trustful girl's tribulations and ultimate redemption, the plot is developed with considerable skill. All of the characters are given a reasonable place in the action and their behavior is plausible. As intimated before, Miss Nelson's acting is natural and graceful, qualities not always realized by other members of the cast. Douglas MacLean is a manly type, but a bit stiff in his playing of Robert. The company includes June Elbidge, Lumsden Hare, John Hyland and Fred Truesdell.

"The Guilt of Stephen Eldridge."

IN producing this three-part drama, Director Farrell Macdonald gave a clear presentation of a moderately involved plot, and more than that, showed a commendable regard for reasonable character development. The story follows the theory that a child is likely to inherit the disposition of its parents, or rather in this particular instance, the disposition of the father. The bank cashier, introduced in the early scenes, is dishonest; the paying teller, made to suffer for the other's defalcations, is a model of rectitude and the sons of these two men carry the characteristics of the fathers into the second generation. They are the means of bringing about a long delayed justice, which restores the good name of the wrongly convicted paying teller.

The usual lines of plot construction are followed in showing how the bank theft is discovered and how the guilt is shouldered on an innocent man, who spends a number of years in the penitentiary before escaping to lead a precarious existence as a scissors grinder. Thoroughly disguised by a flowing beard and ragged clothes, he wanders about his old haunts and keeps in communication with his wife without his identity being suspected by neighbors. Meanwhile the sons of the cashier and the former paying teller have reached maturity and are following in the footsteps of their fathers. One is a wild youth, secretly married to a chorus girl, the other gives every evidence of becoming a good citizen. Through the conflict between these two young men the dishonesty of the cashier is revealed and the scissors grinder is reunited with his family.

Ivan Christy, Vera Sisson, Charles H. Malles, Jack Mulhall, Charles Perley and Gretchen Hartman are numbered in an efficient cast. As it is to be expected in a Biograph production, settings and photography are of the best.

Griffith Reissues.

The merit of the Griffith single reels, now being reissued by the Biograph Company, is again evidenced in four subjects selected for release in March. They are "The House of Darkness," "The Lady and the Mouse," "His Mother's Scarf" and "The Golden Supper." The most dramatic of the four, and perhaps the one most typical of Griffith craftsmanship in creating suspense, is "The House of Darkness," a gripping sketch based on a maniac's response to the soothing influence of music.

Lillian and Dorothy Gish, Henry B. Walthall, Lionel Barrymore and Robert Harron contribute to a deftly told story in "The Lady and the Mouse." "His Mother's Scarf" is a Western drama of sound appeal, and "The Golden Supper" is a fairly effective interpretation of Tennyson's poem, marked by picturesque ensembles and beautiful settings.

"Merely Mary Ann"

Delightful Mixture of Sense, Sentiment and Humor in Fox Five-Reel Offering from the Plot of Israel Zangwil.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

ONE can get real enjoyment from "Merely Mary Ann," a Fox picture in five reels by Israel Zangwil. Merely Mary Ann is quite a compelling young miss of 17. And as the pretty young actress, Vivian Martin, sets her forth, she has such a wholesome atmosphere of sentiment that is sincere affection, of capacity for gladness and of innocence about her, that, bravely buckling down to the hard jobs of a slavey in a lodging house, she seems like a golden ray of Fairyland shining through to a hard world. The effect is often poetical to a degree. It is a picture that will do credit to any exhibitor; it certainly does credit to all the players and to its director, John Adolphi.

It is one of those not too frequent offerings in which sentiment is kept from decaying into sentimentality by the continual cutting across of humor. Humor stops it before it begins to spoil and lets it begin afresh. There's a laugh always coming, but the laugh is so closely related to the sentiment and the poetry that the mind is constantly stimulated and constantly refreshed much to the spectator's enjoyment.

The story, not sensationally novel, is fresh with many a bit of humanity that has never been shown before or seems as new as though it never had and this is all that the producer desired. It is a picture that merely uses life; it doesn't set out to draw things as they are, but to draw a contrast between things as they are, and in, Merely Mary Ann, just there and nowhere else, just in her own corner of the picture, things as we would like to think they are. And the ending is as happy as that of "Cinderella." No matter what the world really is or what it may become, the happy ending will always remain legitimate as long as humans are born young and have to grow up. Folks will like this kind of picture until they forget they, too, were young once and grew up.

Rockwell and Forrest Stanley in the principle roles; and in spite of a defect or two, such as the failure of James Holcroft to unhitch his horse and put it in the stable on the night when he dismissed Bridget Malony, the production will be found to be an especially pleasing adaption of the E. P. Roe novel. It might also be argued that too much film has been expended on Holcroft's experimenting with housekeepers. One of the best types in the play is the daughter of Mrs. Mumpson, a former housekeeper. This backward girl, who has run away from a mother quite as eccentric as herself, becomes a servant in the Holcroft home, and proves to be the important link in a chain of circumstances. A splendid portrayal of the character has been given in the Pallas production.

The photographic effects obtained in the night scenes immediately following Alida's hurried departure from the home of Wilson Ostrom, whose wife she had believed herself to be, are remarkable. The play has been dressed in modern style, but as the story is one that might belong to any period, this can hardly be counted a defect.

Of the character of Bridget Malony Lydia Yeamans Titus has given a fine portrayal. The cast which includes Page Peters in the role of Wilson Ostrom, and Howard Davies as Tom Watterly, have been well chosen. Florence Rockwell's interpretation of the character of Alida is delightful, and Forrest Stanley, as James Holcroft, gives a pleasing and manly portrayal of the role.

"The Clarion"

Carlyle Blackwell Becomes Equitable Star in Adaptation of Samuel Hopkins Adams' Novel.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

A NEWSPAPER man and magazine writer of broad experience whose specialty during recent years has been the exposure of fraudulent business, Samuel Hopkins Adams, was dealing with familiar material when he wrote ""The Clarion," a novel that created something of a stir at the time of its publication. It has reached the screen in a photoplay that unmistakably conveys the spirit of Mr. Adams' story and occasionally becomes forcefully realistic. Probably picture patrons will be even more interested in knowing that Carlyle Blackwell heads the cast, and in this, his first performance as an Equitable star, creates a favorable impression.

"The Clarion" warranted pictorial treatment because of the vital nature of the story. Without being a preachment, it hits hard at fake medicines and glorifies free journalism, brave enough to tell the truth regardless of the protests of advertisers. We meet a quack doctor at the beginning of his career when he travels from town to town selling Certina to gullible country folk. The nickels and dimes collected in this fashion are the nucleus of a great business, although the cure-all medicine continues to be useless stuff. The real conflict in the drama develops between father and son, for Harrington is presented as a young man of high ideals. As the proprietor of a newspaper he opens a campaign for right and justice in all things, and there is no compromise, though his father and his fiancee must be among those to suffer.

Director James Durkin's production is most effective in realistic details and least convincing in the development of a love interest that is really little more than conventional trimming for the central plot. Among the details that contribute strength to the picture may be noted the glimpse of the Certina factory, where unclean workmen mix the fluid in barrels; also the flashes of deluded people, pitiable wrecks, who have taken the vile concoction in good faith. All the squalor and hopelessness of chronic poverty are suggested in the scenes of the town's disease breeding slums. But Director Durkin reserved his biggest achievement for the concluding reel in which an anarchistic workman incites a mob to attack the office of "The Clarion." The handling of this mob is admirable.

"The Precious Packet"

A Thrilling Tale of the British Diplomatic Service Presented in Pathe Gold Rooster Play.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THERE can be no question about the box office qualities of "The Precious Packet." The story is of the kind that carries you along with it, and Donald MacKenzie has missed no tricks in producing it. It is also a well-constructed story, and jealousy guards its secret to the end.

At least two of the cast are new-comers to the Pathe pictures, and their manner of conducting themselves suggests that a further use of their talents in screen work will reflect credit on all concerned. These are the star of the play, Ralph Kellard, whose successful stage career covers a number of legitimate successes, and W. Tabor Wetmore, who is a well-known tenor, and one of our foremost dramatic interpreters. Lois Meredith, the feminine lead, is attractive but not obtrusive. Others of the cast whose names are unknown to us are also worthy of mention.

The story of the play was written by Fred Jackson, and treats of the adventures of a young Englishman, who, having lost his all at the race tracks and about to commit suicide, is sent under the auspices of "The Younger Sons," an organization of the younger sons of British nobles, to perform in America a mission unknown to himself. He is entrusted with a secret packet which is not to be opened until a certain date, and which is to enlighten him as to what is expected of him. Arrived in America he is kidnapped by a young French woman who is to be secretly placed on the throne of a French-Canadian kingdom. Falling in love with the young man she helps him to escape the French conspirators who are trying to make him give up the packet. After a thrilling chase and the precipitation of an automobile over a cliff, resulting in the death of the Frenchmen, the packet is opened and found to contain an order for the Englishman to marry pretty Jacqueline, whose marriage with one of his nationality will thwart the plan of her countrymen to place her on a throne in Canada.

The running of the Derby, and the exciting scenes, including the death of a valuable racehorse belonging to the Englishman, will prove especially attractive.

print theory which has to-day been raised to an article of faith in police and criminological circles. "Pudd'nhead Wilson" shows the first application of the theory under very difficulty circumstances. The play stands or falls with the impersonation of "Pudd'nhead Wilson." Theodore Roberts is cast in the part of "Pudd'nhead" and the reader will have no trouble in drawing his own inference. Very much can be said for the characteristic atmosphere in the play which adds greatly to the merit of the performance. The reminiscenes of slavery days present an interesting feature in the play and its tragic consequences are visualized with considerable dramatic force. The quaint humor of Mark Twain is not easily transferred either to the stage or to the screen and those who have read "Pudd'nhead Wilson" may miss some of the grim, strange aspects of that humor. Thomas Meighan acts the part of Chambers, the quadroon slave and gives a convincing rendition. The rest of the cast is good.

"Tennessee's Pardner."

The glory of "Tennessee's Pardner" belongs to Fannie Ward. She takes the part of a pretty, sweet, affectionate lass, who goes through life unscathed by surroundings full of all manner of danger and wickedness. Rarely has a woman artist brightened the screen more delightfully than Fannie Ward in this picture. When I say that no portion of the audience was readier with praise than the women, I am giving the reader some idea as to the merit of her performance.

The nature of the story is such as to give an ambitious and conscientious producer notable opportunities for settings, especially outdoor settings. These opportunities the producer has utilized to the fullest and bringing all his art to bear on the material at hand, has made the atmosphere or rather the various atmospheres, perfect and thoroughly convincing. Bret Harte's humor is at times of an iron strain and there is a good deal of it in this story, very finely translated into screen language.

The scenes in and about the old mission were bewitchingly beautiful and altogether too short for the demands of the spectator. There are tragic and intensely dramatic moments in the play. The climaxes are carefully prepared and never miss their effect. Next to Fannie Ward, the performance of Jack Dean, merits special mention. His was a difficult part. He had to be manly and he had to be tender to the point of weakness. He succeeded in portraying both qualities most convincingly. Another performer that deserves mention is Jessie Arnold who took the part of Kate Kent, the mother of Tennessee, likewise R. Bradbury, taking the part of Bill Kent, Tennessee's father. Charles Clary gave us a villain of the true melodramatic dye. In the subordinate part of the Padre, James Neill, acquitted himself splendidly.

Altogether, "Tennessee's Pardner" is a lovable American play with an appeal which cannot fail with any audience.

"The Trail of the Lonesome Pine."

Theodore Roberts undoubtedly is the greatest asset of this feature. His characterization of the old mountaineer was the finest piece of acting seen on any screen in many a month. Indeed, I feel tempted to doubt whether all the subtle points, all the details of his peerless impersonation can possibly be appreciated at only one view of this feature. To mention but one of the subtle points which give such extraordinary merit to this performance, take the action of the old mountaineer when he is confronted with a piece of writing. Brave in the face of danger, rugged in enduring the eternal hardships of the mountains, the old man collapses when he is called upon to read something. He cannot read. All his hardihood dies out and the old man presents a most pathetic sight with his school boy-like embarrassment when he shamefacedly makes the confession that he never learned to read. It was a touch absolutely true to nature and to reality. In every other aspect of the character, Mr. Robert's rendition was beyond all praise. Much can be said for the conscientious work of Charlotte Walker and Thomas Meighan.

The praise of settings and lighting effects in a Lasky production seems superfluous. The story of the feature follows the old conventional lines and we know what the end will be after we have seen the first two or three hundred feet of film. This may be all right for an unsophisticated audience who enjoy the development of the obvious, but the utter conventionality of the story may act as a weakness in cities where audiences are more critical. I think that there are two many titles in the play. The introduction of dialect or a pseudo dialect into the sub-titles is always an experiment and is often annoying to those who do not care for that sort of thing. The opening scene showing the "Lonesome Pine" is very pretty.

Scene from "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" (Lasky).

There are improbabilities and inconsistencies more or less obvious. The spirit of sympathy for the moonshiner prevails throughout the play, which in this respect follows the spirit of the original story.

"Dimples"

Mary Miles Minter Is Starred in a Columbia-Metro Picture Calculated to Reveal Her Girlish Charm.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

UNLIKE a number of recent eMtro productions dealing with social problems, "Dimples," directed by Edgar Jones for the Columbia Pictures Corporation, is devoted to nothing more serious than the playful prettiness of a sweet girl with wavy blond hair, a winning smile and kittenish mannerisms, such as men for long ages past have liked to associate with innocent maidenhood. If "Dimples" pleases audiences—and surely there is nothing in it to displease them—it will indicate that the likable qualities of Mary Miles Minter are sufficient to compensate for the lack of an impressive story. The picture is apt to be somewhat negative in its effect, unless one looks upon the Metro Corporation's youthful star with favor and decides that a photoplay needs no stronger attraction.

The story is so naive and irreproachably wholesome that it would be unkind to test it by severe standards. Things happen as they do because Miss Minter must be given every opportunity to exericse her childish wiles. We first meet her as the ill-treated daughter of a miserly old man and find that her beauty stands the strain of ragged clothing. She romps about the poor tenement with all the spontaneity of healthy childhood and every now and again strikes a sympathetic note in expressing a craving for affection that is denied her, save for the companionship of the aged, half-witted friend of her father. Finally she receives the doll for which she has longed, never guessing that her simple-minded companion has removed the stuffing and substituted a great roll of bills, Dimples' inheritance, in place of the sawdust.

Both of the aged men die, and in the third reel, when Dimples goes to live with an aunt, who keeps a boarding house, the plot takes on a new turn with the introduction of a number of characters, in one way or another concerned with events that befall the pretty heroine. The precious doll is forever on the verge of being stolen or destroyed, but we are not altogether surprised to learn that the bills are discovered at a crucial moment and used to save Dimples' prospective husband from ruin on the stock exchange. The author of the story followed rather obvious lines and permitted a few inconsistencies, but at least his scenario served as an attractive vehicle for Miss Minter.

story for five reels. Part of the feature is taken up with short biographical data concerning F. Hopkinson Smith. Most of these will be news to motion picture audiences of all degrees. A lot of sketches made by F. Hopkinson Smith are thrown upon the screen as a preliminary to the showing of the feature itself. Some of the sketches are very pretty and as they deal with New York City all of them have a certain interest.

The interest of the story centers around a lovable old gentleman of the Southern school and the impersonation given by Charles Kent is entitled to the highest praise. He instantly wins the hearts of the audience and as far the somewhat halting development of the action brings him into the foreground the feature is both interesting and charming. His chivalrous bearing, his unselfish friendship, his gentle and generous heart endear him to everybody. His relations with the colored servants of the house had a particularly happy human touch.

The action—what there is of it—moves in well-worn conventional grooves. The adventures of the young lover in Brazil were not very convincing. Mr. Antonio Moreno played the part of the young lover and he did the best he could. Muriel Ostriche had by far the best opportunities for dramatic work, but she did not rise to them. She has a very handsome face and an agreeable stage presence, but her acting lacks fire.

The play has the much-desired happy ending; after an unusual number of painful disappointments hero and heroine find the path to marriage smoothed by auspicious circumstance.

"Daphne and the Pirate"

Five-Reel Triangle Fine-Arts Featuring Lillian Gish in a Remarkable Characterization.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE kind of story Robert Louis Stevenson sighed for when he said he wished he could find a good one to read, "Daphne and the Pirate" is crowded with the interesting adventures of two lovers, all pictured with the highest sort of artistry, a production of rare beauty and, but for some minor faults of construction, those aggravating little errors which seem impossible to avoid in a composite product, it would stand with the best of its kind. In addition to all its other merits, the pictured story presents what is possibly the most remarkable characterization ever attempted by Lillian Gish. Her work exhibits finer capabilities than she has hitherto shown, though she easily holds the eye whenever she is in evidence.

In a feature displaying an exceptional quality of craftsmanship and infinite pains so far as the pictures themselves are concerned, it is almost a pity that some one could not furnish subtitles with more "bite" in them. Many of them are commonplace, some are carelessly expressed, and at least one should be cut out, together with action it explains, the one speaking of a letter from De Mornay's father about an event no longer material, not plausible considering the circumstances, and serving as an anti-climax where there is need of a swift and strong conclusion.

Very few portrayals of conflict between vessels at sea, if any, have been so original in treatment and generally effective as is the clash between the King's ship, conveying Lillian and a number of ladies of less scruple to the marriage market of New Orleans, and the pirate ship on which her lover, De Mornay, is unwillingly serving. From an almost infinite variety of viewpoints the chase and final struggle are shown, and those viewpoints are so admirably chosen that the audience passes a whole gallery of spirited portrayals in swift review. The entire presentation excels in picture composition. Of almost equal value, possibly of greater, are the quick changes of mood so exquisitely revealed by Lillian Gish. She has never been given to the simp smile of the tiresome chorus girl, and yet she conveys the impression of light-hearted Daphne, now a timid child, now a teasing minx, always lovable. She has demonstrated in "Daphne" that she is a veritable artist.

"The Target"

Five-Reel Red Feather Production Features Hobart Bosworth in Story of a Hard Luck Career.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THERE is a vigorous strength in this five-reel offering which carries the interest along in a sweeping manner. The hero goes through a series of hardships which might utterly destroy a weaker man's faith in human nature, yet he comes out smiling in the end. It is not by any means the conventional happy ending, however, for he has lost friends, his wife, and served a ten-year penitentary sentence for the crime of another. Only his principles and his mother's faith are left to him.

Hobart Bosworth is at his best in this part. He is known as Big Bill Brent, a Western lawyer. He clears the deputy sheriff of a criminal charge and receives the promise of life-long friendship from the latter. The theme, which appears many times in the story, is here brought first to view: Will friendship survive self-interest? Later along the deputy sheriff is forced to arrest his benefactor, after he has escaped prison.

Brent is first victimized by a woman, who loves him for his strength and courage. He marries her and she afterward deserts him. He becomes dissipated and is later accused of murder, his business partner fixing the crime upon him. The jail break and escape of himself and his pal to British Columbia is splendidly pictured. On the way to safety they help themselves to horses and provisions, but later return money in payment for same.

The photography is very good throughout the story and there is no slackening of interest. Anna Lehr does some quietly effective work as the mother. Others in the cast are Maude George, Albert MacQuarrie, Jane Novak and Dick LeReno.

EVERYONE who has read Rex Beach's story of "The Ne'er-Do-Well" can recall the fevered interest taken in it from the very first chapter until the end. This interest was excited not only by the red-blooded exploits of the hero, but in a greater degree by the unfamiliarity of the scenes amid which the action takes place, and of many of the characters as well. "The Ne'er-Do-Well" was indeed a new book that conducted the reader through a new field, in which he could not fail to observe unusual conditions of social and political life, though his attention was always centered on the principal figure of the story and on those who played important parts in the shaping of his career.

It is my opinion, after repeated views of the photodramatic production by William N. Selig, that the screen version is not only a faithful reproduction of the printed story in all the important essentials, but that it has also increased manifold the interest created by the book. In this connection it is scarcely necessary to refer to the great advantage that the visualizaion of action and scene possesses over the printed page, or how weak mere descriptive writing becomes when, in its place, we have before us the scene itself on the screen.

And these scenes on Panama, so vividly described by Mr. Beach in the printed story, have all been brought before our eyes by the camera; for Mr. Selig personally conducted his company and Director Campbell to the Isthmus, where all the action of the story in that region has been reproduced photodramatically, on the very spot described in the book of Mr. Beach. Thus we have Colon, on the Atlantic side of the Canal, and its settings for the action taking place in it; the Gatun locks and the great Gatun dam (in the making) nearby; a view of the wreckage of the French machinery used in the attempt to build the canal, and also of the much-read-about Culebra Cut; also the city of Ancon and of new Panama City, separated from it by a main street; and old Panama City 12 miles away, as well as the picturesque Taboga islands, 15 miles off in the Pacific Ocean. With all these places the action of the story has to do, and captiously inclined people are so informed, lest they might think they are being treated to a mere travelogue.

The scenes in Part I and a few of the early scenes in Part II are laid in New York City. In these we see Kirk Anthony, son of the millionaire Darwin K. Anthony, sowing his wild oats, but not of the usual kind. A university graduate and the coach of the football team of his alma mater, and, moreover, inclined to be reckless and jovial, Kirk is the idol of his fellows. And he is the idol, too, of his old Dad, who keeps his photograph in a drawer of the big business desk, and is addicted to the weakness of looking at it whenever he hears rumors of Kirk's wild acts. He has been so often called upon for checks for large amounts to meet his son's follies that we can see his face grow aged, as the thought comes uppermost that his boy uses him only as a money broker.

"Sorry I can't dine with you, Dad, I have a date," Kirk says one day, after receiving the customary check, though it was the first time he had seen his father for months. And the disappointed, tired look takes possession of the face of the old railroad king. Only a few days later Kirk calls on his father for the same purpose, and is given the amount in bills this time, with the final warning that if he is caught in another infraction of the law that he will be disowned.

Kirk and his friends go out to celebrate a football victory with the money just received. That night they get uproariously drunk; drive into a cafe in an automobile; get entangled with a fugitive from justice, who had just purchased a steamer ticket for Colon; nearly murder an officer of the law who attempts to arrest the absconder, and engage in a free-for-all fight with the waiters. All leave the cafe except Kirk, one of his companions and the stranger fugitive. The stranger knows that he has been traced up to the time of the buying of the ticket for Colon, and he decides to hide his tracks by having Kirk impersonate him. Already drunk, Kirk is induced to drink another glass of liquor, which has been drugged. All his money and valuables, except a diamond ring, are taken from him, and he is put aboard the steamer for Colon, with the ticket purchased by the stranger in his possession.

After this outbreak, it can be readily surmised that "old man" Anthony closed his purse to his son, the "Ne'er-Do-Well," as he sadly called him. There is no space at my disposal to continue the story further; but the book, if it has not been read, can be easily secured.

Director Colin Campbell has been very successful in giving all the big and thrilling scenes of the story the full measure of realism. The fight in the New York cafe, with the break-neck flight down stairs, has not often been outdone in an actual brawl among drunken men, where firearms are absent.

The fire scene in Colon, where Kirk and his trusty Allan Allan try to show the native firemen how a fire fight should be conducted, has both humorous and almost tragic intensity. And the aftermath, which shows the arrest and cruel manhandling of the aforementioned worthies by the spiggoty cops of Colon, has such a semblance of reality, that every good, fair-play American will feel like taking his chances with the minority.

The ball at the Tivoli in Ancon shows several fine interiors, and the scenes amid the picturesque ruins of old Panama City have been artistically chosen as settings for the action therewith connected. The same nice care is shown in the selection of exteriors on Taboga island. The scene bearing the announcement, "Alone," where Mrs. Cortlandt is seen looking out over a darkening sunset, is expressively emblematic of the despair of her failure in her heart's desire; and in strong contrast, and equally fitting, is the final scene which shows Kirk Anthony and his bride looking out of a cabin window of the ship that bears them to New York and home, at the Statue of Liberty.

The assignment of the characters in the cast shows careful and fit selection in nearly every case. No happier choice could have been made for the part of Kirk Anthony than Wheeler Oakman. He has the build, the looks and the youth of a well-bred university man and athlete. He has the bearing too, and heaven knows he displays athletic prowess that requires no apology for what is left undone. I don't think a limper, more disfigured semblance of a man could be produced by anything short of a shrapnel shell than Mr. Oakman appears as he lies on the grimy floor of the Colon lock-up, when the spiggoty cops get through with him. And withal he is a ladies' man, one of the kind that never tries to break hearts, but who always fights to win that of the woman he prefers above all others. In the scenes between Kirk Anthony and Mrs. Cortlandt, Mr. Oakman shows a manly conception of the real self of his prototype. He is not proof against sudden fits of passionate emotion, but he does not believe in any weakness before a woman when his heart dictates the course to follow.

In the part of Mrs. Edith Cortlandt, Miss Kathlyn Williams makes a strong appeal, one that I believe will win for her the judgment that in it she has given her best studied and most complete effort before the camera. Never before has Miss Williams sustained a role that called for such keen insight of a brilliant woman's mind and a corresponding subtlety of interpretation.

Mrs. Cortlandt was a woman of rare intellectual capacity and power. She lived in the atmosphere of big things, because her mind lived in an atmosphere still higher. Love had not touched her, because she had not yet met the man. Her marriage was one of convenience and, therefore, loveless. Too late she found that her happiness lay in service and not in authority. And when the man appeared, she was seized with the furious desire that a tigress has for her mate—to win him by purring methods or by force. She was not a bad woman; just one mismated by her own consent. And her very strength of character and mind, when the man came, urged her to win happiness at all costs, with the conviction that happiness would never be offered her again.

In the screened version, the attitude of Mrs. Cortlandt toward her husband, in the final scene, is entirely away from her true self. It is harsh and cruel, without a tinge of sympathy. He had suffered and she knew it; and she also knew that he, like herself, had missed happiness. The book version is in truer touch with her real self. They talk over matters and she admits her shortcomings as a wife, but she still has sympathy for him, though she hates him for what he has done. And in the book they say good-night to each other and go to their separate rooms. Later, when he thinks she has gone to sleep, he glides quietly past her bedroom door and places a note where she may find it, that may save an innocent man from the charge of murder. Then he goes out to his self-inflicted death.

The husband Stephen Cortlandt is a most trying role, but Harry Lonsdale represents him in a way that saves him from the charge of cuckoldry. The screen version, in the final scene between husband and wife, places the husband at a decided disadvantage and defaces his true character. The book version is far more preferable.

Frank Clark and Jack McDonald, old chums and partners in "The Spoilers," are fully at home in the characters of Darwin K. Anthony and Allan Allan. The comedy furnished by the latter is of an unusual type, but it excites our mirth and creates a kindly feeling for the big, rawboned, cullahd gemman from Jamaica.

While a capable actress, Miss Norma Nichols is unsuited for the role of Chiquita Garavel, either physically or temperamentally. Chiquita was a beautiful, fascinating, mischievously roguish creature, of high mercurial temperament and vivacious Spanish mind and action. The scene showing Kirk's first call at the Garavel mansion furnishes comedy of a delightful kind.

Sidney Smith's impersonation of Ramon Alfarez, commandante of police, may be just a little too close to burlesque to satisfy some minds. Fred Huntley makes a dignified Andres Garavel, and Lamar Johnstone is a fine type of young American in the person of Runnels, master of transportation on the Panama Railroad.

The entire ten reels show excellent photography.

"Sold to Satan"

A Three-Reel Lubin Photoplay in Which Man's Struggle With the Prince of Evil Is Given Very Literal Treatment.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

BELIEVERS in a personal Devil will find the Gentleman from the Lower Regions visualized in a very material manner during the action of "Sold to Satan," the three-reel photoplay written by Capt. R. P. Rifenberick, Jr., and produced by Edward Sloman. Although shorn of his horns and tail and, when in polite society, wearing correct evening dress, His Satanic Majesty makes no effort to disguise his features, and the familiar face makeup of the stage—flaring eyebrows, pointed imperial and all—betray him every time he appears. And he is the deus ex machina of the picture.

The opening scene of the story is excellently contrived. An outcast is shown outside of a brilliantly lighted cafe, on New Year's Eve. Crowds of merry folk pass him as he stands shivering in the cold and snow. Alone that night in his cheerless room, he offers to sell his soul to the Evil One, in exchange for youth and wealth. Satan immediately takes him at his word, appearing in person and making the same bargain with him that forms the leading motive of "The Black Crook." The outcast is to have his desires granted so long as he can deliver one soul each year to the Ruler of Hades. Once in the possession of money and his lost youth, this modern "Faust" falls in love with the beautiful young girl and, at the command of his master, lures the brother and father of his fiancee to distruction. At the end of the third year, he is told to make a victim of the girl herself. He fails, and is promptly claimed by the Evil One, who has kept near his victim all through the drama and, apparently, enjoyed himself hugely when cultivating the society of the exclusive social set.

There is no attempt to relieve the situations by any flashes of wit such as Franz Molner employed to lighten up his drama, "The Devil." The picture preaches a sermon from the text, "The Wages of Sin Is Death," in the uncompromising manner of an early Miracle play, and has been screened in the same spirit by the producer Edward Sloman. The cast is one of merit. L. C. Shumway's impersonation of the outcast is artistic in makeup and acting, and Mr. Sloan is a conventional but thoroughly good Prince of Evil. Ben Hopkins, Adelaide Bronti, Alan Forrest and May Cruze are also members of the cast.

On the Mutual Program

"The Dead Alive," Five-Reel Gaumont, and "The Oval Diamond," Five-Reel Thanhouser.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE DEAD ALIVE presents fascinating Marguerite Courtot in a dual role and shows a large amount of fine craftsmanship in the way it is treated. The talented director handles situations where twin sisters, Mary and Jess, meet in a manner which makes the story entirely plausible, and there is a delightful absence of artificiality throughout a very large part of the release, but he falls into a very common error, that of supposing hypnotic influence to be a power exerted only by certain gifted individuals instead of being dependent on the "subjectivity" of certain minds. This does not happen to be an important error, but he should give hypnotic sugegstion a little study before using it in another picture. Some of his ensembles are very attractive, and his whole product is well-calculated to hold the interest of any mixed audience.

All three male principals, Sydney Mason, James Levering and H. W. Pemberton show a very high degree of intelligence in their strong interpretations, and all three are fine types, but honors easily go to Marguerite Courtot. Her almost constant presence in the varied scenes, scenes depicting diverging careers of two girls very much alike in general character, is welcome and satisfying. A sort of a little passion flower of delicate sensibilities herself, she injects that interesting personality into her dual role so successfully that the action never drags. If she can be induced to keep both of her feet on the earth, not become unduly inflated by success, she has a bright career before her. She is a rare type, the kind that wins without effort. The story suits her, and there is little doubt that it will suit nearly everybody.

"The Oval Diamond" has a reminiscent flavor, but it is highly entertaining, now and then a good laugh, always extrication from difficulty, a comedy of ingenuity. The idea of enormous wealth so concentrated that it can be easily lost or hidden has often attracted story tellers, but it has rarely furnished a swifter line of action than that followed in "The Oval Diamond." The play opens well, a touch of mystery stimulating expectation, and it is so admirably constructed by the author that there is no lapse of interest once it is under way. There is a hero of marvelous agility and limitless resource—nothing can daunt him—and a plucky little heroine who bravely seconds his efforts, respectively impersonated by Harris Gordon and Barbara Gilroy.

"The Oval Diamond" really belongs to the girl's deceased father, but it has fallen into the hands of her uncle and his son, and, at the time the enterprising hero gets into the game through a spirit of adventure, there is a villainous gang of four desperate miners plotting to get possession of the valuable gem by reckless exhibitions of cunning and force. The struggle between plotting miners and the scheming relatives of the heroine is given an entirely new and amusing turn by the advent of the hero, a mystifying and dangerous factor in a conflict between two groups of villainous characters, a match for them all in the end. A highly amusing story of cleverness opposed to brute cunning and force.

Two Kalem Comedies

clusively that a bogus widow—that is, one whose husband pretends to have departed this life in order that he may trap his flirtatious better-half and her admirers—is much more to be avoided than she of the common or garden variety. Friends of the big comedian and his diminutive chum are aware that when it comes to resisting a woman's wiles they are as clay in the hands of the potter. Their amatory propensities get them into a series of laughable situations in which the husband, who refuses to stay dead, is an important factor. Shakespeare is said to have written "The Merry Wives of Windsor" at the request of Queen Elizabeth, who desired to see "Falstaff" in love. Some of the "business" of the play has been handed down to the present day and is as broadly comic as the endeavors of the moving picture low comedians. Lloyd V. Hamilton and Bud Duncan can hardly be classed as Shakespearean actors, but it is quite possible that their clowning would have found favor at the court of the "Virgin Queen," had their sovereign, the two comedians and the Edison invention been contemporaneous.

Frank Howard Clark is the author of "Winning the Widow," and Wm. Baudine made the production. Jack MacDermott, Gus Leonard, Martin Kinney and Adoni Fovier complete the cast.

"A Riddle in Rascals."

To commence with, Miss Teare's wardrobe for this one-reel comedy is both varied and pleasing to the eye. This is as it should be, for have we not been told on excellent authority that when a woman goes forth to conquer, the knowledge that she is becomingly attired is her strongest weapon? Briefly, then, Ethel is well armed; and, as she does not neglect to use all her remaining ammunition—her vivacity, winning smile, sincerity, and her odd little tricks of manner—the victory is rightfully hers.

As to the comedy, it is of fair quality. It has to do with "crooks" and crime when viewed from a comic angle, and is sufficiently lively of action and diverting of plot to supply Miss Teare with a satisfactory vehicle for the display of her ability as a moving picture comedienne. Jack MacDermott and Victor Rottman afford competent support.

Gaumont Films Lumber Woods of Minnesota

No. 22 of the "See America First" Series Presents the Lumberjack in His Own Domain.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

ONE of the most interesting of the "See America First" series which the Gaumont Co. has been releasing shows how the lumber jack in the woods of Minnesota does his work. The pretty Mutual girl stands by and draws attention to the various points of interest, and it is indeed a wonderful sight to see the giant trees shedding their burden of snow as they fall a prey to the axe.

After the trees are felled they are conveyed by a skidding method to flat cars which carry them along a railroad built for the purpose to the river's edge, where they are left to be floated down stream to the saw mill when the spring thaw comes.

We are also shown the mess house and the hungry workers filing in to a meal. The thermometer at the time the picture was taken registered about twenty degrees below zero. The photography of the film is remarkably good considering the conditions under which it was done.

"One Day"

B. S. Moss Produces Romantic Story Containing Some Attractive Scenes Directed by Hal Clarendon.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE use of Elinor Glyn's name in connection with this five-part romantic drama and the mention of the most notorious of her books, suggests an eroticism which the picture does not possess. "One Day" is an entirely harmless romance with no more than the usual number of love passages, and in expressing amatory emotions the actors are moderate.

Not overlooking the credit due Director Hal Clarendon for the attractive background in many of the scenes, and the generally creditable quality of the production, the really surprising feature of the picture was the performance of Jeanne Iver, who, without previous experience before the camera and little on the stage, displayed a quite charming ease of manner that at no time betrayed a lack of training. Miss Iver photographs well, her personality is winning and her acting denotes an intelligent conception of the impression she wishes to convey. Director Clarendon was indeed fortunate in his choice of an actress to portray Opal, the heroine of this romance.

The story material in "One Day" is about on a par with that in other pictures dealing with the royal families in mythical European kingdoms. Veseria is the name selected this time. The beautiful daughter of the dissolute ruler is about to sacrifice herself by marrying a dissipated prince, who may be of assistance to her father. But before the marriage she goes to England for a brief vacation, and while in England she meets Paul, the rightful king of Veseria. We are not surprised to find that Paul and Opal become ardent lovers, nor to learn that the exiled king responds to the call of his country when a considerate ruler is needed.

The construction of the plot is not particularly expert, but it serves to advance the story in a comprehensible manner. Exteriors photographed on an estate in Lakewood, N. J., suggest all the beauty and magnificence of a royal palace and its environs. Victor Sutherland possesses the youth and manly bear-

"Nearly a King"

John Barrymore Is Seen in a Dual Role in Famous Players Five-Part Subject.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

JOHN BARRYMORE makes much of a not overstrong role or rather roles in "Nearly a King," the five-part Famous Players subject released Feb. 10. The picture was produced by Frederick Thompson, from the script of William H. Clifford. Mr. Barrymore is seen as the Prince of Bulwana and also as Jack Merriwell, an actor out of a job. Bulwana is situated presumably "somewhere in Europe."

The Prince is informed by his ministers that he is to marry the crown Princess of Zonia, at that time at school in the United States. The Prince refuses to ratify the arrangement, as he is in love with a dancer. His American secretary tells him of a friend in America who looks like him and who undoubtedly will be willing to take the Prince's place at court a sufficient time to enable the latter to escape to America with the girl he loves. Merriwell is out of a job. He responds to the despatch and sails. On the voyage he meets the princess and the two fall in love. That's the opening of a romantic tale in the telling of which there is quite a bit of comedy.

Some of the best of the fun is aboard ship, where in a storm Merriwell has trouble keeping himself and his mobile trunk in his stateroom. The room rocks to an alarming degree, in many degrees, in fact. Merriwell, astride his square steed, bursts in doors and unwittingly makes a somewhat unexpected call on the princess. In London, down and out after foolishly losing his wallet, he takes up cab driving. Unrecognized he has the queen for a fare. Also he meets the prince, when arrangements are made for the actor to take the prince's place in the betrothal arrangements.

There are exciting scenes when in Bulwana the bogus prince is uncovered. There are real fights, in one of which Merriwell is thrown bodily into the air into the extended arms of a group of soldiers. The actor gets away, however, in spite of the host pursuing him, and is rescued by the princess, who announces that, having arrived at her majority and the regency being at an end, Merriwell will be her king—and she declines to give serious heed to the cab-driving story.

The opening of the story shows the actor reading a script submitted by his valet. The closing is the acceptance of the scenario, with the exception of the kingship, owing to the unpopularity of that particular job these days.

"Nearly a King" is well played and well staged. Katherine Harris gives a good interpretation of the crown princess.

Many Keystones in the Making.

Mack Sennett has found it necessary to work his Keystone comedy factory overtime in order to keep up with the demand for his hilarious contributions to the Triangle program. The director general now has eleven complete companies working, including the Mabel Normand-Roscoe Arbuckle combination at the eastern Keystone studio. Hampton Del Ruth, his managing editor, is driving Jean Havez and his associates in the scenario department at top speed and weather reports promise ever increasing gales of laughter over the entire country.

"Fatty" and Mabel have already completed "He Did and He Didn't" in and around New York and are now busily engaged on a new Keystone that bears the working title of "The Lure of Broadway." Mabel is a country girl made prisoner in a Bowery dive. Her rescue is finally accomplished after a thrill-gang fight in which one of the belligerents is thrown through the air with such force that his body telescopes a 12-inch wall.

William Collier's first Keystone, "Better Late Than Never," in which he has the support of Mae Busch, is scheduled for early release. Fred Mace is working on a story that concerns an oil well that is expected to be a hilarity gusher. Ford Sterling has finished "shooting" scenes on the roof of a Los Angeles skyscraper. Harry Gribbon and Mack Swain are extracting laughs from a scenario that makes fun out of the installment plan of acquiring a home and its furnishings.

Pathe's "New York" Goes Big in Loew Houses.

The Pathe Gold Rooster Play "New York" drew so well at Loew's West End theater on 125th street last week, that for the first time in the history of the house it was found necessary to open the second balcony. A large crowd was waiting for the doors to open, and hundreds were turned away. Miss Florence Reed, the star of the picture, was present at the performance.

Mr. Loew thinks so well of the picture that he will open his new Brooklyn theater, the Regent, with it this next week.

Posters for Biograph Company.

Exhibitors who have booked the new prints of Biograph comedies featuring Mabel Normand, Mack Sennett and other stars, were advised this week by their exchanges that, owing to the great demand for special posters with these subjects, portrait one-sheets of the stars have been provided with each reel. The posters are of unusual design, with the name of the star prominently displayed and form an attractive lobby display.

Heavy Advance Bookings for "Poor Little Peppina."

"Poor Little Peppina," the first seven-reel production in which Mary Pickford has ever appeared, has been booked for three weeks in advance of the regular release date at the La Salle theater in Chicago. This is the first Famous Players production to be booked for more than two successive weeks at one theater since the company's, "The Eternal City," which ran at the Astor theater in New York for seven weeks, and it equals the more recent three-week record of "Carmen" at Symphony Hall, Boston.

The first New York showing of "Poor Little Peppina" will be given at the Broadway theater during the week of February 20th, two weeks in advance of the regular Paramount release date of the picture, March 2. Advance bookings have already been received for the film in all the principal cities of the United States, the unusual length of the production and the popularity of the star having instantly aroused the enthusiasm of the big exhibitors in the leading theaters of the country.

When shown at the Broadway, and during all other advance showings, "Poor Little Peppina" will be seven reels in length, but before its regular release, the film will be cut down to the customary five reels in order that it will best suit the needs of the largest number of exhibitors.

"The Grinning Skull" (Selig).

One of the most meritorious Selig productions-with-a-purpose ever released through General Film Company is dated for release on March 6. The drama is entitled "The Grinning Skull," and is a psychological drama from the pen of W. E. Wing, to show social sophistry. The highest and lowest social stratas of a great city are depicted and the scenes showing mission work are most noteworthy. Miss Eugenie Besserer and an excellent cast of players present a production of power and morality.

Frank Daniels in Vitagraph Films.

The Vitagraph Company announces the completion of a series of comedies in which Frank Daniels, the inimitable comic opera performer who forsook the stage for the screen, is to show his funny little self to the picture public. The comedies were written by Paul West especially for Mr. Daniels with a thorough knowledge of that actor's capabilities in the line of humor.

The series has to do with a Mr. Jack and his tempestuous career. Episode No. 1, which is released on February 21, through the V-L-S-E, is called "The Escapades of Mr. Jack." Under the direction of C. Jay Williams, who produced multiple-reel comedies of Daniels for the Vitagraph some time ago, the veteran fun-maker is seen at his very laughable best.

Few actors on the American stage are better known than Frank Daniels who has been working successfully as a sure-fire laugh-getter for years. He has scored in notable successes, among the more important being, "The Wizard of the Nile,"

Scene from "The Escapades of Mr. Jack" (Vitagraph).

"The Idol's Eye," "The Ameer," "Miss Simplicity," "The Office Boy," "The Tattooed Man," "Miss Hook of Holland," "The Belle of Britanny," and "The Pink Lady."

Daniel's first work for the Vitagraph Co. was in "Crooky," a five-reel comedy and he appeared more recently in "What Happened to Father." Illustrations and story of the episodes will be published in the fiction departments of all of the Hearst newspapers throughout the United States.

THE DIAMOND THIEVES (Lubin), Feb. 7.—Frank G. Genest is the author of this one-reel drama. It has an ingenious plot and is well played by L. C. Shumway, George Routh, Ronald Bradbury, Francilia Billington and Helen Wolcott. A review of this picture was printed in the issue of Feb. 19, page 1144.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE NO. 11, 1916 (Selig), Feb. 7.—U. S. soldiers at Progresso, Tex., rescuing comrades on the Mexican side of the Rio Grande; winter Race Meet at Montreal; blazing oil well, Corpus Christi, Tex.; fatal accident on Great Northern Railroad; Soccer football, Lynn, Mass.; Andrew Carnegie at Long Key, Florida; war scenes, Bucharest, Roumania; King Constantine and American reporter, Piraeus, Greece; 650 pound shark, Miami, Fla.; Mohawk princess gives basket to Mrs. Wilson, Cleveland; skating craze, Boston; wreck off Golden Gate; Moro baby's bath (feature picture); President Wilson and wife at Waukegan, Ill.

BETTY, THE BOY AND THE BIRD (Vitagraph), Feb. 7.—This one-reel comedy was written by Wilfred North and produced by Tefft Johnson. The heroine is a young and unknown actress who, by an act of kindness, wins a leading position on the stage and a husband. The offering is fairly entertaining. Zena Keefe, Gerald Gordon, Josephene Earle and Mrs. Nellie Anderson have the leading parts.

WURRA WURRA (Kalem), Feb. 8.—Ethel Teare, as a cannibal queen, bounces through this one-reel comedy in her habitual breezy manner and casts longing (gastronomic) eyes at Bud Duncan and Jack MacDermott, who appear as a pair of shipwrecked sailors fit for the kettle or the spit. Ethel's costume is the latest fashion hint from the Cannibal Islands and becomes her mightily. The reel is a good example of knockabout comedy and broad humor.

BUNGLE'S RAINY DAY (Vim), Feb. 10.—A new "comic" has come to town! His name is Fernandea Perez and he is a remarkable gentleman. His headlong dives into an empty barrel are both startling and amusing. He has plenty of other tricks up his sleeves, at the ends of his toes and inside of his coattails. He is going to make a place for himself right along side of the toprow knockabout comedians. His work in "Bungle's Rainy Day" proves this absolutely! He is from Italy and has a big European reputation; he deserves it. He is a huge success in his first Vim release.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE NO. 11, 1916 (Selig), Feb. 10.—An ostrich farm is the feature item in this number. Other events: Atlantic fleet trying out guns near Isle of Cuba; target practice on dreadnaughts; wild fowl preserve, Marshfield, Mass.; Serb children at Aldershot, Eng.; summer weather sport, San Francisco; troops leaving Aldershot for the front; Titanic dead honored, Quincy, Mass.; President Wilson at Davenport, Iowa.

THE TRAIL'S END (No. 16 of the "Ventures of Marguerite" Series) (Kalem), Feb. 11.—The closing episode of Howard Irving Young's three-part venture and the finish of the Marguerite series are both in this one-reel photoplay. Mr. Young's story forms a fitting conclusion to the exciting chapters of the heroine's life, and all her admirers will wish her a peaceful and happy future. Miss Courtot, Richard Purdon, Arthur Albertson, Robert Ellis and H. G. Hockey make up the cast.

THE PERIL OF THE RAIL (No. 66 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), Feb. 12.—A wild engine and a passenger train approaching on the same track give the lady lightning jerker a fine opening for a display of wide awake wits and nerve. A gang of car thieves also are come up with by the resourceful Helen. Robyn Adair, Clarence Burton and Franklin Hall are in the cast with Miss Gibson. By the way, this young woman shows a steady improvement as an actress; her physical equipment was perfect from the start.

BILLIE'S LUCKY BILL (Lubin), Feb. 12.—The fun in this one-reel comedy is well worth laughing at. The main idea is a good one and Mark Swan, the author, has surrounded it with a number of amusing complications. Billie Reeves, Peter Lang, Arthur Cunningham, James Cassaday, Jack Delson and Carrie Reynolds give a spirited performance of the comedy.

THE FABLE OF "THE GRASS WIDOW AND THE MESMEREE AND THE SIX DOLLARS" (Essanay), Feb. 9.—Nothing more amusing or more keenly satirical of things as they happen every day, has been written by George Ade. The situations and the reading matter are of equal merit, and Warda Howard as the Grass Widow does an exceedingly clever piece of character work. Carroll C. James is a capital foil as a Keen Business Man, and Marion Skinner is of distinct benefit to the cast.

THE HIGH SIGN (Vim), Feb. 11.—A remarkable secret society gives the one-reel comedy its title, and Robert Burns and Walter Stull rush through the action with their usual speed, dropping seeds of laughter at frequent intervals. The portal through which the lodge room is entered is in a class by itself and must be seen to be appreciated.

FREDDY'S LAST BEAN (Vitagraph), Feb. 11.—A bright and quick moving comedy is this one-reel photoplay, written by Agnes C. Johnston and produced by Frank Currier. Freddy follows the ponies for a living and "goes broke" as a natural consequence. The author's subtitles are very "racy" and the cast, in which Wm. Dangman has the title role, is thoroughly capable.

A MIX-UP IN MOVIES (Selig), Feb. 12.—Tom Mix is the prime mover in this "Movie" comedy, having written it, directed it and acted in it. It has to do with the making of moving pictures—a subject with which Mr. Mix may be said to be fairly familiar—and the mix-up does credit to Mr. Mix. Mixed in with Mr. Mix in this movie mix-up are Pat Chrisman, Sid Jordan, Joe Simkin and Babe Chrisman. The picture is an unmixed success.

General Film Company Specials.

THE STRANGE CASE OF MARY PAGE (No. 3, "The Web") (Essanay), Feb. 7.—The events of this instalment of the Essanay serial show clearly the cause of Mary's hatred of Pollock. This is brought out at the trial by the evidence of a reporter. The interest is sustained throughout and the court room scenes have been staged with a keen eye to the best results. A review of parts second, third and fourth appeared in the issue of Feb. 19, on page 1147.

THE SURPRISES OF AN EMPTY HOTEL (Vitagraph), Feb. 7.—A. C. Gunter wrote the novel upon which this four-reel photoplay is founded. The plot has all the quickness of action and deftness of complication that mark the best of this author's stories. J. E. Brady has made a clever screen version and the production reflects credit upon Theodore Marston. Charles Richman heads a strong cast which includes Leo Delaney, Charles Eldridge, William Dunn, Robert Gaillard, Arline Pretty and Ethel Corcoran.

THE MAN IN HIM (Essanay), Feb. 8.—A two-reel drama with G. M. Anderson in the leading part. The story has to do with a man's sacrifice for the woman he loves. The interest is well sustained. Mr. Anderson is given an opportunity to discard his Broncho Billy makeup and appear as a man of refinement and position. The picture is well acted.

THE LAST SHOT (Lubin), Feb. 8.—George W. Terwilliger is the author and producer of this two-reel photoplay. The title relates to a duel and the story is high-pressure romance. The action is rapid and the incidents are interesting. The picture is most worthily played by Earl Metcalfe, Wm. H. Turner, Arthur Matthews, Ormi Hawley and Eleanor Barry. A review appeared in the issue of Feb. 19, page 1144.

THE IRON WILL (Biograph), Feb. 9.—Picturesque settings are a conspicuous feature of this three-part Biograph adaptation of "The Plutocrats," a novel by Jokai. The story is simple in construction, romantic in tone and rather improbable in the situations presented. The characters are interpreted by capable players, including Raymond Nye, Vera Sisson and Jose Ruben.

THE DARKEST HOUR (No. 12 of the "Stingaree" Series) (Kalem), Feb. 9.—This is the closing instalment of the serial founded on the E. W. Hornung "Stingaree" stories. The generosity of the highwayman's rival enables "Stinagree" to return to England, marry the girl of his choice and take his old place in society. A review of this number was printed in the issue of Feb. 5, page 792.

SOLD TO SATAN (Lubin), Feb. 10.—The plot of this three-reel drama is a modern version of "Faust" with a little of "The Black Crook" thrown in for good measure. It was written by Capt. R. P. Rifenberick, Jr., and will please all believers in a personal devil. The author has worked out his problem with considerable skill, and Edward Sloman has produced the photoplay with good results. Mr. Sloman also plays The Prince of Darkness. L. C. Shumway has an important role. A review of the picture is printed in this issue.

THE BIG BROTHER (Knickerbocker), Feb. 11.—There are many of the elements that make for success in this three-reel Star Feature photoplay. The story is romantic and plausible, most of the settings are picturesque, and the cast, lead by Henry King, do justice to the different roles. It illustrates the dangers run by white men when they allow themselves to become entangled by some dusky beauty of the South Sea Islands.

GOLDEN LIES (Essanay), Feb. 12.—Joseph A. Roach has written an interesting and deeply human three-reel photoplay, and Bryant Washburn, Elizabeth Burbridge and Pat Calhoun play the leading roles with feeling and skill. The story deals with two brothers, both of whom love the same woman. After the heroine is stricken with blindness, the elder of the two men proves that he alone is worthy of her.

FROM OUT OF THE PAST (Vitagraph), Feb. 12.—The familiar situation of the brother and sister learning of their relationship only after they have fallen in love with each other, is the big motive of this three-reel drama, written by Ruth Handford and produced by Wm.

Humphrey. Miss Handford has handled her subject skilfully, however, and sustained the interest to the finish. The cast is a long one, William Humphrey, Garry McGarry, Eulalie Jensen and Carolyn Birch having the principal parts. The drama is well played.

Bluebird Photoplays.

HOP, THE DEVIL'S BREW (Bluebird), Feb. 14.—An unusually fine picture, based on opium smuggling and the efforts of United States inspectors to prevent it. Phillips Smalley and Lois Weber furnished a production rich in accurate detail, and gave excellent performances in the leading roles. This offering may be strongly recommended.

THE WRONG DOOR (Bluebird), Feb. 21.—With the DeHavens, Carter and his wife, Flora Parker, in the leading roles, this picture is a moderately entertaining mixture of farce and burlesque. There are moments when Mr. DeHaven is decidedly amusing. Scenes photographed in a theater at the time of a musical comedy performance are made interesting.

Kleine-Edison Feature Service

WHEN LOVE IS KING (Edison), Feb. 9.—For release through the Kleine-Edison service, the Edison Company has produced an entertaining photoplay of love and adventure, in which the acting of Richard Tucker is notably convincing. Carrol McComas makes an engaging person of the American heiress with whom the king falls in love. There is some unexpected comedy in the last reel of a picture generally romantic in tone.

Metro Pictures Corporation

DIMPLES (Columbia-Metro), Feb. 14.—Mary Miles Minter looks charming and acts with plenty of girlish grace in this five-part photoplay, directed by Edgar Jones. The story is simple and most of its interest depends upon the personality of the youthful star. Attractive scenes were photographed in Florida.

Mutual Film Corporation.

THE DEFECTIVE DETECTIVE (Cub), Feb. 4.—Billy Armstrong is featured in this farce comedy which has quite an amusing situation. The detective in question is called upon by a friend to trace a terrible personage whose face repeatedly appears at the window. The clever detective not to be outdone on an opportunity to make some money has a friend make up for the occasion who appears at the window at the proper time. His game is spoiled, however, when the policeman on the beat brings in the right man.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 58 (Mutual), Feb. 10.—A number of intensely interesting events are chronicled in this issue of the Mutual Weekly, namely, wild elk being released on the slopes of Pike's Peak, the natives of Uganda, East Africa, being examined for "sleeping sickness" which is caused by the bite of the tsetse fly. A photograph of the tsetse fly is also projected. A view of Stone Mountain, Georiga, which is to be carved into a memorial to the soldiers of the confederacy, is also of unusual interest; and animated photographs of Lydia Loupokova and Stanislaw Idzikowski, dancers of the Russian Ballet.

SEE AMERICA FIRST (No. 22, "The Home of the Lumber Jack") (Gaumont), Feb. 13.—"The Home of the Lumber Jack" is the title of this number of "See America First." It presents scenes in the lumber woods of Minnesota, showing the old and the new method of handling the logs. We see the trees cut down, and skidded to the car on which they are conveyed to the river, after which they are placed on the ice to await the spring thaw to carry them down stream to the saw mill. This is an unusually interesting number. On the same reel with "Keeping Up with the Joneses."

KEEPING UP WITH THE JONESES (Gaumont), Feb. 13.—Pa McGinis, whose exploits we have followed with interest, has this time become a Nimrod, and in his dream is lost in a wilderness and awakened from a slumber into which he has fallen by a big bear. In a fall which he takes over a cliff, in a hollow log, he suddenly awakes to find that he has fallen out of bed.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

POWDER (Mutual Masterpicture de luxe American, No. 66), Feb. 10.—A five-part picture based on an interesting story, which, however, lacks the proper construction. A great deal of the interest of the play is lost for this reason. The story treats of how a munition manufacturer is approached by two warring nations. Before entering into a contract with the one he has chosen to deal with, he sends his son to investigate the financial stability of that nation. It turns out that his shells are being used by both parties and his son is killed by one bursting shell. This brings the father to realize his guilt of the crime of commercialism. There is present in the story the adversary of the munition makers, and a political exile, both of whom play large parts in the play. These latter roles are efficiently handled by Arthur Maude and Constance Crawley.

LIFE'S BLIND ALLEY (Mutual Masterpicture de luxe), Feb. 14.—A splendid five-reel ranch story, written by Kenneth B. Clark. Harold Lockwood, May Allison, Warren Ellsworth, Wm. Tedmarsh, George Connors, Nell Franzen and Perry Banks appear. This is full of picturesque scenes and there is a fresh, humorous touch in many of the incidents. Two love stories become interwoven in the course of the tale. The wrong couples marry and this leads to some pathetic and at the same time amusing results. The plot is clever and subtitles are a distinct addition to it. Familiar situations are given new meaning and the excerpts from Omar Kayyam toward the close make a good feature. A good offering.

THE DEAD ALIVE (Mutual Masterpicture de luxe Gaumont, No. 69).—Feb. 17).—This five-part production will be found thoroughly satisfactory. It is a feature that will please wherever it is shown, and has been produced with the greatest care as to detail and artistic values by Henri Bernot for the Gaumont Company. Marguerite Courtot plays a double role, portraying the respective characters of twin sisters, daughters of a man who is arrested for murder. At the time of his arrest the two daughters move away from the hearthstone in different directions. One of them becoming the wife of a millionaire is drowned. The other, under the spell of the villain of the play, is sent as the ghost of her dead sister to rob her brother-in-law. The interest of the picture is maintained to the end when we see his wife's sister in the arms of the young millionaire. James Levering does excellent work as the father, and Sidney Mason as the millionaire.

LIFE'S HARMONY (American), Feb. 22.—A three-reel production featuring Vivian Rich. We have a vivid recollection of having seen this picture before. It may be a re-issue, which is always in proper form. The story is not uninteresting. It is a bit sentimental in its treatment, and pictures an old organist being ousted from his position for a younger man. Vivian Rich is very charming as the daughter of the old organist.

THE REUNION (Thanhouser), Feb. 23.—A three-reel story of delicate sentiment and true pathos, by Virginia T. Hudson and Clinton H. Stagg. J. H. Gilmour appears as a soldier boy of '61 and later as a veteran attending the Grand Army reunion in Washington, D. C. Actual scenes from the parade are deftly woven into the story. The former nurse attends the reunion and sees her lover of war days in the parade. This plot has been used before, but is handled very effectively here. The letter incident is well pictured. This is full of genuine feeling and has good humorous touches running through it.

THE OVAL DIAMOND (Mutual Masterpicture de luxe Thanhouser, No. 72), Feb. 24.—A Thanhouser production in five parts, that is well worth while. The story is constructed in an ingenious manner, and we are constantly being treated to little surprises as it develops. The "oval diamond" is in the possession of the uncle and cousin of an orphan girl who is kept isolated by them. Next door by chance comes a young man to visit his uncle. This young man and the girl succeed eventually in gaining possession of the diamond, after a series of thrilling adventures. Director Mitchell has done a good piece of work with Barbara Gilroy and Harris Gordon in the leading roles.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

HE FELL IN LOVE WITH HIS WIFE (Pallas), Feb. 17.—A five-part production based on the celebrated novel of the same name by E. P. Roe. This will be found to be an absorbing picture, well produced and presenting the main idea of the story lucidly and forcefully. William D. Taylor directed the production in which Florence Rockwell is featured, playing opposite Forrest Stanley.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE NEWS, NO. 10, 1916 (Pathe), Feb. 2.—Some of the interesting items of this issue are views of Bryan's home in Florida, Wilson's reception at Cleveland, Pearl White displaying gowns to be worn in the Pathe serial "The Iron Claw," also closeups of Brandeis, Lansing and other prominent people.

HAPLESS HAPPENINGS (Starlight), Feb. 7.—Again Heinie and Louie appear in a farce comedy which is little different in theme from others in which they have been seen. This time the heiress of millions falls in love with Heinie, and insists that he impersonate a nobleman who is due to arrive from a foreign land to marry her. The arrival of the nobleman causes much amusing confusion. There is good entertainment in this number.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

THE PRECIOUS PACKET (Pathe Gold Rooster Play), Feb. 11.—A five-part Gold Rooster Play featuring Ralph Kellard and Lois Meridith. Among the cast is also W. Tabor Wetmore, a well-known tenor the dramatic interpreter. The production is a good one, and is not lacking in thrills. There are some especially fine racing scenes in the opening reel, and plenty of action throughout the play. The story tells of the adventures of a young Englishman who is sent to America on a mission unknown to himself. After being kidnapped by the woman to whom the message of the packet refers he falls in love with her and discovers on opening the packet at the appointed date that it contains an order for his marriage to her. She is the queen elect of a French kingdom to be established in Canada.

THE RED CIRCLE (No. 9, "Dodging the Law"—Balboa), Feb. 12.—The ninth chapter of this serial, entitled "Dodging the Law," presents another of the charitable crimes of June Travis. This time she helps a crime suspect to elude the detectives, because he has previously saved Lamar from death. As usual the interest of the story never flags, and one is left with a desire to see the continuation of the story.

Signal Film Corporation.

THE GIRL AND THE GAME (Chapter 8, "The Race for the Right of Way"), Feb. 14.—"The Race for the Right of Way" is the title of this number. This chapter will be found interesting. The race is accomplished in a thrilling manner, with Helen, of course, saving the day. A small building is lifted bodily from the position which it occupies and moved over on another strip of ground and is demolished by the victorious locomotive.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.

TWENTY MINUTES AT THE FAIR (L-KO), Feb. 20.—A low comedy number, featuring Billy Ritchie and others. Particular audiences will not like this because of the vulgarity of many of the bits of small business. None of the humor is very good and the production as a whole has not much to commend in it.

THE DISAPPEARING GROOM (Nestor), Feb. 21.—A comedy, featuring Billie Rhodes, Ray Gallagher, Neal Burns and others. The groom is shanghaied on the eve of his wedding. The best man leads a rescue party and, while the groom is freed, he himself is kept aboard the vessel. A pleasing little story, well presented.

PIPE DREAMS (Victor), Feb. 22.—A comedy number, with a slight plot, featuring Harry C. Myers and Rosemary Theby. The young wife attempts scenario writing, but her effort is unsuccessful. The idea in this does not develop very strongly. A fair number.

THE TURTLE DOVES (Rex), Feb. 23).—A comedy number, featuring Edna Flugarth, Langhorne Burton and Douglas Monroe. Two former lovers meet after five years and tell their stories. In spite of their former vows each has married happily. The idea is amusing and presented with a fair degree of strength.

JOHN PELLET'S DREAM (Laemmle), Feb. 24.—A comedy number, written by Rupert Julian, featuring the author, Elsie Jane Wilson and others. Three men on the desert decide to give the last drink of beer to the one who has the best dream. Each tells his dream next morning. There is a good laugh at the close. An original offering which gets over strongly.

MARRIED ON THE WING (Joker), Feb. 26.—A comedy number, by Ben Cohn, featuring Ernie Shield, Sherman Bainbridge and Lois Wilson. A young man with the grippe and a whiskey bottle, in which he has been indulging freely, must get married in two hours in order to get his uncle's inheritance. He makes it after some amusing experiences. The number is quite pleasing.

UNCLE SAM AT WORK (No. 10, "Preparedness"—Powers), Feb. 26.—This number takes up the work of the U. S. Army in an entertaining way. Scenes are shown at Vera Cruz, West Point and at a government post. The work of infantry and cavalry is very instructive. Some of the photography is unfortunately a little dim, but it is mainly acceptable.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials.

DOLLY'S SCOOP (Rex), Feb. 20.—A two-reel newspaper yarn, by Ida May Park, featuring Louise Welch, Hayward Mack and others. The cast is a large one and this makes the opening scenes a little confusing. Later a very pleasing story develops, in which the editor in his quest for sensational news almost involves his own wife in a scandal. The photography is good and the production as a whole a pleasing one, even though the story is not at all times convincing.

SONS OF SATAN (Red Feather Photoplay), Feb. 21.—A five-reel story of crime and detection, produced by George Loane Tucker from a story by Wm. Le Queux. The company appearing in this is an English one and includes Gerald Ames, Louis Gilfert, Arthur Cullon, Blanche Bryan, Chas. Rock and others. This is full of thrills and sensations, all of a melodramatic sort. It is very entertaining throughout, in the same way that the old style detective novels are. Some of the scenes are short and choppy and the photography is uneven in places. At the same time this has a strong appeal. False walls, secret panels, disguises and all manner of tricks are employed to keep the mystery moving. The plot is well rounded and contains many moments of suspense.

THE ILLEGAL BUCKET SHOP (Universal Special Feature), Feb. 21.—No. 11 of the "Graft" series. This number introduces Richard Stanton as still another assistant to Bruce Larnigan. Bruce is held for murder in this number, as the result of a shooting which occurred while he was searching for evidence against the gambling trust. The instalment is not extremely convincing in certain details, but is handled with characteristic action and interesting incident.

THE DUPE (Gold Seal), Feb. 22.—A three-reel story, by James Dayton, featuring Herbert Rawlinson, Agnes Vernon and others. The scenes are all laid in the slums, the hero being made the victim of an opium smuggling plot. Later, after his release from prison, he saves the country girl from the white salvers. The Chinatown scenes are good; also the pictures of the gang's headquarters. This is very well done for a production which deals almost wholly with the seamy side of life.

MADAME CUBIST (Victor), Feb. 23.—A two-reel offering, featuring Mary Fuller, Curtis Benton and Clifford Grey, the scenario being by Elaine Sterne. The character of Madame Cubist is a novel one and Miss Fuller wears some very striking gowns and headgear. The costume ball is well presented. The plot is familiar, the hero making a bet that he can win her love. The strongest features of this are its general novelty and fresh treatment.

A BEAST OF SOCIETY (Big U), Feb. 24.—A three-reel offering, by Harvey Gates, featuring Travers Vale, Louise Vale and Douglas Gerrard. The latter plays the part of a homewrecker, who lures away his friend's wife. Later he attempts to ruin the daughter, but the parents appear in time to prevent this. The presentation is only an average one and the offering is not very strong, owing largely to the somewhat sordid character of the plot. In the final scenes the wife returns to her husband and is forgiven.

I'LL GET HER YET (Imp), Feb. 25.—A light-running comedy of the burlesque, farcical type, featuring Pat Rooney, Marion Bent and Victor Potel. It concerns the efforts of a young man to marry the girl of his choice despite her father's objections. He acts as bell boy in a hotel in order to be near her. This is well photographed throughout and contains numerous laughable incidents. It is just a compendium of rapid fire antics from start to finish and quite amusing it its way.

World Film Corporation

LOVE'S CRUCIBLE (Brady), Feb. 14.—Adapted from "The Point of View," a stage play by Jules Eckert Goodman, this five-part drama introduces Frances Nelson as a World Film star in a role that she handles extremely well. The story of a girl's troubles when she comes to New York to study art is adroitly handled by Director Emil Chautard and possesses a strong sympathetic appeal.

THE CLARION (Equitable), Feb. 14.—Carlyle Blackwell makes his first appearance as an Equitable star in a well produced adaptation of Samuel Hopkins Adams' story of fraudulent business and fearless journalism. Mr. Blackwell gives a convincing performance as an aggressive young reformer and the supporting company is adequate. Exciting mob scenes in the concluding reel show James Durkin's direction at its best.

Miscellaneous.

ONE DAY (B. S. Moss), February.—In this five-part picture we find a romantic story of fairly entertaining quality, which profits by many beautiful locations photographed in Lakewood, N. J. There is nothing in the least risque about the production. The acting, especially of Jeanne Ivar in the part of the heroine, is commendable.

WASHINGTON EXTERIORS BY PRESIDENT'S PERMISSION.

The exterior locations for "The Immortal Flame," the newest Ivan play, required Washington settings as the locale of the story is for the most part laid in the Capitol City.

It was necessary in order to use the beautiful buildings which house the administrative departments of the country, to obtain special permision from President Wilson himself, and this was obtained only after some trouble, as his Excellency was touring the country urging his "preparedness program." Through the good offices of Mr. Tumulty, his secretary, the necessary permission was finally obtained and the entire Ivan company, under the direction of Ivan Abramson, swooped down on the capitol where they are now taking the necessary scenes to make "The Immortal Flame" realistic as to atmosphere. In order to make the trip with the company Miss Maude Fealy, who is starred in the new production, cancelled her vaudeville engagement on the Keith circuit, where she is the headliner.

Others who are at Washington with Director Ivan Abramson include Paula Shay, Edna Luby, Joseph Burke and James Cooley.

A novelty panoramic view of the Capitol is promised in the new production, such as obtained in "A Fool's Paradise," the current Ivan release, where the whole of Atlantic City was shown from the boardwalk. Mr. Abramson desires to picture all the executive buildings in Washington in the same way, not to detract from his drama, but to combine the artistic with the educational.

A BIOGRAPH SPECTACLE.

"The Mystery of Orcival," the famous mystery drama by the great French writer, Emile Gaboriau, creator of the detective, Lecoq, who gave Edgar Allan Poe his inspiration for "The Murders in the Rue Morgue," and other tales, is the three-reel Biograph feature for Wednesday, March 8.

The story deals with a strange crime and the solution of the mystery by the detective. For swiftness of action and novelty of incident it has seldom been equaled. Incidentally it provides opportunity for spectacular and sensational effects, of which the director has taken full advantage. Gretchen Hartman, Charles H. Mailes, Vera Sisson and G. Raymond Nye have the leading roles.

Also on the Biograph program for the week of March 6 is a single reel Biograph re-issue which created a sensation when first released. "The House of Darkness" is a striking conception by D. W. Griffith, a poetical expression of a mind temporarily unhinged, which yields to the power of music. Dealing with one of the most pitiful of human conditions, the picture is so presented that no painful impression is made upon the mind of the beholder. For suspense and sincerity it has probably never been equaled in one reel. Charles H. Mailes does some masterly acting in the leading role, and is ably supported by Claire McDowell, Lillian Gish, Lionel Barrymore and Alfred Paget.

CHANGE "SIS HOPKINS" RELEASE.

A factory accident to "A Flock of Skeletons" which had been originally announced as the first Sis Hopkins release, has caused the Kalem Company to postpone that issue while retakes are being made. "A Leap Year Wooing" is the comedy selected to inaugurate the new line of single reel subjects on the General Film Program. The initial release date will be March 3, as originally announced for "A Flock of Skeletons."

It is probable that the latter subject will be the third release in the new line. The initial subject, "A Leap Year Wooing," presents Sis Hopkins as a love-lorn slavey who lands in a whirl of excitement when she sets out to find a mate for herself.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"THE HOAX HOUSE" (Universal).

"The Hoax House" is the title of a neat two-reel comedy written by Raymond L. Schrock, in which King Baggot plays the role of a psychic fake, being very ably assisted by Edna Hunter, who again demonstrates her versatility by playing in comedy in a most pleasing manner. King Baggot plays "Frank King," a salesman for the "Nearly Every Kiss Company." While wending his way to a confectionery store one day, he meets Belle Adair (Edna Hunter), and a mild flirtation ensues. Belle is a vaudeville actress and that night King meets her at the stage door. Together they celebrated and as a consequence the company King works for as well as the manager of the theatre where Belle is appearing find fault with the conduct of their people, and both get fired.

Scene from "The Hoax House" (Universal).

Thereupon they consult each other and King suggests that they become partners in some business that will afford them a living. They become mind readers, and at once insert an advertisement in a newspaper, announcing that "Bobo, the Seer," gives advice on matters of business, life and society at the Hotel Carlton.

There are many genuine complications in which King succeeds in obtaining large sums of money from several victims. When the victims are about to fall on the faker, having procured police assistance, the salesman and the actress skip down the fire escape, and when the police force an entrance in King's room, find that the birds have flown with several thousands of dollars.

GAUMONT FILMING "THE HAUNTED MANOR."

For a March release as a Mutual Masterpicture, de luxe edition, Gaumont is now filming "The Haunted Manor." The production of this five-reel feature is now being made at Jacksonville, Fla., where Director Edwin Middleton has had built an East Indian village and commandeered all the tigers, lions and elephants of a circus that is wintering near by. Miss Iva Shepard has the leading role.

The story tells of the life of an American adventuress at the court of an East Indian rajah. Miss Shepard was so successful as the adventuress in "The Drifter," which Gaumont released Feb. 7, that the part was given her as a matter of course. Fleeing from the court of the East Indian potentate, the adventuress returns to America. This gives opportunity for scenic contrast, the strange exotic scenes of East India and the society surroundings of wealthy Americans in New York. Many scenes take place in an artist's studio, where a fight for love of the artist is waged by the adventuress and a model with all the feminine arts of which both are capable.

Miss Iva Shepard's first picture as a Gaumont star—for she has only been featured in previous productions—gives her the support of Earl O. Schenck in his first Gaumont picture. Mr. Schenck has the part of the artist. The rajah is played by Henry W. Pemberton. Beside Mr. Schenck two other principals are seen for the first time in a Gaumont production. These are Miss Olive Trevor, as the artist's model, and Robert Clugston, as the rajah's servant. Important parts are also played by Miss Gertrude Robinson, Miss Mathilde Baring, James Levering, Miss Mary Gunnis Davis, John Mackin and Harry Chira.

"LILLO OF THE SULU SEAS" (American).

A striking story of the South Sea Isles crowded with adventure, love, intrigue and the lure of gold, is found in "Lillo of the Sulu Seas," a three-part Flying "A" drama produced by the American Film Company, Inc., for release by the Mutual Film Corporation. Harold Lockwood, popular star of the American production and the beautiful May Allison, co-stars in many important productions released by the Mutual, are the featured players in "Lillo of the Sulu Seas;" Lockwood in the role of Ralph Holt and Miss Allison as Lillo.

Many of the scenes in this powerful drama were taken in and about the pearl fisheries along the coast of Lower California, where the major portion of the story takes place. William Stowell, Perry Banks and Harry von Meter, prominent members of the American's permanent stock company, have important roles.

BRADY PRODUCTION POSTPONED.

The production of "Will o' the Wisp," with Alice Brady as its featured player, has been postponed until September to enable the actress to play the star role in "The Quick or the Dead," which is to be screened by the William A. Brady Picture Plays Corporation. The picture rights in the Amelie Rives story are derived from Estelle Clayton, who acted the leading role in the stage dramatization. "The Quick or the Dead" will be the tenth photoplay in which Miss Brady has been the star during the past year.

MARGUERITE CLARK STARRED IN ALPINE DRAMA.

"Out of the Drifts," a dramatic Alpine romance and the next photoplay in which Marguerite Clark will be starred by the Famous Players Film Company on the Paramount program, is scheduled for release on Feb. 24. It is a tale of the eternal snows, and the giant mountains which form its backgrounds are symbolical of the greatness of the theme about which the story is woven.

The action opens in the region of the celebrated St. Bernard Pass and has as its setting the famous old monastery in the pass. Miss Clark appears as Elise, a little Alpine orphan, who is earning her living as a shepherdess. Rudolph, a guide, is in love with Elise, but he has failed to win her heart. In London, George Van Rensselaer, a young roue, is deserted by

"Cleo," the girl upon whom he has lavished much of his wealth. Tired and disgusted, he comes to St. Bernard to forget.

The big Alpine scenes in this story were obtained in the north, where Director J. Searle Dawley spent several weeks with a company which includes in addition to Miss Clark, William Courtleigh, Jr., J. W. Johnston, Robert Conville, Ivan Simpson and others who are well known in the theatrical and motion picture world.

"WHO KNOWS?" (Knickerbocker).

The Knickerbocker Star Features release for Feb. 25 is a stirring heart interest story. A crime is committed by a young pal of an old-time gambler. The pal was intoxicated and unconscious of his act. The old pal shields the criminal, protecting him from the law. The story shows a rapid action on the part of the detectives on the trail of the guilty. A hotel girl at a news stand crosses the track of the young pal; a romance starts, all of which is overclouded by the crime of the young man.

At last the romance reaches a climax, the destiny of the girl is at stake, and the young man faces a doubtful future with his growing conscience of remorse. Finally the old pal, realizing that his influence has been the indirect means of leading the young man into the wrong and finding that both are enmeshed in the net laid out by the officers of the law, charges himself with the crime, declaring he had deceived the young pal, in making him believe he committed the wrong. Strong dramatic crises are reached, and the young pal denounces the old man, then slowly comes to himself to realize what the old man has done for him in the end. The old man pays the penalty for the crime, the young pal is made to believe himself innocent and at last lives the life of a true man. The old man with unflinching faith in heaven believed that God would see and forgive—"who knows?"

"THE DREAM OF EUGENE ARAM" (Selig).

The Selig Company, following its policy of radical improvement in film production, has just announced a number of multiple reel dramas to be released through General Film service.

"The Dream of Eugene Aram" is a picturized version by Colin Campbell of Thomas Hood's world-famous poem. Tyrone Power enacts the leading role. There is tense action and beautiful scenic embellishment. Colin Campbell, responsible for the adaptation and production of this film drama, is in an exclusive class as a director, having produced such film dramas as "The Spoilers," "The Ne'er-do-well," "The Carpet from Bagdad," etc., etc. "The Dream of Eugene Aram" will be released Monday, February 28.

"LOVE AND LATHER" (Vim).

The Vim comedy release for Feb. 25 is one of the funniest in the "Pokes and Jabbs" series, which feature Robert Burns and Walter Stull. Pokes is a member of the brigade of "White Wings" of the street; easily taken for a barber, he takes the place of Spook, the village barber, and is soon enmeshed in the attractions of the manicurist of the shop. Complications build up as the ingenious "White Wings" tests new appliances for shaving the unsuspecting customers.

The comedy includes an escaped convict, Jabbs, who suffers at the hands of Pokes and a general mixup of the police. Pokes, however, suffers for his escapades and the escaped convict wins the girl and the graces of the barber. The General Film program will carry this release.

FRANK ELLIOTT REJOINS UNIVERSAL.

Frank Elliott, one of the best known actors of the English stage, this week joined the Universal forces at their Western studios. The greater part of his film work has been done in and around the Los Angeles studios, where he is regarded as one of the best heavy characters.

This is not Elliott's first appearance in Universal pictures. He was formerly a member of that company's forces at their Universal City studios, where he worked in some of their best known features, the last one being a five-reel Bosworth production, staged under the direction of Otis Turner, under the title "The Scarlet Sin." In this Elliott played the heavy lead. The first picture in which he has been cast since returning is the five-reel film version of Joseph Hatton's story, "John Needham's Double," which the Smalleys are staging with Tyrone Power in the stellar role.

"SAVED BY A SONG" (Universal).

Ben Wilson's latest production with Dorothy Phillips in the leading role, "Saved by a Song," will be a regular release on the Universal program of March 5. The story is a simple and interesting tale of a country boy who is falsely accused of murder, railroaded to jail, only to find several years later that the real culprit confessed on his dying bed.

Scene from "Saved by a Song" (Universal).

It is a neat little drama in two reels in which both Miss Phillips and Ben Wilson do clever work, assisted by Charles Ogle, Joe Girard, A. H. Bushby and Ruth Donnelly.

BLANCHE SWEET IN "THE BLACKLIST."

Although not designed in the form of a propaganda for or against the cause of capital and labor, "The Blacklist," the most recent Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company production on the Paramount program, in which Blanche Sweet is the star, probably will create national interest. The theme of this production has its origin in the troubles between operators and miners in Colorado about two years ago, which resulted in serious conflict.

The deep human note in this theme lies in the fight of labor for the right to work. The economic principles discussed are applicable to all lines of industry and on this account "The Blacklist" should prove of absorbing interest to people of every locality.

Miss Sweet will have exceptional opportunities in this production, which was directed by William C. De Mille, who also directed her recent production, "The Ragamuffin." Among those who appear in the cast are Charles Clary, Ernest Joy and Billy Elmer.

"TOO PROUD TO FIGHT" (UBO.)

The popularity of David Horsley's Cub Comedies, featuring George Ovey, continues without abatement. Since the introduction of this brand a little less than six months ago the number of prints sold of each release has increased over two hundred per cent. over the first issue. This, perhaps more than anything else, gives an idea of the manner in which the Cubs are received throughout the country.

The forthcoming release scheduled for February 18 presents George Ovey in one of his typical subjects—"Too Proud to Fight." Its story concerns the efforts of Jerry to evade punishment at the hands of a stalwart Swede, whose sweetheart Jerry has stolen. In these efforts he thrusts himself into innumerable difficulties of a compromising nature. His frantic attempts to save himself from the consequences, which he knows are sure to follow, are cleverly done and make for plenty of fun.

The full strength of the Cub Comedy, including George George, Gordon McGregor, Louis FitzRoy, Belle Bennet, Janet Sully and Louise Horner, take part in the enactment of the story which lives up in every respect to the high mark established in previous releases.

TWO SELIG "RED SEALS."

One of the greatest of American spectacular dramas is the consensus of the reviews of the Selig Red Seal play, "Thou Shalt Not Covet," released on Monday, February 7, through V-L-S-E, Inc. The spectacular scenes in this wonderful drama, particularly the shipwreck scenes and Kathlyn Williams' struggle with an infuriated leopard, are mentioned by all trade journal reviewers as the very last word in thrills.

The Selig Red Seal play, "Unto Those Who Sin," to be released through V-L-S-E on Monday, March 6, will be found a worthy successor to "Thou Shalt Not Covet." Miss Fritzi Brunette makes her initial debut as a star in V-L-S-E productions. "Unto Those Who Sin" was written by James Oliver Curwood and truthfully present the trials and temptations that beset the paths of working girls. A stenographer working for a mere pittance, which is snatched from her by her parents weekly, succumbs to the enticements of luxury and fine dress. She sacrifices everything, even the love of an upright man, in order to gratify her passion for purple and fine linen. And when it is too late she discovers that true love is the greatest prize of all and that the wages of sin is death.

In "Unto Those Who Sin" Miss Brunette wears eighteen different and costly gowns fashioned especially for the drama. Her acting will prove a revelation. She puts all the fire and passion that is possible into her character role and in the denouement, which is trilling in the extreme, she carries the life story of a modern siren to its logical ending.

An all-star cast will appear in the support of Miss Brunette and the scenic effects are unusually beautiful.

CLEO RIDGLEY AND WALLACE REID IN "BEHIND THE MASK."

Following her recent success as co-star with Wallace Reid in the Lasky production, "The Golden Chance," a Paramount picture, Cleo Ridgley, it was announced by the Lasky Feature Play Company this week, is already at work in a second production in which she and Mr. Reid will appear as co-stars. The photoplay is entitled, "Behind the Mask," by Cecil B. De Mille and Jeannie MacPherson, and the producer is Paul Dickey, the famous dramatist and stage director, who recently joined the Lasky producing forces.

In the year or more since Miss Ridgley has been a member of the Lasky company her popularity has been greatly increased by reason of a series of excellent impersonations on the screen. Miss Ridgley for years was known to motion picture audiences, chiefly because of her successes as "temptress of the screen." Under the Lasky direction, however, she developed more versatile qualities until now she has taken her place among the most versatile and most popular stars of motion pictures.

"THE IDOL OF THE STAGE" (Mutual).

We all have our human failings and weaknesses. That is why we all like to see plays in which our own human qualities are portrayed. But we always want for our own satisfaction to see them overcome in the end. That is one reason why the Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition, "The Idol of the Stage," will be appreciated by all who see it.

"The Idol" is a very weak and failing young man. But his good qualities predominate, and even though it seems for a time that his baser self will gain again ascendency in his nature, evil is finally overcome. Malcolm Williams, the well known and exceedingly popular star of the legitimate drama, plays the leading roles. He is exceptionally well qualified for his part, since he is familiar with all phases of stage life. In support of Mr. Williams, appear Miss Lucille Taft, the clever Gaumont star; Charles H. Travis, John Mackin, Richard Garrick (the director), James Levering, Helen Marten, James Winston, Harry Chira, Allan Robinson and Henry Pemberton.

"I ACCUSE" (Gaumont).

The ungovernable temper of a minister of the gospel that finally sends him to prison for a crime he believes he has committed while in a blind rage is the theme of the Mutual Masterpicture, de luxe edition, Gaumont will release under the name of "I Accuse!" The story was written by Miss Marjorie Howe, who has contributed to Gaumont such successes as "The New Adam and Eve" and "The Devil's Darling." However, the minister is not the leading character of the play, although the part is played with remarkable force by Charles W. Travis. The principal role is that of the young judge who must sentence the minister to prison. This is enacted by Alexander Gaden, who is now seen on the screen in the Mutual Gaumont productions of "As a Woman Sows" and "The Drifter."

The story has for its heart-interest the love of the judge for the daughter of the minister. The daughter is played by Scene from "I Accuse" (Gaumont).

Miss Helen Marten, who has played opposite the star in previous Gaumont pictures, notably in "Lessons in Love." Mr. Gaden is at his best in depicting the conflict between his duty as a judge and his love for the girl whose heart he will break if he sends her father to prison.

Those in the cast who have not been mentioned already are James Levering, S. S. Wiltse, John Reinhard, Miss Iva Shepard, J. W. Butler, Miss Mary G. Davis and Albert Macklin.

NOTES OF THE TRADE

B. D. CARBER, who for so long held forth as technical director at the Universal, is now with Thanhouser at New Rochelle. Under Clarence Dull, the veteran stage chief, Carber will now supervise the planting of the sets, order the deck hands around, argue with the directors and draw salary.

• • •

The fifth episode of "The Journal of Lord John," adapted from the Williamson story of that name by Harvey Gates, is occupying the attention of E. J. Le Saint and his company of Universalites. William Garwood appears in the leading role of this with Stella Razeto opposite him and a supporting cast including Ogden Crane, Grace Benham, Laura Oakley, Carmen Phillips and Albert MacQuarrie.

William Bertram has completed the production, "Margy of the Foothills," soon to be released by the American Film Company, Inc. The theme is a story of love and passion and is located among the smaller California mountains. It depicts the struggle between a wealthy Spanish land-owner and a young American over a defenseless girl. Very powerful characterizations are drawn by Art Acord, Dixie Stratton, Lawrence Peyton and John Prescott.

Ernie Shield and Roy McCray have completed their one reel comedy, "Time Flies," by Ben Cohn. The cast included besides the co-directors, Sherman Bainbridge and Lois Wilson.

A five part American Masterpicture is coming—"Overalls." As the title might suggest, the story concerns the romance of a young western construction camp foreman in love with a wealthy girl—who is Rea Mitchell. William Stowell as the foreman is a red-blooded western character.

"Lonesomeness" is the title of a one reel drama which Lynn Reynolds is this week staging at Universal City with Myrtle Gonzalez, Frank Newburg, Val Paul and Alfred Allen in the chief roles.

Bryant Washburn's five-month-old son, Bryant Washburn IV, has made his initial appearance in motion pictures in Essanay's three-act drama, called "Destiny."

• • •

Joseph De Grasse is at work on his production of the five reel feature, "The Altar of Friendship," made from the magazine story by Isabel Ostrander. The cast is composed of Louise Lovely, Lon Chaney, Colin Chase, Agnes Vernon, Marjorie Ellison, Georgia French, Hayward Mack and Jay Belasco. The story was adapted for screen purposes by Ida May Park.

New Tax Bill Dies

Massachusetts Senate Accepts Unfavorable Report on Proposed Measure to Tax Gross Receipts of Film Shows—Senator Chapman Points Out Insidious Features —Other Bills That Need Watching.

By William Flynn, Boston Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

BOSTON, MASS.—Another of the anti-moving picture measures went down to an ignominious defeat on Wednesday, February 10, when the Massachusetts Senate refused to substitute a bill for an adverse report of the legislative committee on taxation on a petition providing for a tax of two and half per cent. on the gross receipts of all moving picture houses and theaters in the commonwealth.

Senator Charles L. Gifford, of Barnstable, led the fight for substitution, but he was opposed by Chairman Nathan A. Tufts of the committee on taxation and Senator Daniel W. Chapman.

Senator Chapman in defending the action of the committee before the Senate said that any tax on the gross receipts of a busines is unfair because gross receipts are not indicative of profit. The "legitimate" theater business is on the wane, he said, and argued that no theater proprietor in Massachusetts is making a great deal of money or at least enough money to warrant the state to demand two and a half per cent. of his gross receipts. Senator Tufts then declared that the proposed tax would not be a tax on luxury, but a tax on a man conducting a business.

The Bill Dies.

The Senator from the Cape then attempted to have the matter postponed until the following Tuesday. This brought forth a vociferous objection from Senator Clarence W. Hobbs, Jr., of Worcester. Postponement was defeated by a voice vote. Senator Gifford's motion to substitute the bill was killed in a similar manner and the adverse report of the committee was accepted by the Senate, thus putting an end to one of the most vicious bills aimed at the moving picture interests of Massachusetts this year.

The moving picture men and the proprietors and managers of the high-class playhouses of Massachusetts are very much concerned in the outcome of several bills that were heard before the joint legislative committee on mercantile affairs on the same day and the fate of which is not known at this writing. While the bills apply more particularly to theaters playing high class musical and dramatic production, the moving picture men have an allied interest that cannot be offset by the fact that they are merely exhibiting the silent drama and selling unreserved seats.

Bill Dealing with Change in Prices.

The bills before the committee on mercantile affairs dealt with the question of speculators and the raising of prices by theaters purporting to be showing star attractions. Rep. John W. Craig of Boston, who introduced two of the bills, appeared before the committee and openly charged the theatrical managers of Boston of collusion with ticket speculators.

"It is common knowledge," said Rep. Craig, "that nearly every theater in Boston and probably other cities in the state alter their scale of prices for seats for the same show, according to the demand for tickets. For the same show in a theater and this includes moving picture theaters we have the bargain matinee and another price for evening. When a big show comes along we must pay the highest price the public can stand."

While the ticket speculator question may have only a remote effect upon the moving picture industry, the question of raising the price of seats vitally affects many of the largest and a number of the smallest moving picture houses in the state. Feature films cost money and many managers introducing high-class attractions are compelled to raise their price of admission to break even. The public has been educated to top notch productions. They demand them. And the moving picture men claim in all fairness that their patrons should meet them half way and bear their proportionate share of putting on these premier features with the assurance of a just return.

Judge Brackett Defends the Theaters.

This was the attitude of the moving picture men present at the hearing and is the general attitude of moving picture interests throughout the state. The principal opposition to the bills before the committee, however, was made by Judge J. Albert Brackett, counsel for some of the most powerful theatrical interests in Massachusetts.

Judge Brackett told the members of the committee that any person, after purchasing a ticket and before entering the theater, has the privilege of demanding and receiving back his money, under the law at the present time. Judge Brackett further informed the committee that Massachusetts already has laws prohibiting standing room beyond a certain limit.

Rep. Thomas J. Giblin of East Boston asked the right to withdraw his petition permitting moving picture houses and dance halls outside of the Metropolitan fire hazard zone to be of second-class construction, and the request was granted after Rep. Giblin had explained to the committee that chapter 782 of the acts of 1914 makes such a provision.

VAUDEVILLE AT THE BOSTON.

The introduction of vaudeville into the Boston theater is the talk of Boston at the present time. The house is leased by A. Paul Keith who sub-leased it to the Big T. Film Company in which Mr. William F. Daley and Mr. Mark F. Eisenberg are the moving spirits. The Big T. Film Company started out exhibiting the Triangle Features with an elaborate corps of soloists and the famous Faddette's Orchestra of women.

The announcement that vaudeville was to be introduced caused tremendous surprise and set the theatrical tongues of New England wagging as the Boston theater is only a few doors from Keith's and the acts are being booked through the United booking office. It is said on good authority that Mr. Keith agreed to the new scheme only after repeated conferences with representatives of the Big T. Film Company who will continue to put on two big feature pictures a week in addition to the vaudeville.

The Boston theater is now under the management of Charles L. Winston, known throughout New England as the "boy manager." Mr. Winston is still in his early twenties, but has made a name for himself in theatrical circles in this territory. He was formerly connected with the National theater when that house was running pictures and vaudeville and also managed the Empire theater at Winthrop, Mass. Young Winston's first big coup since becoming manager of the Boston was to sign up the orchestra of the Tremont theater, recently destroyed by fire, and this orchestra will remain at the Boston theater permanently.

The films booked by Mr. Winston, who says he will continue to look to the open market for his attractions, for the first week under the new order of things were Nance O'Neil in the Big Four's feature, "Souls in Bondage," and Anita Stewart and Earle Williams in "My Lady's Slipper." Six acts of vaudeville were staged the first week, but it is planned to increase this number to eight.

Mrs. R. E. Hewitt Manages Theater.

Another woman has gone into the moving picture theater field in Massachusetts. She is Mrs. R. E. Hewitt, of Haverhill, who has taken over the Dreamland theater at Beverly, Mass. The Dreamland, which was formerly operated by Pierce & Barton, of Boston, has been closed for some time, but Mrs. Hewitt is enthusiastic and confident her new venture will be a success.

Jacob Conn Visits.

Jacob Conn, owner of the Conn theater, Concord, N. H., was in Boston last week booking films and at the same time Mr. Conn took occasion to visit several of his old friends. He says things are going well in New Hampshire and is looking forward to his most successful season.

New Holyoke Theaters.

Two new theaters recently opened in Holyoke, Mass., the Strand and the Royal. The Strand theater, which is owned by Mr. Alexander Cameron, has a seating capacity of 900 and is showing Paramount and General Film releases. Mr. Hanifin owns the Royal, which has a seating capacity of 450 and is running the Mutual program.

Films are now being shown two afternoons a week in the Franklin School at Wakefield, Mass., as an educational adjunct and Principal Hill has much faith in the experiment.

MAINE NEWS LETTER.

By John P. Flanigan, Bangor Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

F. Earl Bishop Dies.

LEWISTON, ME.—F. Earl Bishop, for the past year musical director at the Mystic theater, Lewiston, died at his home in Portland, Me., last week, following a brief illness. Mr. Bishop was one of the best known pianists of the theatrical world. He began his career at the age of 15, when he went to Australia with the Alice Oakes company, and afterward traveled all over the world. He was the first pianist to give a concert in the B. F. Keith house at Boston, in 1885, when he became musical director. He was known personally by thousands of actors.

Examine Operators and Booths.

Following an inspection of the moving picture booths of Bangor, Me., theaters last week, Fire Chief Curran and City Electrician Logan reported that all were in satisfactory condition and that with proper care on the part of operators there is no liability from fire that can be averted by advance precautions.

Operators were also examined and licenses granted to the following: Arthur C. Davis and Daniel M. Maher, of the Park; Lester E. Ashline, of the Bijou; John M. Maher, of the Graphic; Gordon McIntire, of the Winter Garden, and Harry A. Farrell, of the Palace.

Overlapping Censorship

In Northwestern Pennsylvania, Where Many Exhibitors Get Film from Out-of-the-State Distributors, There Is Trouble Over the Censoring by the State Board—A Working Arrangement Wanted.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—The exhibitors in the Erie, Pa., and Corry, Pa., sections have been recently hard-hit by the activity of the agents of the Pennsylvania Board of Censorship, arising from a peculiar condition that exists in that locality. The problem is one that has been very difficult to unravel, as many of the exhibitors are securing their films from three different points—Pittsburgh, Cleveland, O., and Buffalo, N. Y.

Those procured in this city are of course censored in Pennsylvania, but presumably the exchanges in the other two cities do not have the films passed upon by the censors in this state and in many cases fail to heed the board's rulings in regard to eliminations, it is said. The laws of this state also make the exchangeman liable in case of violation of the law, but, as the Cleveland and Buffalo exchanges are beyond the jurisdiction of the Pennsylvania censors, the exhibitor who runs the picture is held responsible and the agents of the board act accordingly.

While this condition of affairs makes it imperative that exhibitors in the Erie and Corry section get their pictures in Pittsburgh until the exchanges in the other cities named have their films properly censored in Pennsylvania, exhibitors and exchange men alike are indignant over the workings of the law and feel that concessions should be made to allow the showing of a film in this state that has been approved in Ohio, for instance, without the necesity of its being censored and re-censored.

William Fairgroves, a well-known exhibitor of Erie, was recently fined $125 on several alleged infractions of the Pennsylvania rules, some of which are said to date back as far as last August. Among others who have felt the strong arm of the board and were fined within the past week are the following: D. E. Billie, of the Hippodrome; Brandfield & Stucher, of the Isis; Philip Haendler, of the Keystone; A. O. Potter, of the Princess; I. Biencade, of the Bijou; P. J. Schwarzler, of the Star; and Ruth May, of the Wilkay, all Erie houses; and C. N. Walters, of the Lyric, Corry.

Pastime Theater Made Attractive.

The Pastime theater, at State College, Pa., has been extensively remodeled during the past few weeks and now presents a very pretty appearance. Both interior and exterior of the house have been redecorated in an artistic manner. It now seats seven hundred persons. C. C. Curry has recently been appointed new manager by the owner of the theater, W. H. Wood, who some time ago joined the Pathe road forces.

Will Deal in Big Features Again.

The Feature Film & Calcium Light Company, one of the oldest firms and supply houses in Pittsburgh, has announced that it will again engage in the big feature business and already has a number of attractive subjects on hand. Manager D. C. France reports very good bookings of same. This company formerly did a big business in the film line, but for the past year they practically discontinued. Now they have decided to re-enter the field and will do so on a large scale.

Exit the Venice and Victoria.

The Venice and the Victoria theaters, of Erie, Pa., have recently been discontinued and sold at receivers sale. Dudley D. Kelsey acted as receiver for the Co-operative Amusement Company, which operates the houses. They will be discontinued permanently, as the buildings have been leased and are being converted into store rooms.

An Impostor.

The Universal Movie Ticket Company, Jenkins Arcade Building, Pittsburgh, are looking for an impostor who has been victimizing small merchants throughout the city by posing as a salesman of the company. It is alleged that he entered the offices of the company last November and stole a movie ticket salesman's outfit. He tells the merchants that buy from him that the orders must go to New York and that the tickets will be sent them by mail.

Ludwig Hommel & Co., theater equipment and supply house, 422 First avenue, Pittsburgh, reports considerable success with their new type of condensing lens, known as the Bi-focal Meniscus, which is selling well among the exhibitors of this territory.

PHILADELPHIA NEWS LETTER.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

Automatic Film Rewinding Co.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—A charter has recently been granted under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania to the Automatic Film Rewinding Company, of Harrisburg. The concern has been capitalized for $7,000, Ross Oenslager acting in the capacity of treasurer.

May Enlarge the Belvedere.

Plans are being considered for the enlargement of one of Philadelphia's most unique theaters. The theater is the Belvedere, a moving picture establishment of Colonial architecture, located at Germantown avenue and Graver's lane, Chestnut Hill. The theater is a typical Colonial house in appearance, built of red brick, with black leaders. Wrought iron lanterns and fixtures add to its resemblance to a dignified old mansion of the early days of the nation. Each night witnesses the gathering of perhaps one of the most aristocratic audiences in Philadelphia. In spite of its aparently small size the theater accomodates 315 persons, but according to the enormous increase in the patronage of this establishment, it has been found to be entirely too small and the improvements will be of such a nature as to provide a large increase in the seating capacity.

Death of Billy Mack.

Moving picture folks in this vicinity were recently greatly grieved to learn of the untimely death of Billy Mack, for many years connected with the Interstate Film Company, located in the heart of filmdom around 13th and Vine streets. Mr. Mack died on Feb. 9 from pleural pneumonia, which developed from the effects of a bad cold. Mack was so enthused with his business pursuits that he paid little attention to what he thought was a sligh cold. It steadily grew worse and the result was that pneumonia set in and complications latter followed which caused his demise. Filmdom wishes to express its regrets for the loss of one of the most liked men in the business.

E. B. Mulhern Visits.

E. B. Mulhern, a well-known exhibitor of Mauch Chunk, Pa., and one of the best known moving picture men throughout the coal regions, recently paid a visit to Philadelphia and while here, made the rounds of the supply houses. He purchased much new equipment for his theater at the Swaab Film Service, 1327 Vine street, including a new projecting machine. Mr. Mulhern conducts the Opera House in Mauch Chunk, one of the leading theaters of that vicinity.

The building containing a moving picture theater, stores and apartments recently built by Cornelius W. Van Artsdalen at the northeast corner of 56th and Pine streets, has been mortgaged to John Cadwalader for $40,000.

Louis Swaab, proprietor of the Swaab Film Service, 1327 Vine street, one of the best known supply houses in Pennsylvania, will leave shortly for Chicago where he will attend to several important business matters.

IN NEW ORLEANS.

Heard on Exchange Row.

Ernst Boehringer, owner of Louisiana Triangle rights, has just returned from a trip to New York city, where he was in consultation with the heads of the Triangle corporation. One of the important things resulting from Mr. Boehringer's trip north will be the early establishment of a Triangle exchange office in New Orleans, for the distribution of the service throughout this territory.

Sam Dembrow, Jr., Southern division manager for Fox, is spending this week with the Dallas exchange.

Antoniette Evans, lecturer with the picture style show, running at the Crescent theater this week, is the wife of R. King Evans, local V-L-S-E manager. The pictures and Mrs. Evans will remain here for some time, it was announced after their first showing, which made quite a hit.

Harry J. Cohen, special representtive of Metro, was in New Orleans recently on his way to Texas. Eugene Pearce, of Josiah Pearce & Sons, New Orleans picture magnates, had him around over the Row and elsewhere.

Messrs. Benoit and Weil, of Rayne, La., this week paid a visit to exchange row and made extensive purchases for their moving picture theater which they will open in Rayne within a short time.

New Orleans' two newest moving picture theaters have announced February 15 as their opening dates. These are The College, St. Charles street, and The Empire, in Canal street.

P. O. Blankenship has installed a Wurlitzer organ in his Isis theater in Dryades street.

Maurice F. Barr, Bluebird manager, announces that he has closed contracts with the Tivoli Amusement Co., in Beaumont, Tex., the Port Arthur Amusement Co., at Port Arthur, Tex., and with H. Thomas at Orange, Tex.

The Princess theater, Felicity and Baronne street, New Orleans, is the first suburban house in the city to install a full Triangle feature service.

H. W. Irons, Detroit exhibitor, who came to New Orleans recently for his health, has accepted a position with the Wilcox string in Panama.

An interesting visitor on film row this week was Miss Sarah D. McLean, of Jackson, Miss., manager of the Majestic theater there. While here she signed up for Paramount service.

Gulf States Notes.

In common with other cities and towns through the country, Dothan, Ala., suburb of Montgomery, will soon have its Strand theater. The Palace theater, formerly operated by D. W. Powell, is being remodelled, and other changes will include that of its name. W. H. Cough, former manager of the Majestic theater in Montgomery, will be the owner and manager.

Following the running of a page advertisement of "The Strange Case of Mary Page" in the Birmingham Age-Herald, all records were broken at the Princess theater where the picture was shown.

NEW ORLEANS G. F. SHOWS FILM.

Invites All Exhibitors, Clients or Not, to Visit and See Pictures.

By George Cheney, New Orleans Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—The General Film Company in this city shows its offerings to the exhibitors in its own projection room on the second floor of its building, 421 Baronne street. The policy has made a hit and H. G. Morrow, local manager, is confident that it means more general business.

The week's releases are shown every Sunday morning. All exhibitors, regardles of whether they are taking the General service, are invited. The projection room is one of the most complete ever put up, comparing favorably with any exhibition house in town. Two high-power projection machines of the latest pattern are included in the equipment. Then there is a gold fiber screen and all the rest. The projection results are excellent.

TRIANGLE THEATER LOCALITY.

The Publicity Director of the Triangle theater, of New Orleans, has written a letter to the Moving Picture World saying that the theater is located in a neighborhood which is as much above reproach as is the Grunewald Hotel or the Crescent and Tulane theaters or the fashionable restuarants of New Orleans. He says the Triangle is being patronized by the elite of the city. He further states that high-class shows have been given in the same building before. In the praise of the success and splendid management of the theater our regular New Orleans correspondent spoke with much enthusiasm in the last two issues of The Moving Picture World.

A GLASS WEDDING PARTY.

Manager Al. Shear, New Orleans Consolidated, and Mrs. Shear were guests of a party of friends at Kolb's Tea Garden the other night, at "a little dinner," the occasion being their fifteenth wedding anniversary. A handsome cut glass tea set was presented by the numerous hosts. These include a number of men prominent locally in exhibtion and exchange circles. Among those not present, who were remembered with toasts were Carl Laemmle, Herman Fichtenberg and William Oldknow. It was pointed out with great freqency during the party that Al was not the only member of the family in the picture business. Mrs. Shear owns and manages the Carrollton theater in New Orleans.

Last Johnson Picture at the Isis.

"The Last Rose," the last picture in which Arthur Johnson, deceased, worked, was shown at the Isis theater, in Dryades street. It was a memorial presentation. Many admirers of the dead actor came to see him. P. O. Blankenship, the manager of The Isis, was the recipient of thanks from a number of his patrons, for making possible this last tribute to Johnson. The title of the picture, "The Last Rose," was commented on as oddly fitting.

Taking Pictures in New Orleans.

Among the several producing companies which have recently taken advantage of New Orleans' scenic possibilities is Essanay. Director R. F. Baker brought the company down here. They came especially for pictures of the winter race meet here, but stayed for various other scenes. The interior of Kolb's German Tavern, fashionable restaurant, was taken. This bit of film shows a number of society people dancing. Mr. Baker was complimentary in his comments upon the stage presence of his "supes."

LOUISVILLE NEWS LETTER.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

New Company Changes Title.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—The "People's Amusement Company," recently incorporated with a capital stock of $30,000 for the purpose of operating a colored motion picture house at Eleventh and Walnut streets, this city, has since found that the name conflicted with one of a company already in operation, and amended articles have been filed under the title of the Citizens' Amusement Company. The incorporators and officers are all leading colored citizens and it is understood that the stock will principally be held by colored people.

The stock is divided into shares of $10 each, of which T. C. Brock and A. S. Brock, dentists, each hold 50 shares. A. B. McAfee, an undertaker, holds 100 shares. Officers named are A. B. McAfee, president; T. C. Brock, secretary-treasurer, and A. E. Mayzeek, vice-president.

Aladdin Film Company.

According to R. W. Conant the old Aladdin Film Corporation, capitalized and incorporated a few months ago to succeed the Children's Feature Film Company, has been dissolved and a new Aladdin Film Company has filed articles of incorporation in which the capital stock is listed at $100,000, divided into shares of $10 each. James H. Button, a Louisville real estate man, who is interested in the Strand theater, Lexington, Ky., is now interested in the local concern. The incorporators of the new company are R. W. Conant, N. M. Sweet and Kendrick R. Lewis.

New Shawnee Attractive.

The Shawnee theater, located at 37th and Broadway, in Louisville, is preparing to open its new theater inside of the next few days. The house has just been completed and is a very attractive suburban theater. A five-piece orchestra will be used at the opening, and it is understood that this musical arrangement will be continued, although it is unusual for an outskirts house. The operating room is equipped with two of the latest Standard machines.

Louisville Notes of Interest.

Joe Schnitzer, manager of the Indianapolis office of the Central Film Service Company, was recently in Louisville, where he visited the local office and a number of exhibitors.

J. G. George, representing the Chicago office of the Essanay Company, was recently in Louisville, where he helped in obtaining publicity for the Mary Page adventure serial.

Mr. Montgomery, of the World Film Corporation's New York office, has left Louisville after making arrangements with the Alamo theater to show Clara Kimbal Young in the new World feature, "The Yellow Passport."

Miss Gladys Coburn, a Louisville girl who is winning fame as a moving picture actress under the direction of Henry W. Savage, has just returned to the East after a visit to her parents, Mr. and Mrs. F. P. Coburn.

Will Pflanz, owner of the Highland Park theater, at Highland Park, Ky., a Louisville suburb, was recently notified that there was a light in the theater after it had been closed for the night. In company with other citizens the place was visited and one of three burglars was captured.

The moving picture house of Miller & Sloan, at Albany, Ky., has been closed down, and it is understood that the owners are trying to sell the property.

Everett Hitchcock, of Paintsville, Ky., manager of the Stafford theater, has turned the management of the house over to Mrs. Hitchcock and Mrs. J. F. Prindible, and has gone to Jenkins, Ky., where he is connected with the Consolidated Coal Company. The two women will handle the active management of the playhouse hereafter.

Edward McClure and Ham Brown, of the Lexington, Ky., Opera House, quickly put out a blaze which started when the first reel of a six-reel feature took fire on the afternoon of Feb. 4. When the reel flashed McClure, the operator, jumped from the room and closed the door. Brown grabbed a fire hose which was directed into the booth and the flames extinguished. One reel was burned and the others damaged by water. The shows for the evening had to be passed by, but very little damage was done.

H. R. Calloway, of Frankfort, Ky., has taken a lease on the Columbia theater and has closed the Gem. The latter house is to be remodeled, a balcony installed and several new exits cut in order to make the theater safe. Arrangements have been made whereby the Columbia will show the Paramount, V-L-S-E, Fox and other leading films. The opening bill was composed of Nance O'Neal in "Souls in Bondage," and J. Warren Kerrigan in "Terrence O'Rourke."

CHATTANOOGA NEWS LETTER.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Chattanooga Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

New Colored Theater.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN.—Through an arrangement made by Tom Wilcox, of Chattanooga, and certain business men of Atlanta, Ga., work has been started on tearing down some old buildings at the corner of Ninth and A streets, Chattanooga. A new fireproof moving picture theater for negroes is to be erected on the property at once. The new building will be of brick and concrete and will be 40x100 feet. It is planned to have the show house in operation by April 10, according to Mr. Wilcox.

The Picto Gets Triangle Films.

Owing to a breakdown in the heating plant at the Lyric theater, the Triangle plays have been changed over to the Picto theater. It is possible that the plays will be continued in that show house, which is more centrally located than the Lyric. Both houses are under the same management. However, repairs are being made at the Lyric and the theater will shortly be ready to reopen.

New Policy at the Victoria.

Nashville, Tenn.—Announcement has been made of a change in the management of the Victoria, Nashville, Tenn., whereby the control of the house has been taken over by a company composed of substantial Nashville business men. The Victoria is located in the Arcade, and the location is said to be one of the best in the city.

About Features Locally.

The Palace theater, of Jellico, Tenn., announces that it has made arrangements whereby two Paramount features will be exhibited each week at the popular playhouse. On Friday, Feb. 11, Blanche Sweet was shown in "Stolen Goods," and the "Old Homestead" was shown on Feb. 14.

After advertising that "Sold" would be shown at the Crescent theater, of Nashville, the management later announced that the booking office had substituted "The Prince and the Pauper," featuring Marguerite Clark.

The Fifth Avenue theater, of Nashville, Tenn., raised the price of admission to 25 cents during the four-day showing of George Beban in "The Alien."

The Parthenon, of Nashville, has closed a deal whereby the theater has secured the exclusive rights in Nashville to exhibit the new Blue Bird pictures. It is in-

Sunday Show Referendum

In East Cleveland a Petition Asking for a Referendum on the Sabbath Closing Law Has Been Signed by Over 800 Voters—Pending Action by County Board of Elections, the Trial of Wind-a-meer Manager Is Postponed.

By Hurbert Persons, Cleveland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CLEVELAND, O.—Plans for a referendum election on the East Cleveland ordinance prohibiting motion picture exhibitions on Sunday where an admission fee is charged are being made in that city. A petition signed by more than 800 East Cleveland voters asking repeal of the ordinance has just been filed with the East Cleveland Council. If the county board of elections holds the position is valid, a special election will be ordered within thirty days.

Pending this action the trial of Arnold Goodman, manager of the Wind-a-meer, charged with violation of the ordinance, has been postponed. Goodman contends a majority of East Cleveland citizens are against the enforcement of the ordinance. He has clashed with the authorities several times.

RESERVE CO. PICTURES SOON.

The new Reserve Photo-Plays Company, with headquarters in Cleveland, is shortly to release the first of its series of one-reel comedies, starring Johnny and Emma Ray. The films will be released through one of the big distributing agencies about April 1.

The company's new studio, modern and well equipped, has just been completed and three comedies are finished. They are to be entitled "Casey The Fireman," "Casey's Servants" and "Casey the Bandmaster." The titles of other films in which the Rays appear will be "Down the Pike," "A Hot Old Time," "Casey the Bandmaster," "Casey the Plumber" and "Casey the Floorwalker," in some of which the Rays have endeared themselves to thousands of Americans while on the stage.

The Reserve Photo-Plays Company, capitalized at $150,000, was organized principally because Mr. Ray declined to accept film engagements which would keep him away from Cleveland, where he has large real estate interests.

Want Charity Boxes in Theater.

A special committee of the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League is considering the request of the Associated Charities, that boxes be placed in every picture theater in the city on Saturday, Feb. 26, which is to be designated as Associated Charities Day. The proposal is a part of the campaign of the charities to raise $25,000 for winter relief work, made unusually heavy during the recent cold weather.

Representatives of the charities submitted the proposal at the last session of the League. The committees will submit a report next week as to the sentiment of a majority of league members.

ST. LOUIS NEWS LETTER.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Changes at the Blue Bird Office.

ST. LOUIS. MO.—S. J. Baker, who just resigned as head of the Fox exchange, has been made manager of the new offices established by the Blue Bird Photo Plays, Inc., at 2116 Locust street, this city. Mr. Baker has been in St. Louis for a number of months and is as well known to the trade in the surrounding territory as he is in the city. Mr. Baker has the Blue Bird offices all fitted up, and is exploiting Blue Birds for all he is worth. He reports signing several important first run contracts, and says the interest in the new program is very promising.

Sam Shurman has been appointed traveling representative of the Blue Bird office, and made his first trip last week. Mr. Shurman is well known to the film trade throughout the district, and has had experience all down the line, from exhibitor and city salesman to road man.

Help for Sick Box Offices.

The Universal exchange on Locust street has established a publicity department, not so much with the intention of getting a few press notices in the papers, as of helping "sick box offices." When an exhibitor is in need of help or advice about his business, he may apply to the Universal Publicity Department and get pointers as to whether advertising is what he needs, or perhaps a special kind of advertising, and how to get it in shape. The location of his theater and the class of patrons he has are taken into consideration when there is trouble in the box office, and the advice is given free of charge. Any exhibitor may avail himself of the aid of the department, the service is not confined to users of Universal pictures alone.

Joseph Levy Heads Local Fox Lair.

Joseph Levy has been appointed manager of the Fox exchange at 3632 Olive street, in Film Row, and took charge of the place last week. Mr. Levy comes to St. Louis from the Omaha offices of the Fox Company.

J. W. Cotter Opens Pendleton Theater.

J. W. Cotter, former head of the Kriterion exchange at 3200 Locust street, has gone into the exhibiting end of the business by reopening the Pendleton theater on Pendleton avenue. Mr. Cotter had a bad week from a weather standpoint for his opening, but had promising audiences in spite of the weather.

John Ernie's Theater Opens.

The new $12,000 theater at 2841 Pestalozzi street, built by John Ernie, opened last week to good business. The new house is well equipped in every way, seats seven hundred patrons and has two motor driven Motiograph machines, and is modern in every manner. Mr. Ernie will build an airdome near the theater in the spring.

Arsenal Theater Third of Triangle Group.

The Arsenal theater, at Grand and Arsenal streets, which opened last week, is the third of the Triangle houses to open in St. Louis. The Arsenal shows the pictures after they have been seen at the American, in the downtown district, and at the King's, in the west end of the city. The Arsenal is in the southern part of the city, and will divide the program of the other houses by changing twice a week.

Morelock Buys Pageant Theater.

The Pageant theater, which has been under the management of C. W. Morelock since the opening of the house last fall, has been purchased from B. P. Bogy and M. P. Howard, by Mr. Morelock. Several changes will be made in the policy of the house. A union orchestra will be employed and the Unit Symphony organ, which caused the theater to be picketed by union musicians when it opened, will be used only on special occasions or for special feature effects.

Industrial Film in St. Louis.

The St. Louis Industrial Motion Picture Company has just recently been organized in St. Louis, with G. B. Harney, Harry Le Mertha and E. P. Lasche as promoters. These men are well known St. Louis citizens, and the object of the company is to make all sorts of commercial and industrial films, to be used for advertising purposes, as records, or for distribution.

Merry Widow Sold.

The Merry Widow theater, at 1451 Chouteau avenue, has changed hands just recently. George Hay, who has been operating the house for several years, has sold the place to F. A. Klockenbrink, who will continue the program much on the same plan as has been in effect. The Merry Widow seats four hundred patrons and is a 5-cent house.

Hickory Changes Hands.

Charles Monette has sold out his interest in the Hickory theater, at Jefferson avenue and Hickory street to Charles Loeffel. The Hickory is a small neighborhood house that maintains a 5-cent program.

Franklin Theater Bought by Cotter.

J. W. Cotter, former exchange and all around film man, has acquired the Franklin theater, on 9th street and Franklin avenue, which he opened for business on Feb. 10.

Operators' Ball Coming.

The Moving Picture Operators of St. Louis are making extensive preparations for a grand ball to be given on Feb. 22.

J. H. Cassidy, formerly with the General Film Company, at 3610 Olive street, has taken charge of the poster department of the Universal Film Exchange at 2116 Locust street.

Local Syndicate Buys Interests of C. W. Deible and E. J. Renner in the Picture House—Capital of New Company Is $150,000.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

YOUNGSTOWN, O.—One of the most notable transactions which has taken place in moving picture circles in Youngstown, O., for some time, was the disposal of the lease on the Dome last week. C. W. Deible and E. J. Renner, who have had charge of the house since its construction, and who have been prominent figures in the business in Youngstown for a good many years, sold their interests to a syndicate of Youngstown interests, headed by C. J. Mohrle, which has incorporated the Dome Company to operate the house, with a capital stock of $115,000. It is understood that the selling price was $110,000. Manager Joseph Trunk will be retained as manager.

The Dome was originally started by Messrs. Deibel and Renner some years ago, seating 196 persons, in a storeroom. Later another room was added, increasing the seating capacity to 300, and the present house, as originally constructed, accommodated 800 persons. A balcony added a few months ago increased the capacity to 1,100, making the house one of the most commodious photoplay theaters in Central Ohio.

Mr. Deibel states that he has by no means retired from the picture business, but has other enterprises in that line in mind, and it is considered more than probable that he will become interested in the producing end. The policy of the house will be continued, features only being exhibited.

EXHIBITOR WEHMHOFF DIES.

Cincinnati, O.—A distressing accident on Feb. 2 caused the death on the following day of John B. Wehmhoff, proprietor of the Findlay theater, on Findlay street, as well as of Elkwood Park, a popular summer resort. Mr. Wehmhoff had been feeling ill, but there was no reason to believe it was serious. While going upstairs to his apartment on the day mentioned, however, he fell backward just as he reached the top, sustaining a fracture of the skull. The best medical attention was secured, but he died without regaining consciousness. Mr. Wehmhoff was well known and liked among local exhibitors, as well as in other business circles, and his sudden death was a shock to his friends. He was only 39 years old.

FAMOUS PLAYERS SHAKE-UP.

A complete shake-up in the Cincinnati offices of the Famous Players' Film Service Co. and the World Film Corporation took place last week, rather unexpectedly, and several new faces are seen in both offices. F. W. Brockwell, who was formerly in charge of the company's Chicago office, comes to Cincinnati as manager, indicating the importance which the Queen City is assuming as a film distributing center. Mr. Brockwell has with him as assistant manager R. O. Laws, who was formerly manager of the local office.

At present W. C. Bachmyer, who is well known in Cincinnati, is doing some special work for the company with quarters here, making the staff complete. Former Assistant Manager W. W. Watson has gone to Pittsburgh.

NEW FACES AT WORLD FILM.

The World Film office in Cincinnati is now in charge of Louis Baum, a film man of some note, who was formerly in charge of the General Film Company's exchange at Indianapolis, former Manager Clay E. Brehm severing his connection with the company, as did R. S. Moran and Harry H. Young, salesmen with the local office.

Assistant Manager William Howard, formerly manager of the Forest, and one of the most popular men in the film business in Cincinnati, retains that position.

J. G. Lytle, formerly manager of the Pathe company, at Indianapolis, has become attached to the World office as salesman, and probably another salesman will be added soon.

Manager John Elliott's New Ads.

John Elliott, manager of the Hippodrome theater, at Youngstown, O., recently hit upon an advertising stunt which has won him considerable approval, not only from people who know a good idea when they see it, but actually from the city authorities as well. Mr. Elliott secured a sufficient number of metal waste-paper boxes to place at all downtown corners, of course bearing the theater's advertisement, and as nothing of the sort had been available before, he was voted the universal thanks of everybody interested in keeping the streets cleaned up, including the head of the street cleaning department.

Manager Himmelein, of the Sandusky, at Sandusky, O., materially improved the appearance of the house recently, besides securing eight additional seats, by moving the projecting booth, which formerly occupied a place in the rear of the first floor, to the gallery.

The Lyceum theater, of Dayton, O., has been let by Charles Zonars, owner and manager, to Val Rayburg, who is already well known as an exhibitor in Dayton by reason of his ownership of the Orphum.

Manager C. C. Hite, in charge of the Cincinnati exchange of the Triangle company, was one of the guests of honor at the first exhibition of the Triangle program at the Clifford, at Urbana, O., last week, Manager Phil Chackeras, of the Majestic, at Springfield, O., accompanying him, and witnessing an enthusiastic reception of the new service by large houses.

Side-Stepping Sabbath Case in Lafayette, Ind.

Exhibitor Charged with Breaking Sunday Opening Law, Dismissed on Plea That His Religion Made Saturday the Sabbath.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

LAFAYETTE, IND.—The effort to test the Sunday closing law at Lafayette, Ind., has been foiled. Prosecutor Roy Street moved to dismiss the case because Michael Rubinoff, charged with operating on Sunday, was a Hebrew and observed the seventh day of the week as Sabbath. Special Judge Charles A. Burnett sustained the motion. The law makes it an offense for a man to follow his usual vocation on Sunday.

The decision leaves the case of the exhibitors exactly where is was before. Mayor Bauer says he will see that the law is enforced. Superintendent of Police Powell says he will arrest any exhibitor open on Sunday.

Meantime the subject has had enough attention to bring out a strong feeling both ways on the subject, with evidence that the majority favor an open Sunday. The exhibitors are not discouraged and will doubtless find some one of the proper religious faith to take the plunge.

Even the Manager Can't Handle "Simpy."

Manager A. F. Heineman has installed in the Memorial Opera House, Valparaiso, a new Simplex machine. Operator Harry Hooper, a veteran moving picture theater man, has made a pet of it already. He calls her "Simpy" and was jealous when the manager tried to apply the cosmetics just to see how the oil can would work.

Alhambra Can Build That Awning.

Judge Clifford ruled that the Alhambra theater, Indianapolis, could build a metal awning over the sidewalk. Jacob Hilkene, building inspector, objected, refusing to issue a building permit, and the theater owners, Messrs. Barton and Olson, appealed to the court.

New Amusement Company.

The Photoplay Amusement Company, Indianapolis, capital $10,000, has been incorporated with John F. Boesinger, James C. Curtis and Paul C. Wetter as directors.

Delphi Bramble Will Manage Princess.

Delphi G. C. Bramble has taken over the management of the Princess theater, 858 South Meridian street, and the Royal theater, on West Market street, Indianapolis. Mr. Bramble has been an exchange salesman as well as an exhibitor.

The Clinton theater, Clinton, has been leased by Charles West and Lewis Murray, who will remodel it and open a reception room for tired and dirty automobiles.

Screen Club of Michigan

Leading Exchange Men of State Form Club for Film Men at Meeting on February 6—A. J. Gilligham Elected President—Any Exchange Man Eligible—Objects Purely Social—Will Hold a Screen Ball.

By Jacob Smith, Detroit Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DETROIT, MICH.—The leading exchange men of Michigan have organized the Screen Club of Michigan. The first meeting was held Sunday afternoon, Feb. 6, the organization perfected, the name decided upon and the dues placed at $25 per year. Officers elected were as follows: A. J. Gilligham (General Film Co.), president; G. J. Trask (Mutual), vice-president; George W. Weeks (Universal), secretary and treasurer. The original other members comprise A. I. Shapiro (Fox), Henry J. Guthard (Metro), L. E. Franconi (Pathe), Mr. Randolph (Wolverine), Dave Kline and James Duncan (V-L-S-E) and Joe Kent (World). The object of the club is purely social—to get the exchange men of Michigan better acquainted and on more friendly terms. Plans are already under way for a Screen ball to be given in Detroit in the Spring. The club has already been assured of some of the biggest stars in the country for this affair. There will be a series of social functions that will be carried out on an elaborate scale. The club will hold meetings twice a month and each meeting will be preceded by a dinner. Any exchange man in the state is eligible to membership.

HENRY ROEHRIG, PRESIDENT.

Wyandotte Theaters Corporation Increases Circuit—Elects Officers.

Henry Roehrig, former mayor of Wyandotte, a suburb of Detroit, has been elected president of the Wyandotte Theatres Corporation, which has taken over the Majestic, Marx and Lincoln theaters, in that section, and which will place these houses in a circuit with Detroit theaters. The other officers are vice-presidents, Carl F. Schroeder and Harry Tucker; secretary, Arthur W. Edwards, and treasurer, Henry J. Guthard. The corporation has been capitalized at $100,000.

PALACE THEATER CO. ELECTS.

C. A. Hoffman Chosen President—Increase of Dividend Rate.

Clare A. Hoffman has succeeded A. I. Marentette as president of the Palace Theater Co., Detroit. Graham Hoffman continues as secretary. Harry J. Dingeman has been elected vice-president and Frederick H. Mears treasurer. These, with Mr. Marentette, form the directorate.

It was announced at the directors' meeting held recently that the company, which has been paying 1 per cent. monthly on a $200,000 full subscribed capital, will go to 2 per cent. March 1, with the company practically free from debt. C. A. Hoffman has also been chosen president, Mr. Dingeman vice-president and Graham Hoffman secretary of the Hippodrome Amusement Co., of Saginaw, Mich., which has practically completed the financing of a theater being erected on Gennessee avenue and to be opened about March 15. The Hoffman Brothers Theatrical Enterprises has recently opened offices at 1437 Dime Bank building. They propose to erect other theaters in Michigan.

DETROIT LOCAL NO. 12 ELECTS.

Edwin C. Murphy, of the Gladwin Park theater, has been elected president of the Detroit Lodge, No. 12, Theatrical Mechanical Associations of the United States and Canada. Recently elected members were D. Leo Dennison, manager of the Paramount branch in Detroit; Jack Mowat, manager of the Empire theater; John McDonald, president of the Local Moving Picture Operators' branch; James Oliver Brooks, special Detroit representative for the Famous Players' Film Service; Charles McVicker, manager Rosedale theater; Clarence Pippen, representative Mutual Film Co., and Charles Hagedorn, manager National theater.

Washington-Detroit Re-elects Directors.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Washington-Detroit theater was held recently and reports showed that the indebtedness of the corporation had been considerably reduced since leasing the house to John H. Kunsky.

Directors re-elected were: Fred E. Holmes, W. H. Beamer, Conrad H. Smith, D. N. Davis, Harry Young, A. E. Whitbeck and John D. MacKay. Officers elected were: President, John D. MacKay; vice-president, D. N. Davis; secretary and assistant treasurer, Fred F. Holmes, and treasurer, A. E. Whitbeck.

The lease on the Washington theater with John H. Kunsky terminates September 1, 1916.

May Build Another House.

The Rialto Theaters Co., through its attorney, has purchased the Pearl theater and some frontage adjoining, at the intersection of Gratiot and Mt. Elliott avenues, making a stretch of 105 feet on Gratiot. On this it is proposed to erect a new theater with offices upstairs. C. Howard Crane is the architect. This makes two theaters under contemplation by this corporation, the other one being at Gratiot and the Boulevard. Both will be large houses seating over 1,000.

Detroit Business Notes.

P. P. Craft, who has the Detroit rights for Triangle films, has opened an office at 706 Ford building.

To stimulate busines on Monday evenings the Gladwin Park theater gives away free sheet music to the first 200 ladies who purchase tickets at the box office.

Fire in the booth of the theater at 288 East Congress street, managed by M. R. Greiner, destroyed several hundred feet of film.

Burglars broke into the Miles theater Feb. 2 and attempted to blow the safe, but were scared away before they did any material damage.

It is reported that Triangle films will be shown in the new Drury Lane theater, 256 Woodward avenue, which will be opened about the first of April. Frank Drew is the lessee of the theater.

George B. Schulten, manager of the Detroit office of the Rudolph Wurlitzer Co., is looking for larger quarters. In the event that he secures same he plans to have a miniature theater for the display of several Wurlitzer latest organs. Mr. Schulten reports a very satisfactory business.

"Our business increased 500 per cent. in January over any previous month," said Manager Duncan of the V-L-S-E office in Detroit. "We attribute this to our splendid features and our liberal open-booking policy."

G. J. Trask, manager of the Mutual exchange, in Detroit, says his business has grown so fast that he has to have more room, so he has leased the fifth floor of the building at the same address, which will be used for posters and supplies. The second floor will continue to be the general offices, inspecition room, shipping, receiving, etc.

Arhold Kornicker, representing Menger & Ring, theatrical display frames, New York City, visited the Detroit office of this paper on Feb. 8-9. He reported very good business.

MICHIGAN NEWS LETTER.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

Changes in Michigan Theaters.

AHMEEK, Michigan.—Mrs. Bessie Kosman of Ahmeek, Mich., has purchased the equipment of the Eagle theater at Houghton and will install it in the new moving picture theater under construction at Ahmeek.

Carl Duncan, of Kilbuck, O., has purchased the Family theater at Richmond, Mich., from A. F. Drager.

S. D. Leahy, of Harbor Springs, Mich., has purchased the lease of Norman and J. Feldman on the Temple theater at Petoskey, Mich. The new manager closed the house temporarily pending the consummation of a plan to operate it in conjunction with his theater in Harbor Springs.

Laurence Beaudoin has sold his interest in the Princess theater at Manistique, Mich., to his partner, Edward Cardin.

Charles P. Dickerman asked the city council at Grand Rapids, Mich, for a license to conduct a moving picture show at 1168 Madison avenue.

The Vaudette theater at Newberry, Mich., owned and operated by Oscar Anderson was practically destroyed by fire.

The Caswell Vaudette has been opened at Carson City, Mich., under the management of Paul V. Bretz and H. C. Poulson.

The Orpheum theater at Lansing, Mich., has been reopened after being redecorated and remodeled. The color scheme has been changed from old rose to a light green. It will now be an exclusive feature house. Manager Garvis will abolish all gaudy posters from the front of his house, using only framed artistic photographs.

Doings of Michigan Exhibitors.

Free tickets to photoplay houses in Kalamazoo, Mich., are given by members of the Movie Merchants Association.

The Alladin theater at Bay City, Mich., split a booking on the Paramount "Still Waters," because it could not get it for four days straight. It ran it two days, sandwiched the Metro "Pennington's Choice" for two days and then returned "Still Waters."

A good ventilating system saved the Rex theater at Three Rivers, Mich., from having to empty its house because a small boy had thrown cayenne pepper on a hot register. The fans were started and there was little annoyance.

The Empress vaudeville theater at Grand Rapids, Mich., has booked the Selig-Tribune weekly to replace the comedy which has been opening its program.

Manager E. J. Butler of the Butler theater at Ishpeming, Mich., has given over four nights a week to Triangle offerings. He will use with the Triangle dramas a one-reel General Film comedy and will show the Triangle comedies at the Ishpeming theater.

The new Isis theater in Grand Rapids, Mich., is running five acts of vaudeville and five reels of pictures.

Manager Kraus of the Lyric at Manistee, Mich., played "The Battle Cry of Peace" at twenty-five and fifty cents. The Vaudette theater at St. Johns, Mich., has booked the film for March 1.

ILLINOIS NEWS LETTER.

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent Moving Picture World.

More City Tax in Lincoln.

Suggestions to increase the license tax of $30 for moving picture theaters in this city are opposed by the exhibitors, who say the burden of federal, township and city taxes already is too heavy.

Mayors Like "Nation" Film.

Mayors of Illinois seem to be a unit in failing to find anything in "The Birth of a Nation" that should cause them to forbid its exhibition. Mayor W. C. Barber of Joliet, president of the Illinois Municipal League, said all opposition faded after the first showing of the picture. Incidentally, it is booked to return to Joliet. He gave this information to Mayor E. S. Swigart of Champaign. He also enclosed a letter from Mayor Martin S. Carlson of Moline, who saw nothing wrong. Mayor E. E. Jones of Bloomington agreed in this.

A white clergyman in Champaign who saw the film in Chicago and approved it wrote to Mayor Swigart his fears of the effect it would have on the "rabble." The mayor replied that few of the so-called rabble would view it at the prevailing prices.

This famous picture will return to the Grand Opera house at Rockford for eight days beginning Feb. 27. This house is paying special attention to filling the moderate price seats with clubs, lodges and parties. The Gaiety at Galesburg had it for three days beginning Feb. 3. The return dates for the Chatterton Opera house at Springfield have been fixed for April 2, 3, 4 and 5. The Majestic at Lincoln has a single day in April.

Higher Rates at Quincy Theater.

John J O'Neil, proprietor of the Quincy theater at Quincy, Ill., asked the city council for a refund on the unused portion of his moving picture theater license, which enabled him to charge not more than ten cents. He wants a $100 permit under which he can charge as much as twenty-five cents for admission.

Special Shows For Children.

The Illinois theater at Chicago Heights, Ill., is trying Friday children's show with the co-operation of the Motion Picture Committee of the Woman's Club.

Manager Hodgson of the Oak Park theater at Oak Park announces his Saturday morning shows will continue as long as the revenue is barely sufficient to pay the expense, but cannot continue the children's hour at a loss.

Fined for Giving Hand Bills.

In Kankakee, Ill., Manager Remington, of the Gaiety theater, was fined $5 and costs for distributing handbills on the streets. Flyers must be placed where they will not be dislodged.

Something for the Town.

Fred Bach and Swan Ostewig, exhibitors of Lee, Ill., are praised by a local writer for their Wednesday night educational shows. "Such men with such views are doing something for the educational uplift of the town, as well as considering the entertaining feature," says the correspondent.

Exhibitors, Features and New Ideas.

The Belasco theater at Quincy, Ill., had a "Dazey Day" when "The House of Tears" by Frank Dazey, a native son, was shown.

The Gaiety theater at Springfield, Ill., had "The Battle Cry of Peace" the week of Feb. 7.

The Pekin Maennerchor at Pekin, Ill., sponsored the German war pictures at the Court theater in that city.

The Crystal theater at Dundee, Ill., was turned over to the local camp of Modern Woodmen of America for a free show of the lodge's films.

Manager Dick Diamond of the Castle theater at Havana, Ill., has inaugurated a Triangle program with "The Lamb" and "My Valet."

The Kimmell theater at Cairo, Ill., gave a five-reel show under the auspices of the Fortnightly Musical Club. The film program was supplemented by local vaudeville talent.

Manager Thomas Scott of Scott's theater at Jacksonville, Ill., has cut the price on V-L-S-E and William Fox features to five and ten cents.

"Wanted—Ushers who will not watch Keystone comedies," advertises the Colonial theater at Urbana, Ill.

"Madame X" was shown by the Fischer theater at Danville, Ill., for the benefit of the Associated Charities.

The opera house photoshow at Mt. Sterling, Ill., has made every Thursday night feature night.

Illinois Theater Changes.

L. H. Kenady is manager of a moving picture show one night a week at Hull, Ill.

The Bond building in Versailles, Ill., is to be remodeled into a moving picture theater which will be operated by Bond & Glaze.

David Farmer has sold the Majestic theater at Cullom, Ill., to Harry Kershaw.

George A. and Carl J. Sharrock, formerly owners of the Princess theater in Decatur, Ill., purchased the Joy theater in South Locust street in Pana, Ill., from Charles E. Ensminger. Many improvements will be made in the building by the new owners, who formerly operated the Dixie theater in Vandalia, Ill.

The New Star theater recently opened at Elizabeth, Ill., will operate Wednesday and Saturday nights.

Fire broke out in the Chabot building at Kankakee, Ill., which D. A. Bestor was remodeling for use as a moving picture theater. His loss was slight, but damage of $800 was done to the building. However, it did not materially delay the remodeling.

C. J. Cain has sold the Majestic theater on North Vermillion street in Danville, Ill., to V. F. Watt and P. A. Potter.

Moving picture shows every Thursday night have been resumed in the hall at Sadorus, Ill.

Herbert McKenzie has sold his moving picture theater at Yorktown, Ill., to C. D. Pentland.

Chosen Illinois Items of Interest.

A new Bartola pipe organ, purchased by J. B. Reilly of the Princess theater at Kankakee, Ill., became lost in transit from Chicago.

The Fisher theater at Danville, Ill., will add a second entrance, giving a lobby on the Vermillion street side.

The Oak Park theater at Oak Park, Ill., has started the Burton Holmes travel pictures, one reel in length and will give them every Thursday and Friday until the world has been covered.

"The Juggernaut" played a return date at the Eagle theater in Princeton, Ill.

Manager John Lakin of the Lakin theater at St. David, Ill., has reduced his admission to five cents for three and four reels.

The Princess theater at Rockford, Ill., turned over its house two nights for the benefit of the Sons of Veterans.

The first five days of the week the Apollo theater at Ottawa, Ill., will show for five cents. Special features Saturday and Sunday will be ten cents.

Wallace Howell has resigned his position as manager of the Gem theater at Macomb, Ill.

The Unity Club at Durand, Ill., will sponsor five good film attractions at the Cozy theater, one to be shown each Wednesday. A season ticket will be sold for $1.00.

Manager Barth of the Amuse-U theater at Carbondale, Ill., had the Norman Film company make a reel of the Illinois dairymen in convention in that city.

To Charge for Censoring

Minneapolis Exhibitors Will Now Have to Pay for Viewing of Film by Censors —Mayor Nye Orders Charge of 50 Cents a Reel and Minimum Charge of $1— Only Questioned Films Need Censoring.

By Grace E. Polk, Minneapolis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—Film exchange men here are in the attitude of watchful waiting with regard to the new advisory film censor board recently organized here. The working system of the new board has now been planned out, and the one provision that meets with most disapproval from film men is an order issued by Mayor Nye providing that they must pay fifty cents a reel for all films passed on.

The number of the board has been doubled. It now consists of forty-six members, each organization which before had but one representative having been asked to name another. As outlined by George Guise, secretary to Mayor Nye, the work of the board will be done in this way. Reports of the National Board of Censors in New York are sent to Mayor Nye. He also receives reviews in the leading trade publications. If from anything in the reports or the reviews he decides that the films may be questionable he orders that the picture shall not be shown. If the exchange managers want to show the picture it is then up to them to come down to the Mayor's office, where a projection machine has been installed, and pay fifty cents a reel for running it off, with a minimum charge of $1. The Mayor informs the censor board when the picture is to be run off and it sends a committee to view it. Action of the committee, however, and of the censor board itself, is advisory only. Actual power of suppressing a picture rests with the city officials. Up to the time that the fifty cent order was sent out film men had expressed their willingness to work in co-operation with the censor board and had cheerfully submitted such pictures for view as were asked for. The charge, however, is regarded by some as a hardship, especially if demand for showing is made in any way widespread. The film men, it is said, have been assured that a showing will be asked only on such films as there is some real question on and that the censorship is not to be made a hardship on them.

"THE BIG 4-THOUGHT."

Ben E. Drum, assistant branch manager of the Big Four in Minneapolis, has turned editor, though the turning is in the nature of an addition to and not a departure from his former duties. He has become managing editor of the new monthly, "The Big 4-Thought," the new local organ of his company in the Northwest territory. The magazine is a twenty pager devoted to the interests of film men and exhibitors in the Northwest. Its complete staff consists of C. W. Sawin, editor in chief; Ben E. Drum, managing editor, and four correspondents en route: E. S. Flynn, C. L. McVey, R. C. Fox and Edward Maxwell.

Ben E. Drum.

Of his territory, E. S. Flynn, who covers the far west district of Idaho, Montana and the Dakotas, has this to say:

"Peace" Film in Minneapolis.

The "Battle Cry of Peace" is having a successful showing through the Northwest. It opened for its western premiere at the Lyceum theater in Duluth, Jan. 16, and simultaneously in Superior and Minneapolis at the Strand Jan. 30. A private view given before the opening in Minneapolis received much favorable comment in the newspapers. The first week's run in Minneapolis proved so successful that James Keough, manager of the Strand, extended its booking for four more days.

Atlanta Sunday Shows

Trouble Made for Atlanta Exhibitors Who Have Been Running Sabbath Shows for Charity—Warrants Served on Managers of Five Leading Picture Houses —Film Men Will Fight for Their Rights.

By A. M. Beatty, Atlanta Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ATLANTA, GA.—John A. Manget, a member of the executive committee of the Men and Religion Forward Movement preferred charges against five of the leading Atlanta moving picture theaters February 3 for "Violation of the Sabbath"—Hank G. Cassidy, manager of the Georgian theater; H. C. Fourton, of the Grand; John McMillan, of the Bijou; M. J. Berger, of the Victoria, and King Stillman, of the De Soto.

It is the general belief the case will be hard fought in an effort to continue Sunday operation.

"The Georgian has committed no unlawful act, Manager Hank Cassidy stated, "and counsel has told me that the King's Daughters, who have operated the theater for the past several Sundays, have been within their legal rights. We did not charge admission; our method of donation was identical with that used in the churches."

Mr. Cassidy has only recently assumed management of the Georgian. He said that all the proceeds of each of the Sunday performances were turned over to the King's Daughters, and that they were not even charged operating expenses.

On the Friday following Judge Thomas, in the Municipal Court, dismissed the warrants, but Mr. Manget renewed the fight on the next Monday afternoon. He has employed counsel in J. W. Crenshaw, who, on the instructions of Mr. Manget, went to the office of the clerk of the City Court and swore out accusations against H. C. Fourton, manager of the Grand theater; Hank Cassidy, of the Georgian; Ike Berger, of the Victoria, and John McMillan, of the Bijou.

The moving picture theaters involved have shown their determination to continue Sunday operations in behalf of charity. Every picture house involved ran on Sunday, the day before the trial.

"I will be only too glad," said Mr. Manget, "to drop prosecution if the theaters will give me their promises that they will stop Sunday operations. I have no desire to prosecute them. All I am seeking is to nip in the bud this effort to have an 'open Sunday.'"

Want Sunday Show in Durham.

A movement in behalf of the operation of moving picture shows on Sunday in Durham, N. C., is said to be gathering. This issue was presented to the city aldermen Monday, February 13.

City Attorney Morehead's plan is: First, nothing but clean, moral and standard pictures shall be shown; second, no tickets would be sold; third, all money taken less expenses would be divided among charitable organizations; fourth, the theaters would get unlimited advertising; fifth, that the factory employee and hard-working citizen may avail themselves of an opportunity denied during the week-day.

Citizens who oppose any compromise in favor of Sabbath recreation will doubtless oppose the project.

No Sunday Shows in Decatur.

The citizens of Decatur, Ala., it is said, have abandoned their movement for Sunday moving pictures. The opposition was so strong it was considered useless to continue it.

LYRIC'S COMMUNITY WORK.

Manager Chas. E. Kessnich, of the Lyric, is preparing a series of free performances for the girls of the various department stores and other business concerns of the city. A school children's program will also be rendered every Saturday morning between 11 and 12 o'clock, to which all children are invited at special rates to witness a selection of moving pictures chosen by prominent women school workers of the city.

Local Film Offices in the Old Orpheum.

The old Orpheum theater building, on Marietta street, which has recently been remodeled, a three-story structure, is occupied entirely by film agencies. The Scenic Film Company has installed one of the company's most model producing plants on the top story, and a dramatic studio is in the course of construction upon the roof.

The Mutual Film Corporation occupy the second floor while the World Film Company are on the first. This building is just outside the prohibited zone and still easy of access to out of town exhibitors.

Public announcement is made that Gus Polhill will soon open a high-class picture and vaudeville house in Hawkinsville, Ga., a lease on the building having already been made. He will install a stage, dimensions about 30 feet, with scenery, etc.

KANSAS NEWS LETTER.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

Charity Show at the Glory.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—The entire proceeds of one night's performance of the show of the Glory theater, 39th and Troost avenues, has been donated to the local Provident Association, in an effort to help that organization carry on the relief work during the cold weather. Mr. Van Zandt, manager, is urging his motion picture friends to do this also, and it is probable that others will aid the cause in a similar way.

"In His Steps" Picturized.

Topeka, Kan.—Dr. Charles M. Sheldon, pastor of the Central Congregational Church, of this city, and author of note, leaves for the East Feb. 17, where he will witness the moving picture production of the best known of his books, "In His Steps." Dr. Sheldon has not seen the scenario of this book, but anticipates no trouble in any way with the producers as to the picture. One of Dr. Sheldon's earlier books, "The Crucifixion of Philip Strong," has already been produced and released in the moving pictures.

General Ginger Here.

The General Film Company at Kansas City has just published its first trade book, calling it General Ginger. The policy of the paper, to quote from the editorial, is "To give you what you want, when you want it." Its object, also quoting from the editorial page, is "To help the exhibitor and inject a little ginger and other live qualities into the Motion Picture business in the Kansas City territory." The managing editor is R. O. Proctor, manager of the local exchange, while the business head of the paper is H. L. Orear. Its first issue is comprised of sixteen pages, partly reading matter and partly pictures. The list of releases by this company fills one complete page, notes of local exhibitors, take up another.

For Saturday Children's Shows.

The Parent-Teachers Association of Kansas City, Kan., at a recent meeting, adopted resolutions urging the showing of pictures particularly adapted to children, at the Saturday matinee. Heretofore in the Kansas City district, most of the efforts of such bodies has been directed to securing programs especially suited to children at the Friday night shows. There is evidently an inclination, however, to allow the children to visit the theaters also on Saturday afternoons —or an inclination to influence the character of pictures shown at such matinees, since the children go to them, as well as to the Friday night entertainments.

J. Roy Young to Book for Associated.

J. Roy Young, who has had an experience in many departments of moving picture exchange work, recently in charge of the poster department of the Universal at Kansas City, has been appointed booker for the Associated Film Service at Kansas City. H. G. Gill, manager of the exchange, considers himself fortunate in securing a man of such varied equipment.

An Experienced Film Man.

C. F. Rose, who is now assisting in the exploitation of the New Empress theater, Kansas City, dates his moving picture experience back to Laemmle, and Omaha, in 1907. That was the year of his permanently becoming a resident of America, and his undertaking a career.

C. F. Rose.

Mr. Rose was born in Vienna, Austria, where his father was foreign correspondent for a Chicago newspaper. He was baptized in the largest cathedral in the world, St. Stephen's, and a bishop was his godfather. He was twice in America as a child, coming with his father on business trips. After joining Laemmle he made several trips to Canada, and on one of these met a member of the Le Marquand & Le Doux firm, with which he has been associated for the past seven years.

Mr. Rose built and started the following theaters for the firm in Canada: Starland, at Kanora, Ont.; Starland and Dreamland, at Winnipeg; Starland and Bijou, at Brandon, Man.; Starland, at Prince Albert, Sask.; Elite, at Regina, Sask.; Starland, at Lethbridge, Alberta; Starland and Empress, at Calgary, Alberta; Starland and Dreamland, at Saskatoon, Sask. He then built and operated for a year the Starland in St. Paul.

Mr. Rose is very fertile in imagining and designing advertising schemes, and has mechanical ingenuity to make them practical. He had been blessed with several years' training in newspaper and advertising work, subjects which he had studied zealously. It is interesting to note that while Mr. Rose is a native of Austria, he is an American citizen—and is serving the American public wholeheartedly.

Advises Local Advertising.

Richard Robertson, local manager of the World Film Company, is a great believer in advertising and is always ready to help along any of his exhibitors with any suggestions or advice that might be of aid. At present, Mr. Robertson is boosting the dealers in Kansas towns, who are doing a great deal of advertising. In a locality the size of Salina, Donmeyer and Keefer, managers of the Palace theater, have been doing full-page advertising in local organs. And according to the Kansas City man, they are surely drawing the crowds. The reason for Mr. Robertson's exceptional interest in this phase is probably that he himself is a former newspaper man, having been with the Kansas City Star for some time previous to entering the moving picture field.

Will Cover South Central Kansas.

H. M. Berman, manager of the Metro in Kansas City, has recently returned from a trip in Western Kansas, and reports conditions very favorable there. New theaters are opening up and business seems prosperous. Mr. Berman does not stay in his office much, leaving for South-central Kansas a couple of days after returning from this trip. He expects to make Wichita, Winfield, Arkansas City, Newton and towns in that vicinity.

C. W. Chiles with World Film.

C. W. Chiles is a new man in the employ of the World Film Company, working out of Kansas City. Mr. Chiles was formerly with the General Film people, working out of St. Louis. His territory will now include western Missouri and Kansas.

Local Theater Changes.

Topeka, Kan.—Mrs. Maude Gandy, former owner of the Aurora theater, at Topeka, has taken over that establishment again and is now operating it herself.

Appleton City, Mo.—The Appleton City Orchestra and M. L. Osburn & Son have purchased and consolidated the Palace and Gem theaters of this city.

Springfield, Mo.—Mr. E. A. Harris, of Blytheville, Ark., has purchased from E. E. Parnell the Hippodrome theater in Convention Hall building on South Campbell street. It will hereafter be conducted by Jesse E. Smith, who has been director of the Hippodrome orchestra.

Osawatomie, Kan.—Mr. Roy Root has sold the furniture and equipment of the Majestic theater of this city to Mr. J. P. Kelley, of Garnett, who will continue the show as heretofore.

Pittsburg, Kan.—O. A. Bandy, formerly a traveler for the Pathe exchange, recently bought the Mystic theater, of this city, from J. A. Beasley, and is now in complete charge of the house. Mr. Bandy's place with the Pathe people was filled by Mr. George P. Meek.

Baxter Springs, Kan.—A. L. Rehm, of the Majestic picture show, is going to remodel his house, putting in an inclined floor, a modern front and opera chairs, in accordance with his plan to make it the nicest picture show of its size in the country.

Notes About Exhibitors.

Mr. J. L. McDill, a traveling exhibitor, was a recent visitor in Kansas City. Mr. McDill reports business conditions as being very good in his territory, but admits that he is now taking a vacation, not however, on account of the lack of business.

Joe Peters, of the Empire, Sterling, Kan., was a recent visitor to the Universal office. Mr. Peters is a man who believes in lots of advertising and puts his beliefs to practical use, evidently believing that "It pays to advertise."

Fire destroyed the picture house of Fred Wellington, at Memphis, Mo., recently, doing damages serious enough to compel the building of an entire new house, which will be larger and better in all respects than the old one.

Among Local Exchange Men.

C. S. Edwards, Jr., of the Pathe Exchange, accompanied by two Oklahoma salesmen out of his office, attended the meeting of the Oklahoma division of the Motion Picture League of America held in Oklahoma City Feb. 14 and 15.

C. A. ("Red") Jones, traveler for the Universal Film Exchange, won the contest conducted by the Kansas City office for the largest sales of the road men for the month ending Feb. 5. The prize this month was $25.

Mr. H. E. Berman, Kansas City manager of the Metro Pictures, has been in Southern Kansas and Missouri on a business trip, visiting among other places Wichita, Wellington, Winfield and some Missouri towns, in all places reporting the Metro pictures as being right up in front.

Mr. P. J. Hall, of the Western Film and Supply, has been doing some extensive traveling lately. He first went to Oklahoma City, where he took up the advisability of opening a branch office for his company. On his return to Kansas City he found that some one had broken into his supply room and stolen $50 worth of carbons. His next trip was to Denver, where he went for a business conference. After that Oklahoma City again found him, at the meeting of the Oklahoma division of the Motion Picture League of America.

Local Business Notes.

The new office which the New Film Corporation recently opened in Kansas City, in the Gloyd building, under the management of W. L. Rubert, reports business very good and expectations of a great increase when the warm weather and spring strikes the territory. Mr. A. Warner, president of the company, came to Kansas City with Mr. Rubert to help establish this office.

"The Strange Case of Mary Page" is proving to be the greatest drawing card the General Film Company has ever presented to the public in the line of a serial, according to the Kansa City representatives. They have sold the rights on this picture to 240 houses in their district and are getting many fine reports of the success of the picture.

Starting at 10.30 in the morning and continuing throughout the day, the General Film Company shows its releases for the following week to all exhibitors who care to see them. This is a new policy of the General people. They hope in this way to attract more than the usual number of visitors to their offices.

A business increase of 300 per cent. is the record made by A. A. Chatkin, present manager of the United Film Service, who took charge of the Kansas City office just four months ago. When he came here there was one clerk working for the firm. It now has seven. Among other things he has done to increase the efficiency of his office is to introduce new booking systems, a new accounting method and a new shipping department.

C. S. Edwards, Jr., manager of the Pathe Exchange, is very enthusiastic regarding Pathe's new serial, "The Iron Claw." The advance bookings for this picture out of the Kansas City office are far ahead of any other serial ever produced by the Pathe Exchange and it bids fair to be the most popular of that class of pictures ever shown.

Visitors of Note.

D. J. Chatkin, general manager of the United Film Service, was in Kansas City Feb. 17 on his way home from the coast. Mr. Chatkin is a brother of A. A. Chatkin, the Kansas City manager of the United Film Service. Mr. A. A. Chatkin also had another well known visitor in the person of Mr. B. F. Schooler, general manager of the district representatives for the Briscoe Motor Car Co., Jackson, Mich., who was in Kansas City for the purpose of visiting the automobile show.

F. C. Aiken, division manager of the General Film Co., was a recent visitor in Kansas City. This is the first time for a period of three years that Mr. Aiken has been in Kansas City. His territory for the past three years has been near the Pacific Coast, but was changed to this region lately. Mr. Aiken reports conditions very favorable.

M. Felstein, district manager of the United Film Service, passed through Kansas City recently on his way to the coast and found conditions in very satisfactory shape.

SEATTLE NEWS LETTER.

Special to Moving Picture World from Seattle News Service.

John Hamrick Opens the Rex.

SEATTLE, WASH.—John Hamrick, one of the first exhibitors in Seattle and one of the most popular, has undertaken a new venture. He negotiated a deal whereby he opened up the former Melbourne theater as the Rex theater, Sunday, January 27.

John Hamrick.

The opening show at the Rex featured Anita Stewart and Earle Williams in "My Lady's Slipper."

Hamrick was formerly identified with the Colonial theater and later with the American theater here.

The Rex theater has been remodeled and renovated and is one of the coziest theaters in the city now.

Frank Duffy Hears "Hands Up."

Frank Duffy, traveling auditor for the Western territory of the Pathe branch offices, has had some very interesting and thrilling adventures during his recent trip west. While auditing the Seattle Branch office, a number of the boys went to Tacoma, Wash., one evening, to take in some boxing bouts. After spending a most enjoyable evening they were invited by a friend to join his automobile party to Seattle. While en route and half way between the two cities one of the boys noticed a wagon drawn lengthwise across the road and suggested that they had better pull the same off the road to prevent some automobile from running into it. Duffy was the first out and as he drew near the wagon the order came "Hands up!" The party were politely relieved of all their loose change in true "wild and woolly" style.

Frank Duffy.

Bart Bertelson in Butte.

Bart Bertelson, one of the livest press agents who have struck Seattle, is in Butte, Mont., now, looking over the situation. Asked if he is to return to Seattle, Bart was as communicative as an oyster.

Besides being a press agent, Bertelson is also a capable business manager, and for a time was manager of the Casino theater, in Spokane. When Jim Clemmer bought the rights in the Northwest to "The Birth of the Nation" Bertelson was appointed business manager and cleaned up a neat little sum for Clemmer.

Bart Bertelson is a brother of R. W. Bertelson, manager of the V-L-S-E branch in Salt Lake. He is a youngish looking chap, but he's a few years older than he looks, and very much older in the picture business experience. He's a genial fellow, of pleasing address, who's known to everybody as just "Bart."

Wm. Smythe's Features.

In addition to the Pathe Gold Rooster releases, Manager Wm. Smythe, of the Strand theater, has contracted also for the Metro feature films to be shown in Seattle. The first of the Metros at the Strand theater was exhibited for four days beginning Jan. 26. It was Rupert Hughes' "What Will People Say," featuring Mme. Petrova in the star role.

League Makes Inspections

Omaha Clothes Seven Members of Photoplay Managers' Association With Police Power and Holds Them Responsible for Fumigation of Picture Houses Twice a Week—Result of Scarlet Fever Epidemic.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

OMAHA, NEB.—Municipal demands regarding the fumigation of moving picture houses in Omaha, Neb., during a scarlet fever epidemic were so disastrous to exhibitors that through the efforts of the Omaha Photoplay Managers' Association a modification of the orders was obtained. As a result of the concession, every theater is to be fumigated twice a week and children under twelve are to be excluded from performances.

The city has been divided into seven districts and in each district a member of the managers' association, clothed with police power and made a health inspector, sees that the fumigation of the photoplay houses is done according to orders. This inspector does not supervise the work, but merely inspects it. Each exhibitor is placed on his honor. Prosecutions were promised with the association co-operating if there were any violations.

The first order issued was that theaters be fumigated daily with formaldehyde candles, but as this cost $4 to $40 a night the burden was oppressive. Children under twelve already had been barred and the receipts reduced. Outlying houses suffered and three decided to operate only on Thursday and Sunday nights. The Gem, a neighborhood theater at Thirteenth and Williams streets, on a Friday night took in $4 and spent $3.90 for fumigation. One exhibitor told the health department he fumigated daily with a deodorizer, but was told germs fatten on these. The Alhambra reported to the city council a patron attempted to enter with a child under twelve. When informed of the rule he flashed a health department badge. An investigation was ordered.

The co-operation of the newly formed association is pleasing to city officials. The organization, which has for its object the uplift of the moving picture business in Omaha, has forty members. H. M. Thomas of the Strand theater is president. Jacob Schlank of the Hipp theater is treasurer and Edwin Monaghan of the Boulevard theater is secretary.

A. H. Blank to Build in Omaha.

A. H. Blank, who operates the Garden theater in Des Moines, Ia., besides photoplay houses in Davenport, Ia., and Omaha, Neb., has taken a 99-year lease on a site in Omaha upon which he will erect next fall a $150,000 moving picture theater.

Says Drama Has Been Benefited.

Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson was interviewed at Omaha, Neb., on the moving picture and the "legitimate." He said: "The drama has not suffered particularly by the great popularity of the moving picture. As a matter of fact the moving pictures have furnished a great and inexpensive entertainment for those in moderate circumstances. The legitimate stage will eventually benefit by the education given in the moving pictures.

"Those who speak of the supposed sad plight of the drama are not wholly familiar with the situation, for I know that it is really in better condition than ever in its history. We are now paying the dramatists more for their work than we ever did before, and that is certainly proof positive that there is still a demand for the legitimate play."

Nebraska Notes of Interest.

A thousand members of the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A. at Lincoln, Neb., went on a "moving picture excursion through Nebraska" at the Oliver theater. Several reels of films made by the Nebraska conservation commission showed the young people the wonderful resources of their native state.

The Paragon Feature Film Company of Omaha, Neb., is to make 50,000 feet of film of agricultural and industrial scenes in Texas, which will be used by the Texas Commission of Agriculture to advertise that state.

The 15,000 feet of film made along the route of the Lincoln Highway are being shown in Nebraska. About 1,500 feet are devoted to Nebraska. The pictures were exhibited before the commercial club at Omaha.

Changes in Nebraska Theaters.

Herman Diers has purchased the Larson theater at Fremont, Neb., from L. P. Larson.

A new moving picture theater will be opened at Falley, Neb.

The Commercial Club at Dodge, Neb., has taken steps to form a stock company for the erection of an opera house.

Johnston & Grosbach have purchased a site in Wauneta, Neb., for the erection of an opera house.

C. O. Hesselberth of York, Neb., has been making arrangements to open a moving picture theater at Seward, Neb.

The Palace theater at Neligh, Neb., is now under the management of J. Inhelder of Stanton.

Levi McEntaffer has purchased a half interest in the Gem theater at Emerson, Neb.

Jordan and Simonson have opened the Star theater at O'Neill, Neb.

V. G. Garner sold the fixtures of the Empire theater at Blair, Neb., to Robinson and Hopewell, who have installed them in their Home theater.

Frank Roberts, of Hendley, Neb., has sold his interest in the moving picture show at Lebanon, Neb.

Gene Parks and George Miller have opened a moving picture theater at Surprise, Neb.

"The Alien" was a great opening attraction at Hugh McCaffrey's new Boulevard theater, Thirty-third and Leavenworth streets in Omaha, Neb.

IN IOWA.

No Low Prices for "Nation" Film.

DES MOINES.—Elliott & Sherman Film Corporation, which controls western rights on "The Birth of a Nation," is just now busy making one denial after another. So persistent has become the tactics of certain managers in insinuating that the film is to show in smaller houses soon at very low prices that it has been necessary to purchase newspaper space in behalf of the managers who are now showing the films. The Elliott & Sherman concern generously acquits exhibitors who have been circulating the rumors of any intentional wrong-doing.

New Marshalltown House.

The Strand theater at Marshalltown, Ia., F. J. Ingledue and S. I. Boysen, lessees, has been opened at 112 Main street. The front is of Flemish brick with white terra cotta trimmings. On each side of the front runs a pier to the top of the building capped with white terra cotta and electric lights. The mansard roof is of green Spanish tile. An attractive feature is the rest room with chairs, writing tables and an electric fountain. The house seats 700.

New Houses and Changes in Iowa.

The Strand Theater Company of Des Moines, Ia., has been incorporated with $10,000 capital stock. Officers of the company are: A. A. Hamilton, president; F. O. Davis, vice-president, and H. E. Evans, secretary.

The Newell Amusement Company of Newell, Ia., has been incorporated with authorized capital stock of $10,000 to own and operate a theater, moving picture show and place of amusement.

Richard Lamfers has been preparing to open a new moving picture theater at Clarion, Ia.

F. D. Andrews has sold the Unique theater at 329 Brady street, Davenport, Ia., to Mrs. Harriet Halley of De Witt, Ia. Her nephew will act as manager for her.

Rockwell City House Opens.

The Empress theater, erected by G. L. Meholin at a cost of $15,000, was opened Feb. 4 at Rockwell City, Ia., with "The Great Divide." The house seats 320, is fireproof and is beautifully decorated in light cream. Harry Burnham is in charge of the Power's projection.

A probable change in the management of the Englert theater at Iowa City, Ia., is reported. It is said a New York man will lease the house for moving picture, vaudeville and dramatic attractions.

Fire destroyed the opera house at Forest City, Ia.

W. O. Markee will operate a new moving picture show at Ellston, Ia.

IN THE DAKOTAS.

Changes and Business Notes.

GRAFTON, S. D.—Lein & Piller of Grafton, S. D., have changed the name of their theater to the Strand Theater De Luxe. They have ordered an electric sign with 240 incandescent lights.

The Orpheum at Fargo, N. D., had "The Battle Cry of Peace" for a week.

"The Eternal City" was shown two nights at the First Congregational church in Sioux Falls, S. D., in order to raise a fund for the purchase of a moving picture machine to be used by the church.

O'Neill & Hunter have leased the Stephens building at Hazen, N. D., for use as a moving picture theater.

A. H. Yeoman of Devils Lake, N. D., has leased the opera house at Crary and will operate moving picture show.

C. A. Rudberg, Al Highland, O. B. Light, Cliff Shannon and William Martyn are contemplating the erection of a vaudeville theater at Pierpont, S. D.

The Cozy theater at Wagner, S. D., is now under the management of Mr. Schuster.

Leo Peterson has sold his interest in the moving picture show at Belle Fourche, S. D., to J. W. Couch.

A. C. Wallace has turned the Idle Hour theater at Watertown, S. D., over to Mrs. Emma Shaw, of Aberdeen, who was appointed receiver for the Idle Hour theaters in Aberdeen and Watertown.

DALLAS NEWS LETTER.

By S. A. M. Harrison, Dallas Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Newspaper Man to the Pictures.

FORT WORTH, TEX.—Heppner Blackman, cartoonist for the Fort Worth (Texas) Star-Telegram and editor of the "Sunad Sandwich," a feature of that paper, is leaving for California to enter the moving picture field. Mr. Blackman has been in Fort Worth for a number of years and is classed as one of the best in his line. The company with which he will affiliate was not announced.

Old Mill Changes Managers.

Dallas, Tex.—Laurence F. Stuart has succeeded Ben B. Lewis as manager of the Old Mill theater in Dallas. Mr. Stuart is probably one of the youngest men in the business in so responsible a position, being but 23 years of age. He has been associated with the Hulsey interests, which operates the theater, for a year, recently having been assistant to the man he succeeded. His hard work and pleasing personality did much to aid his rapid advancement, from the position of usher at the Dallas opera house to the managership of the Old Mill.

The Old Mill is one of the largest and finest theaters in the South, having a seating capacity of about 1,400, and being equipped with the best of everything in the house equipment line, and showing only picked attractions. Only recently a new screen was ordered, a Minusa, 22 by 27 feet.

Mr. Lewis resigned the Old Mill to remove to Houston, where he will take charge of the Pearce theater, which he purchased from Josiah Pearce & Sons, of New Orleans, and which was under the direction of J. E. Davis.

New House at Stephenville.

Stephenville, Texas, is to have a new theater, according to an announcement made by Chaucer Caver, manager and owner of the Majectic theater of that place. Work on construction on the new building will begin in the very near future. The seating capacity is planned at 500, and the construction and equipment will be of the best, including a terra cotta front.

Mutual Sub-Exchange Enlarges.

At San Antonio, the Mutual exchange has had to be greatly enlarged on account of increased business, and it is anticipated that it will, in the near future, be made a buying exchange, C. A. Clegg, manager for this territory, stating that the business increase amounts almost to a congestion.

K. F. McConville, formerly assistant at the San Antonio office, has been placed in charge of that office so as to enable H. T. Peebles, manager formerly, to spend his time on the road.

V-L-S-E Head in Dallas.

A. W. Goff, of the Big Four aggregation, spent Wednesday, February 2, in Dallas conferring with the sales force of this district. No formal meeting was held, just a general get together and get-acquainted chat being indulged in, although the salesmen are very much enthused by some of the things Mr. Goff told them.

In the conference with Mr. Goff were C. A. Meade, Dallas manager; J. B. Dugger, advertising manager at Dallas; R. King Evans, manager at New Orleans, and C. A. Gibson, O. V. Randall and J. A. Huey, salesmen. Mr. Goff left Dallas for St. Louis for a similar conference.

Dallas Territory Business Notes.

The Saenger Amusement Company, operating a string of theaters in northern Louisiana, have added another—The Sugar theater at Monroe, La., formerly run by J. V. McSteen.

The Big Four office distributed profit-sharing checks about the first of the month and they were quite handsome. One of the force got a check that amounted to exactly the price of a very popular little car, and the recipient says he has been pestered to death by salesmen who want to help him get a divorce from the check.

J. A. Holton, of the Port Arthur Amusement Company, Port Arthur, Texas, was up on business this week.

J. W. Lytle, of San Antonio, came in and bought a 12x16 Minusa screen from Barnett for a new house at San Antonio.

C. A. Clegg, of the Mutual, has returned from a trip in South Texas. He visited San Antonio, Houston, Galveston, Port Arthur and Beaumont, and reports business excellent at all points.

J. M. V————, of the Princess theater, Denton, has installed a 1916 Motiograph alongside his Simplex machine, one not being enough.

Mutual service will be used by L. and E. McComb at San Antonio after February 15. Also at A. Z. Xydias' Rex theater in Houston.

Denver Has Screen Club

Important Local Organization Started to Boost Film Business—Will Cover Colorado, New Mexico and Wyoming—Need of Such a Club—The Executive Committee—Some of the Charter Members.

By E. C. Day, Denver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DENVER, COLO.—Moving picture exchange managers and exhibitors of this district have just taken a most important step. It is the organization of the Rocky Mountain Screen Club. Every exchange and a big percentage of the exhibitors in Denver and Colorado are represented in the list of charter members. An active campaign to enlist every exhibitor in Colorado, New Mexico and Wyoming will be begun immediately and a membership of 500 is predicted within a month.

The Screen Club is the outgrowth of a movement initiated by Harry T. Nolan, of the Swanson & Nolan Supply Company. He suggested the forming of such an organization to several exchange managers and exhibitors and when he found the sentiment unanimously in favor of the project called a meeting of those interested for February 2 at the Baby Grand theater.

Only a hand full of men attended the first session, but committees were named to canvass the territory and learn the sentiment of exchange men and theater owners. Another meeting was arranged for February 6 and even the organizers were surprised when close to one hundred prospective members turned out. It was the largest and most enthusiastic gathering of motion picture men ever held in this city.

A board of directors composed of 13 members was named to perfect details of a permanent organization. They in turn selected a committee of three to draft a constitution and by-laws and take steps to incorporate the new club. Another meeting will be held this month when reports of the committees will be heard and a permanent organization formed.

Board of Directors.

The board of Directors of the temporary organization is composed of five exchange managers, four exhibitors from Denver and four exhibitors from Colorado points outside of Denver. The members follow: Al Hagan, H. E. Huffman, George Kullum, and H. B. Quine, all Denver exhibitors, Frank Tammen, Colorado Springs; Edward Anderson, Pueblo; F. H. Fairchild, Pueblo, and G. L. Walker, Grand Junction, all out of town exhibitors, and Ward E. Scott, Mutual; W. H. Cree, General; H. H. Buckwalter, Kleine; W. S. Rand, Triangle, and H. F. Nolan, all Denver exchange men.

W. S. Rand, of Triangle, was elected chairman, and he appointed the committee on constitution and by-laws as follows: W. E. Foley, H. H. Buckwalter and H. E. Huffman. Mr. Foley is a leading attorney of Denver, who donated his services to the club.

Purpose of the Club.

The purpose of the club as outlined at the meetings is to promote a closer social relation between the men interested in the various branches of the motion picture industry and to work for the advancement of the industry. It will be the aim of the organization to take concerted action in advocating and obtaining proper legislation, a fair censorship board, and equitable taxes and to oppose those things which are pernicious and aim to hurt the photoplay business.

Al Hagan, proprietor of the Iris theater, offered to supply free of charge, temporary club rooms, together with heat, light and furniture, pending such time as the club is in a position to establish permanent quarters. It is proposed to fit the club with pool, billiard and card tables and a reading room where all the leading periodicals, especially the Moving Picture World and other photoplay publications will be kept on file.

Organization Gives Strength.

The club will fill a long felt want in this territory. There has never been a general organization among moving picture men here. Recently, when an attempt was made to increase the licenses of theaters, the exhibitors formed an association and successfully combated the move. Since then the organization has been allowed to die and theater owners and exchange managers have individually been trying to fight the battles of the picture game as he himself sees them. Without organization there has been more or less throat-cutting among rival exhibitors and exchange men. It is figured that with all combined in the one cause the photoplay industry will go forward more rapidly than ever before.

A Few of the Charter Members.

Among those enlisted as charter members of the club are: Harry T. Nolan, Swanson & Nolan Supply Co.; W. H. Swanson, of same firm; Carl Stearn, Bluebird; L. Goldstein, Universal; Wm. T. Binford, Metro; W. S. Rand, Triangle; C. Carmichael, Fox; A. S. Bailey, Metro; M. H. Cohn, Paramount; J. W. Scott, Paramount; Ward E. Scott, Mutual; W. H. Cree, General; H. H. Buckwalter, Kleine; Charles R. Gilmour, World Film, and H. L. Knappen, Pathe; all these are exchange managers or assistants.

Among exhibitors: John Thompson, Thompson theater; I. A. Goodrich, Thompson; Al Hagan, Iris; Dan McCoy, Empress; George Greaves, Princess; Julius Nathensen, Lyric; George C. Killum, York; L. H. Lehrberger, Mascot; A. J. Meyerpeter, Mystic; J. R. Claypole, Ozz; J. C. Freeman, So. Broadway; Harry Quine, Bronx; G. L. Moore, Ivy; E. M. Erwin, Colfax; H. E. Huffman, Bid-a-wee, and E. C. Day, Lux, all of Denver.

Racy Ad Brings Down Censor.

The effect of lurid advertising, which was mentioned in this column last week, was felt by one of the theaters, when Mrs. Margaret Conway, amusement inspector, was attracted by the signs heralding "The Yankee Girl," and ordered a section of the film eliminated. It was the boudoir scene to which the city official took exception. The manager insisted that from the artistic standpoint the picture was anything but objectionable, but rather than have any trouble complied with the officer's wishes. The racy advertising was responsible for exciting the curiosity of the amusement censor and as stated in these columns last week is injurious to the moving picture business.

Snow Banks Hold Film.

Scores of films belonging to Denver exchanges are lost as a result of a snow blockade in Southwestern Colorado. The Cumbres Pass, on the road to Durango, is covered under 25 feet of snow. Beyond Durango, on the road to Telluride, there is another blockade and nearly every exchange in this city has one or more reels tied up. The most serious difficulty arising out of the trouble is due to the fact that several episodes in current serials have been caught in the tie-up. In some instances the needed episodes were borrowed from other exchanges, but in other cases this was found impossible and as a result the followers of serials at many theaters have had the sequence of their favorite stories broken into.

Won't Carry Films

In San Francisco, Railroads and Ferry Boats Announce Rule Against Passengers Carrying Films Even in Safe Cases—Film Exchange Board of Trade Gets Another Month's Grace—A Meeting With Inspector of Bureau of Explosives.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—Just three days before the end of January exhibitors in the suburban districts of San Francisco, comprising Oakland, Alameda, Berkeley and other communities around the Bay, were startled to learn that after Feb. 1 motion picture films were not to be allowed in the passenger cars or ferry boats of the railroads serving this territory. No orders to this effect were served upon either the film exchanges or exhibitors, but the word was passed around to the carriers of films by employes of the Southern Pacific, the Western Pacific, Santa Fe and Northwestern Pacific Railroads. Inquiries at headquarters revealed the fact that the railroad companies were preparing to enforce such a ruling and the Film Exchange Board of Trade of San Francisco took steps at once to prevent such a sweeping change being placed into effect without notice. A conference was held with the State Railroad Commission and this body ordered the railroads to postpone the date for placing the order into effect. At first the railroad officials demurred, strengthening the suspicion that it was desired to have the order placed in effect without argument, but as the Railroad Commission was firm in its stand a postponement of one month was finally agreed to.

Hard on Trans-Bay District.

Exhibitors and exchange men declare that such an order as this would work a great hardship upon them and that its enforcement would mean the closing of some of the houses in the trans-bay district. The cities across the bay are in reality a unit of the Greater San Francisco and all of the films used there are carried from the exchanges in this city by exhibitors or their representatives. In Oakland alone there are almost fifty theaters in operation, with six in Berkeley, three in Alameda, two in San Rafael, and from one to three in such communities as Sausalito, Mill Valley, San Mateo, Burlingame, Palo Alto, Sunnyvale and Haywards. In all, there are about eighty theaters in the San Francisco territory whose proprietors carry their own shows from the exchanges and many of these are located in the towns where there is no express service. Exchange men declare that if the railroads carry their point and films for suburban cities must be shipped by express their system of booking must be revised and they will suffer a heavy loss. For instance, films used on Monday in any house in this territory can now be booked for Tuesday with every assurance that they will be on hand in time. If sent by express the next booking date would have to be Wednesday, one day's rental being lost.

Admits Film Containers Are Safe.

On the afternoon of Feb. 4 a meeting of exchange men was held in the offices of the Film Exchange Board of Trade and this was attended by H. B. Eyde, Inspector for the Bureau of Explosives, upon whose recommendation the ruling had been made. Mr. Eyde asked many questions relative to the film exchange business and was particularly interested in the figures submitted showing the losses that would accrue to exchanges if this rule was enforced. He conceded that the present metal box was a safe container, but expressed the opinion that there would be a greater margin of safety if shipments were concentrated, instead of being left in individual hands. He told of instances where film boxes had been opened in transit and declared that this was one grave source of danger. The exchange men present agreed that precautions were necessary and expressed themselves as being willing to do all in their power to assist in preventing accidents. They felt, however, that the new ruling would offer no greater degree of safety than the present plan of carrying films and will ask the State Railroad Commission to modify the order to permit the carrying of films by messengers under such restrictions as may be thought advisable.

IMPERIAL CHANGES POLICY.

In order to make use of all the Paramount releases, instead of leaving one idle each week, Manager J. L. Partington, of the Imperial theater, has inaugurated a policy of two changes a week, this being the first time that this plan has been tried at this house. Complete changes of program will be made each Sunday and Thursday. The clear weather experienced at the end of January and during the first week of February brought forth a great rush of business and a two-year record was broken on the initial presentation of the "Call of the Cumberlands." Manager Partington is still featuring stage setting reminiscent of the Exposition and recently showed the Court of Abundance, with the Fountain of the Earth bathed in steamy vapors and with the fiery serpents that made this beautiful spot so much beloved. Great applause always greets these settings, which have done much to popularize the Imperial since the close of the Exposition.

LEON NETTER'S PICTURE.

We print herewith the correct picture of Leon Netter, a wrong one, we regret to say, having been used over his name in our issue of Feb. 5 on page 822. The error originated in the office of the printer, the cuts showing that they had been correctly marked. The proof reader assumed that the printer had followed instructions and though not personally acquainted with Mr. Netter, rashly took a chance and gave his imprimatur to the paragraph without verifying by the make-up sheet.

Leon Netter.

The cut used was one of Lee Gainsboro, popular manager of the local Newark office of the Universal Company. Mr. Netter is first assistant to Sol Lesser of the Golden Gate exchange and is one of best liked young film men on the Coast

BIG DEMAND FOR CAMERAS.

Moving picture cameras are now in heavy demand and the fact that the imported articles are difficult to secure is attracting more attention than ever to cameras of domestic make. The Atlas Educational Film Company, Pacific Building, which has the Pacific Coast agency for the Universal camera, has disposed of a number of these of late. Ralph Earle, the Paramount representative in this field, has purchased one, as has George E. Stone, who has left to work with the Salisbury expedition in Central America. This concern is also placing many Atlas projectors, among the recent sales having been one to the Hughson High School of Hughson, Cal.

Eastern Man Locates in San Francisco.

Sam C. Meyer, formerly of New York City, has allied himself with the management of the Valencia theater. This house is one of the largest devoted to moving pictures on the entire Pacific Coast.

Exchange Changes Hands.

The United Film Exchange on Taylor street, formerly conducted by the Warner interests, has been purchased by Chatkin & Levy, of Chicago, who are operating it as before under the management of Dave Tompkins. One member of the firm is expected to visit San Francisco shortly and the future policy will then be announced.

San Francisco News Pointers.

F. A. Lacey, who was interested in the electric chair concession at the Exposition during 1915, has purchased the Regent theater at Fillmore and Clay streets.

The Palace theater on Union street, near Gough, is now under new management.

H. L. Skinner has purchased the Electric theater at Mission and Valencia streets.

The Oriental theater on Dupont street, near Pacific, is in the hands of new owners.

O. Laurell is preparing to leave San Francisco with a moving picture show and will travel through the State by automobile.

J. E. Dowd, of Santa Clara, was a recent visitor here to look over film releases.

The new policy of the Market street theater of showing feature productions has gone into effect and the initial results have been very pleasing. Mutual masterpictures are being shown here, two changes of program being made each week, and the Mutual Film Corp. has inaugurated a campaign of advertising to attract attention to this house and to these film productions on a scale such as has never been seen here before. The Market street theater is conducted by D. Hallahan and M. J. Getz and is one of the leading downtown houses.

G. A. Metcalfe has been appointed Pacific Coast distributor for the Cosmograph, a small projection machine recently placed on the market, and a number have already been disposed of.

Agathan Lutz has purchased a Power's Cameragraph from G. A. Metcalfe and will shortly leave for the Canal Zone to open a moving picture theater.

George Knowles has disposed of the Vicksburg theater conducted by him for some time at Vicksburg and Twenty-fourth streets.

B. G. Lindsey was a recent visitor here to purchase equipment for the C. & C. theater to be opened soon at Carson City, Nev., by Catton Bros.

The Portola theater enjoyed a record run during the two weeks' engagement of the "Ne'er-Do-Well" and Manager Eugene Roth is anticipating a continuance of big business, having a strong future program booked. The program for the next five weeks will be "Damaged Goods," "Souls in Bondage," "Undine," "The Spoilers" and "Hop."

California Briefs.

Charles E. Naylor has opened the opera house at Healdsburg, Cal., with the "Clansman." A Power's Cameragraph No. 6A has been installed.

A new theater with a seating capacity of about 1,000 is to be erected at Burlingame by a Mr. Gates.

The World's theater at Gilroy, Cal., which has been conducted for the past two and a half years by F. C. Malkmes, has been sold to Joseph Hanson.

N. Iacopi and R. Puccinelli have purchased a one-half interest in the Crescent theater at Los Banos, Cal.

The Klassay theater has been opened at Fresno, Cal., by K. S. Cashin. The house has a seating capacity of 300.

The Majestic theater at Tulare, Cal., has been reopened under the management of M. Reardon.

A LEADING FILM MAN.

Short Sketch of Exhibitor Frank T. Bailey of Spokane.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SPOKANE, WASH.—Formerly engaged in the real estate business in Cleveland, Ohio, Frank T. Bailey, of Spokane, Wash., and Butte, Mont., is now one of the most widely known motion picture exhibitors of the Northwest. He first engaged in the moving picture business as an exhibitor in Butte, Mont., in 1907 and since that was interested in the former Independent Western Film Exchange; later the Metro Film service, which was recently disposed of by Grombacher & Bailey to the Metro Pictures Corporation, New York City.

Mr. Bailey is president of the Montana Amusement Company, which operates four moving picture theaters in Butte and other Montana towns. He is also a stockholder and general manager of the Liberty Amusement Company, Spokane, Wash., which company owns and operates the Liberty theater and is associated with George Grombacher, of Portland, Ore., in operating the American theater, Seattle, Wash., and the National theater, Portland, Ore., he being a heavy stockholder in each.

Aside from being a motion picture enthusiast Mr. Bailey is an automobile enthusiast and, with his wife, makes long across country automobile trips.

Mr. Bailey established one of the first moving picture shows, the first American, on North Main street, Butte, Mont., about nine years ago. At that time there were only three such places in the state. Films were hard to get, the supply houses were located in Chicago and such subjects that could be spared long enough to make the journey to Butte were old and badly worn.

Realizing the advantage of a film exchange in the northwest to serve the rapidly growing number of show houses, Mr. Bailey visited Chicago and completed arrangements to purchase outright new subjects to be used in his theater, after which they were circuited to other moving picture houses in Montana, Washington and Idaho. This exchange business grew very rapidly and was finally disposed of to the General Film Co.

In the fall of 1911 the site occupied by the present American theater was leased and under the supervision of William Cutts, then general manager of the company, the theater was erected and ready for business in less than three months. This rapid construction, in the dead of winter, has since stood as a building record for Butte, according to reports from that city.

THE MAN THAT GETS AHEAD.

Ralph Ruffner, manager of the Liberty theater, in addition to taking an active interest as chairman in the forthcoming masquerade ball which theater managers will give in the Davenport hotel for the benefit of the Spokane Inter-state Fair, appeared in a new role Feb. 1.

He addressed officers and employes of the Spokane & Eastern Trust Company on "Efficiency." This was at the opening of a lunch room which the big trust company runs for the exclusive benefit of its employes.

Mr. Ruffner spends considerable time figuring out how to attract interest to his theater by giving additional service and making the lobby appear attractive and referred to these matters in his address.

A new feature at the Liberty is that the door boys in uniform aid patrons in removing their coats. The boys also brush the snow from the shoes and clothof patrons during the stormy weather. Manager Ruffner has been complimented on this feature by women, business men and financiers whose fortunes are reported run above the million mark.

NEW HOUSE IN ANACONDA, MONT.

H. J. Skinner, a Spokane, Wash., contractor, has just been awarded a contract for the erection of a $40,000 moving picture theater in Anaconda, Mont., by the Montana Amusement Company.

Mr. Mandoli and a Mr. James of Anaconda are interested in the company. Mr. Mandoli is manager of a moving picture house now operated in Anaconda. Work on the structure is to start as soon as spring opens.

ENTERTAINS NEWSIES.

Manager Will T. Reed invited Spokane newsboys to hear the Royal Guatemalan Band and witness Pearl White in "Hazel Kirke" at the Casino theater Monday night, Jan. 31. He announced that all of the 500 tickets distributed were used. Arrangements for the boys were handled by Alexander Turnbull and Dr. H. S. Clemmer, manager of the Clemmer theater, acted as yell leader for the boys, who cheered the band and applauded the pictures.

Truce Declared

Portland, Oregon, Film Men and City Administration Compromise Censorship Fight—Co-operation to Be Keynote of New Plan—Star Chamber Sessions Eliminated and Representation on Board Assured.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of the Moving Picture World.

PORTLAND, ORE.—The censorship fight between the moving picture interests of Portland and the city administration has abated if not terminated and a co-operative agreement, in effect, at least, has been entered into between the film men and Mayor Albee. The moving picture interests have not, however, gone on record as favoring censorship, but their fight at this time has been for fair treatment on the part of the administration and this has been assured them.

Under the new arrangement two viewers will pass upon a picture. These viewers will be vested with authority to pass or condemn and this authority they must exercise without consulting the members of the appeal board. In other words they must use their own judgment. Under the old plan viewers occasionally did not pass on a picture until they had consulted the secretary of the board, which gave rise to the assertion that Portland had a one person censorship. Mrs. Colwell will undoubtedly be retained as secretary of the board. The viewers will be appointed by the entire board and will be assigned to their duties by the secretary.

If the viewers condemn a picture, an appeal to the censor board can be taken. In practice, therefore, the board provided for in the present city ordinance will be an appeal board. No viewer can serve as a member of this board.

Mayor Albee has appointed E. J. Myrick, manager of the Columbia theater, and Rev. Oswald W. Taylor, of the Grace Memorial Episcopal Church, as new members of the censor board or appeal board. Mr. Myrick, though comparatively a new resident of Portland, is highly esteemed by the local screen fraternity and Rev. Taylor is the pioneer in the local field of motion pictures for the Sunday school.

All star chamber proceedings will be abolished. Film men will be permitted to be present at the viewing and discussion of pictures and to hear the reasons for the decisions of the censors. This was one of the big issues raised in the present fight.

The arrangement will only be a new application of the present ordinance, which, technically speaking, is not appealable. But the film men have agreed to give it a fair and honest trial and the Mayor has realized that the censorship conditions as they formerly existed worked unnecessary hardships on exhibitors.

Anyway, the combatants are out of the trenches.

FILM MEN LUNCH TOGETHER.

The Oregon Motion Picture Men's Association, which name has been adopted by the film interests of Portland with a view of eventually making the organization statewide, has inaugurated the idea of holding weekly luncheons at which to discuss the association's affairs. The first of these was held at Hotel Oregon, Feb. 3, and an excellent representation of the city's film industry attended. Present were: E. J. Myrick, G. T. Holtzclaw, E. Shainwald, L. B. Christ, M. E. Wyman, E. F. James, Paul Noble, J. A. Jennings, C. M. Hill, Joe Baum, L. A. Todd, J. S. Woody, W. W. Kofeldt, G. A. Reed, I. L. Cohen, A. S. Kirkpatrick, W. S. Wessling, F. M. Simonton, C. H. Code and P. M. Kershaw

PORTLAND ISOLATED.

On Feb. 1 Portland and Oregon came into the grasp of the worst storm experienced in thirty years. Every means of communication was cut off and for several days preceding this writing all wires entering the city were laid low by sleet storms and trains blockaded by snow. During this time no shipments of films were made or received, by Portland Exchanges and they expected their booking arrangements would be entirely upset when the storm did abate. The city's street car system was paralyzed and in several instances suburban theaters were unable to get their films to the exchanges.

D. T. Lekas, owner of the Opera House, Culver, Oregon, came to Portland before the storm to arrange service and became an enforced guest in the city by reason of the tie-up of the railroads.

CHANGE AT CONDON THEATER.

W. D. Ingalls, formerly manager of the Orpheum theater, Marshfield, Oregon, has acquired the American theater, Condon, Oregon. A wonderful array of features are on Mr. Ingalls' program. It consists of Gold Rooster, Big Four, Paramount, Metro, World, Mutual and Blue Bird. Mrs. Ingalls, who is well known on the Pacific Coast as a singer under the name of Ada Raymond and who is an excellent interpreter of motion picture music, will assist her husband in conducting the theater and the combination should spell success for the enterprise.

INTERESTING ITEMS.

Ground has been broken for the new exchange building to be erected by the Freedman estates at Ninth and Davis Streets, Portland. The Mutual Film Corporation's local exchange has signified its intention to move into the new building when completed.

Following orders issued by Eastern transportation lines, orders were issued by the Portland railroad offices February 1, that thereafter films will not be permitted to be carried in passenger coaches.

The Portland Pathe exchange has received numerous calls for its educational films. From Salem, Oregon, calls for these films have come from the State Board of Control, representing all the State institutions, from the First Congregational Church and from the Indian Training School.

Manitoba Censor Bill

New Measure to Be Presented to the Legislature of the Province Will Ask That Provincial, Not City, Government Be Made Responsible for Censorship—An Appeal Board—Consolidation of Amusement Statutes.

By E. C. Thomas, Vancouver Corespondent of Moving Picture World.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—A change is scheduled to take place in the near future in the censoring of films in the provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan. This work has been done by a board of four censors under the license department of the city of Winnipeg, and their decisions have covered both provinces. The small number of theaters in Saskatchewan has not justified the maintenance of a separate board in that province, which has accordingly simply kept a representative in Winnipeg to look after its interests. Corporation Counsel Hunt informed the Market, License and Relief Committee recently that an attempt by the Saskatchewan government to maintain its own censorship board had resulted in a loss of $8,000.

Hon. Edward Brown will shortly introduce into the Manitoba Legislature a bill providing for a transfer of the censoring power from the city of Winnipeg to the provincial government, and also calling for the appointment of an appeal board. Under the present system no appeal is allowed, and it was partly on account of complaints regarding this aspect of the situation that the matter was taken up. Mr. Brown's bill will also consolidate a number of statutes relating to places of amusement. It will bring under the same head the regulations concerning theaters, dance halls, gum machines, and billiard and pool rooms, but it is stated that the only material changes proposed relate to the moving picture theaters.

The transfer of the censorship "concession" will mean a considerable loss to Winnipeg, as the city has derived from this source an annual revenue of more than $6,000.

Perceiving that this is an opportune time to bring up the whole matter of censorship for discussion, a man in the city has written a letter which was recently published in a leading newspaper. This writer argues convincingly for the complete abolition of censorship as at present constituted here, and suggests that the province simply maintain an inspector who shall see that the rulings of the British and American national censorship boards are carried out. A charge of 50 cents a reel is advised, instead of $1.00, as at present, and it is pointed out that practically all of this revenue would, under the system proposed, go to the government, instead of being expended for the maintenance of a local board.

"Why not let the public do all this censoring?" asks this writer. "They will soon turn down and 'put on the rocks' any moving picture house that will dare to show a class of stuff that is not good. The worse the picture the sooner the rocks."

It is considered likely that some effort along these lines will be made by local picture men.

NEW PANTAGES HOUSE.

Alexander Pantages, vaudeville magnate and head of the circuit bearing his name, visited Vancouver last week for the purpose of completing arrangements for purchasing a site on which is to be erected a new theater, replacing the Pantages house now in use here. He announced that he had under consideration a plot of ground on Hastings Street, somewhere between Homer and Granville, which had been submitted to him at a price that was entirely satisfactory, and that the deal would be closed within two or three days.

Mr. Pantages stated that the new house would cost about a quarter of a million dollars, and will be along the lines of the new Pantages' recently opened in Seattle. Ground will be broken at an early date, and it is expected that the new house will be opened sometime next summer. "It is my idea to put up new houses all along the circuit," said Mr. Pantages before leaving for Seattle. "We are building new houses at Tacoma and Minneapolis, which will soon be ready for occupancy. I will be back in Vancouver in a day or two to get things started."

As in all of the Pantages houses, moving pictures will form a part of the program.

NEW LICENSE TRANSFER RATE.

The system of transferring licenses for moving picture theaters in Winnipeg, as well as various other licenses, is to be changed by the city, making the cost much less than in the past. The existing fee is one-quarter of the ann al amount payable for the license, and License Commissioner Kerr has recently called attention to the fact that this is exhorbitant where the original license fee amounted to a large sum. He recommended that $3 be the new charge where the original fee was over $25, and $2 where it was under $25.

Manager of Local Mutual.

Albert E. Vince, manager of the Vancouver office of the Mutual, is another of the younger men who are occupying positions of responsibility in the film industry in Western Canada.

Entering the business four years ago as bookkeeper and stenographer under Manager J. N. Meagher of the General

Albert E. Vince.

Film Company's local branch, Mr. Vince was placed in charge of the office work when C. H. Code succeeded to the managership of the exchange, and on Mr. Meagher's return to Vancouver was advanced to the position of booker.

A year ago, when the Mutual office here was in need of a new manager, A. F. Cummings, then that company's general manager for Canada, who was at that time in the city, adopted the expedient of consulting the local exhibitors, to aid him in the selection of a man to fill the place. Their choice fell almost unanimously on Mr. Vince, and he was accordingly offered the position.

Although somewhat handicapped during the past summer by a lack of new subjects, Mr. Vince is now receiving regular shipments from the East, and is now increasing business at a rapid rate.

Among other things, Mr. Vince owns an automobile and a bull pup.

LOTTERIES AND FALSE ADS.

The question of giving away "lottery tickets" with purchases was brought up at the last meeting of the council of the Vancouver Board of Trade, and the matter was discussed at some length. It was stated that in the opinion of the council the practice is illegal, and should be stopped. It is a fact that until a couple of years ago real lotteries, under the name of "sweepstakes," were regularly conducted in British Columbia, but have since fallen under the ban of the government.

A test case, similar to the one which recently resulted in the conviction of the Hudson's Bay Company in Alberta, would clear the local atmosphere considerably, and it is generally felt that a prohibition of the country store idea would be a beneficial thing for the moving picture theaters, as a great amount of merchandise and money is given away every week.

This matter, as well as the question of untruthful advertising, has been referred to the legal and legislative committee of the Board of Trade, and after consultation with the Retailers' Association it is probable that the attention of the government will be called to these matters.

Handing Each Other Bouquets.

The World man noticed a scheme recently which was reminiscent of the old days in Los Angeles, when to comply with a city ordinance prohibiting still pictures of firearms in use, exhibitors used to paste a bunch of flowers over every six-shooter displayed on posters. The results was a highly diverting assortment of scenes showing stage robbers and cowboys all handing each other bouquets.

The present instance was in connection with a three-sheet advertising Universal's "The Frame-Up," and showing a politician delivering a speech from a rostrum draped with small American flags. A few of these had been covered up with small English and Canadian flags, so that the whole thing gave the impression of an astute American politican trying to corral the British vote.

Seamans Heads Strand at Winnipeg.

The Strand moving picture and vaudeville theater in Winnipeg, owned by Allardt Brothers, of Chicago, has a new manager, E F. Seamans, succeeding F. J. Murphy, who has left for South Bend, Ind. Mr. Seamans is a veteran showman, who played his first engagement in Winnipeg in 1879, and who has since visited the city many times, both with his own companies and with various other organizations. According to an announcement by the new manager, the performances at the Strand will hereafter be continuous from noon until 11 P. M., and the moving picture part of the programs will consist of Paramounts exclusively.

W. Walkley Booker for Universal.

W. Walkley, a brother of D. G. Walkley, manager of the Universal office in Calgary, and himself formerly in charge of the booking at that office, is now firmly established as booker for the Universal in Vancouver. Mr. Walkley changed places a short time ago with Jules Levine, who is now in Calgary.

Scrambled the Staff.

A section of the paper racks at the General Film exchange in Vancouver, holding several thousand sheets of mounted paper, toppled over one day last week, and narrowly missed some of the staff, who, according to reports, scrambled like a lot of eggs.

The Royal theater in New Westminster was recently turned over for a day to the 104th New Westminster Fusileers Chapter of the Daughters of the Empire, to aid them in supplying comforts for the soldiers. "Gambier's Advocate" was shown.

The engagement of "Fighting in France," at the Globe theater in Vancouver, originally scheduled for a week, was kept on for three days extra, and then finished out the second week, at the Royal Victoria, in Victoria, under the auspices of the Daily Colonist. A percentage of the receipts was turned over to the Red Cross.

NEW EXCHANGES IN MONTREAL.

By Gerald Gallagher, Montreal Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Coming of V-L-S-E and Triangle to Local Field An Event.

MONTREAL, QUE.—The most important event recently in Montreal film circles is the entrance into Montreal of two new distributing concerns. The Triangle people have invaded this territory, as well as the V-L-S-E. The entrance of these two exchanges will materially help to influence trade conditions. At the moment of writing there are thirteen concerns carrying the business of supplying theaters in a district made up of the extreme Eastern section of Ontario, the City of Montreal, and the remainder of the Province of Quebec. The last mentioned really does not amount to very much.

If Montreal were any other town on the face of the globe, thirteen exchanges could be supported easily. But, taking into consideration the harrassing laws, municipal and provincial, the exorbitant import taxes and all the rest, well—just ask yourself—can thirteen exchanges carry on a money-making trade? It would be a different matter if laws, the censors, and common sense of the exhibitors in the matter of organization, were better situated.

E. A. Fenton's New Triangle Office.

The Triangle office is in charge of E. A. Fenton, formerly connected with the General Film Co. Mr. Fenton announces that he has signed up four houses, these he considers sufficient for the present in Montreal. First run will be at the New Grand, a theater which has commanded the respect of all through its sticktoitiveness and success after a long fight. Second run will be in the Main street district at the Midway theater. The new Regent theater will have third run, and the Moulin Rouge fourth. The last two houses are owned by the Independent Amusement Limited.

H. W. Collum's New V-L-S-E Office.

The V-L-S-E is locally in charge of H. M. McCollum, formerly connected with the Universal's Montreal office. Several Big Four features have already been seen in Montreal, among them being "The Juggernaut," "The Island of Regeneration," "The Chalice of Courage," and several others. These features were leased direct from New York and shown exclusively in Montreal at the Imperial theater. Mr. McCollum, or "Mac," as he is more popularly called, is out, he says, to give the people a good line of goods, and he is just the type to make things hum.

Here's good luck to both the new exchanges, and also a hope that all will prosper.

NEW THREE RIVERS HOUSE.

Messrs. Rousseau, Myrand and Fontaine are building a $30,000 picture theater in the City of Three Rivers. It will have a seating capacity of 1,000 people, and be thoroughly modern and fireproof. The company expects to open the house about the first of April. Several acts of vaudeville will be staged, together with a good program of photoplays. Three Rivers has a population of twenty thousand. This company also owns Quebec's Victoria, managed by Joe Tanguay.

TWO NEW HOUSES IN MONTREAL.

The two fine theaters now in construction in Montreal, the St. Denis and Regent, will soon be open to the public. Now comes the announcement of two more theaters for this locality, one in the West End and the other in Maisonneuve, at the other end of the town. The Western house will be known as the Windsor theater, and at the corner of Windsor and Dorchester streets. This location is one block below St. Catherine street, Montreal's "White Way," and accessible to many lines of treet cars. It will make a policy of catering to the elite of the town. The other house will be at the corner of Ontario and Orleans streets, in a French-speaking locality of about forty thousand. The house's name will be the Orleans theater, and it is said will cost $100,000.

Short Notes of Special Interest.

The Globe theater has been under the management for the last ten weeks of Mr. Sam Bernstein. The house has begun to pay. It has generally been considered a losing proposition.

Recent Features.

Recent features at local houses were: "The House of Tears," Metro, at Imperal; Canada, "The Cheat," Paramount; Tivoli, "The Foundling," Paramount; Fairyland, "The Song of a Wage Slave," Metro; Domino, "Over Night," World Film; Passe-Temps, "Carmen," Fox; "Camille," World Film, Connaught theater.

The Montreal Mutual office is now in charge of N. Hepworth. He is very popular and a hustler.

Charges Against Censor

In Toronto, Manager C. P. Price of Mutual Film Corporation Brings Charges Against R. C. Newman, of the Appeal Board, of Incompetence, Discrimination and Neglect of Duty.

By W. M. Gladish, Toronto Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

TORONTO, Ontario.—Immediately after the Theatrical Board of Appeals for Ontario had made its decision on Bennett's "Damaged Goods," a definite condemnation of the whole picture, C. B. Price, Canadian general manager of the Mutual sprung a surprise at Toronto, the Ontario Capital, by making charges of incompetence against R. C. Newman of the Appeal Board and also of discrimination and neglect of duty.

Mr. Price announced that he had a witness to prove that Mr. Newman had not viewed the films in their proper order, a portion of the picture having been thrown on the screen at the Parliament buildings in an upside down position and reversed order, and that the member of the board in question had taken no notes as the picture was being shown in order to guide him in his decision, and that the same examiner continually urged the machine operator to speed up the picture in order to get through with it.

"I have had a raw deal," declared Mr. Price to the Toronto representative of MOVING PICTURE WORLD. "The picture has not been given a fair show and I intend to take this matter to the highest courts. Among other things, I will want to know why the Hon. T. W. McGarry the provincial treasurer, who is a member of the Appeal Board, did not make arrangements to see the picture when it was being shown. I have nothing against the Ontario Board of Censors, because they saw fit to reject "Damaged Goods," but I would like to know why Mr. Newman, who was a stage hand until he secured his present position on the appeal board, should have the power to say what is good for people of Ontario to see. I have secured the endorsement of many doctors, professors, social workers and others for the picture, but in the face of the opinion of these authorities, Mr. Newman declares that the film shall not be shown.

"The spoken play 'Damaged Goods' is being presented in various theaters throughout the Province of Ontario, and I am going to know the reason why the film version of the same story cannot be exhibited," continued Mr. Price. "I have written a polite letter to Hon. T. W. McGarry, asking him to see the picture, and I am also pointing out the improper manner in which Mr. Newman, a servant of the people, examined the picture. I have started a battle and I do not intend to give it up until I have secured some needed reforms. We have never raised any objections before against a decision of the censors in Ontario and possibly we have been too meek in accepting their decisions. I do not intend to stop fighting now until the present system and present customs are rectified."

The Toronto daily papers are giving considerable space to the clash between the Mutual officials and the government representatives and the public, apparently, is on the side of the film people, judging by the general encouragement extended to Mr. Price in the shape of several personal letters and telephone messages.

Changes at Mutual Exchange.

Important changes have been made in the staff of the Canadian Universal at Toronto. F. R. Lennon has been promoted from the Toronto managership to the position of assistant general manager for Canada. "Wally" Davidson, formerly a Universal traveling representative, has been appointed manager of the Toronto branch. Claire Hague continues as general manager for the Universal in Canada.

J. Davidson, a brother of the new Toronto Universal manager, has resigned as manager of the Grand Opera House, North Bay, Ontario, to become a traveling representative for the Mutual out of Toronto.

A rumor that Jack Droy, a pioneer moving picture man in Canada, would leave the Toronto office of the Mutual to go to the new Toronto branch of the V-L-S-E has been denied by Mr. Droy. He was, until recently, with Mr. Kauffman in the Canadian headquarters of the Famous Players.

Ontario Theater Changes.

After owning the Orpheum Theater, Queen and Bathurst streets, Toronto, for many years, George Dodds has sold the house to C. J. Murch. The theater has a seating capacity of about 400.

The Empire Theater, Timmins, Ontario, was recently seriously damaged by fire when flames consumed the adjoining premises. The damage to the theater, which is located in the extreme North of Ontario, amounted to about $400, and the house has been closed for repairs.

Mrs. Norris of Niagara-on-the-Lake, Ontario, has announced that she will re-open her large new terra-cotta theater, the Strand, in April, for the benefit of the 20,000 soldiers who will be encamped near that place during the summer months. She has booked the Mutual program.

F. R. Lennon Gets Many Bookings.

F. R. Lennon, in charge of the Universal exchange at Toronto, announces that he has placed Universal service in eight of the eleven houses in Ontario controlled by the Griffin Amusement Company, which is one of the pioneer picture theater concerns in Canada. The towns covered include Owen Sound, St. Catharines, Belleville, Welland, North Bay, Woodstock and Thorold.

H. E. Stonge, manager of the U-Kum theater, College and Dovercourt Road, Toronto, has made arrangements whereby first or second runs of V-L-S-E and General releases will be shown at his house, at 10c. and 15c. prices. He has also secured an orchestra of five pieces.

T. S. Coffey, assistant manager of the Strand, Toronto, for the past eighteen months, has resigned, in order to enlist as a private in the 166th Overseas Battalion of Canada's fighting army. Mr. Coffey is a Canadian by birth.

SELIG.

SELIG-TRIBUNE NO. 9 (Jan. 31).

Mystic Lake, Mass.—Traveling at a speed of a mile a minute with a thrill and a near-spill at every turn, ice yachting proves a joyous sport for the venturesome.

Mohawk, Cal.—Enormous rotary snow plows are being used with feverish haste to clear snow-filled mountain passes and retain railroad traffic here.

Cambridge, Mass.—Preparedness is the slogan of the Harvard students who daily engage in military maneuvers.

Truckee, Cal.—Thorough believers in the value of a cold plunge as a stimulus to health, two men here utilize snow drifts for the desired exhilaration.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Fifteen persons are killed and more than a score injured in an explosion which wrecks the plant of the Kelker Blower Company here.

Portland, Ore.—"For you a rose in Portland grows" is the slogan adopted by the "boosters" club here, whose members men, women and children write letters to their friends back East to visit them.

Washington, D. C.—To be the first and only Indian ever appointed to the police force of the Capitol building, is the distinction accorded Frank Janis, a Sioux Indian.

Phoenix, Ariz.—The worst flood in Arizona's history rages in this city destroying bridges, hurling homes from foundations, overwhelming dams and railroads and leaving death and ruin in its wake.

Watertown, Mass.—Doomed to die, as the life of a horse in the present war is estimated at sixty days, 3,000 horses are shipped from here to the battle front.

Near Paris, France.—A huge concealed searchlight, cleverly hidden, and operating with great rapidity, is used to locate marauding warplanes.

Hazebrouck, France.—A model type of trench mortar gun which hurls a high explosive into the enemy's lines.

Corpus Christi, Tex.—U. S. troops, on duty, near the Mexican border, give an exhibition of machine gun target practice at the first Gulf Coast Exposition held here.

Selig-Tribune Special Feature Picture.—Gila County, Ariz.—In a laudable effort to preserve to posterity the methods of primitive Indian life, Chief Big Cloud, an Apache, kills, before the Selig-Tribune camera, buffaloes with bows and arrows.

SELIG-TRIBUNE NO. 10 (Feb. 3).

New York, N. Y.—The sixth annual showing of the Pomeranian Club opens at Hotel McAlpin.

San Francisco, Cal.—W. Morgan Schuster, former treasurer general of Persia, who, it is rumored, will act as a special representative of President Wilson in the Orient, leaves on the S. S. Nippon Maru.

Charlestown Navy Yard.—Secretary Daniels asks Congress for $150,000 for the restoration of the old frigate "Constitution," the most glorious naval relic of our history, which lies rotting at her mooring here.

Washington, D. C.—A monster petition, 15 miles long, signed by 1,500,000 people, asking for an embargo on arms and munitions, is presented to the Senate in clothes baskets.

Soissons, France.—That aeroplanes are important factors in warfare is demonstrated by the variety of anti-aircraft guns now in use. The best types are in constant use here.

New York, N. Y.—Helen Hayes Gleason, the original "Hilda" in "Young Hilda at the Wars," has returned to America, the only woman decorated for bravery by the King of Belgium.

Washington, D. C.—The equestrian carnival which is to be held here in early spring, occupies the attention of society women, who engage in practice tandem riding.

Miami, Fla.—James Whitcomb Riley, the Hoosier poet of childhood, and "Marse" Henry Watterson, while recuperating here in the sunny Southland, obligingly pose for the Selig-Tribune.

Juarez, Mexico.—Racing at Carranza's new Chihuahua track continues through the winter more popular than ever.

Selig-Tribune Feature Picture.—Elephants in India are the "day laborers." From early dawn till dark the massive pachyderms do the traction work in the native lumber yards.

New York, N. Y.—President Wilson makes this city the scene of his first address on "preparedness." Intimate views by our own cameraman, who by special permission, accompanies the Presidential party.

VIRTUE TRIUMPHANT (Three Parts—Feb. 21).—The cast: Helen Lord and Madam Dreasco (Fritzi Brunette); Billy Boyd (Jack Pickford); Thomas Burt (Edw. J. Piel); Gladys Earle (Virginia Kirtley); Mrs. O'Malley (Lillian Hayward); Phillips Dreasco (Sidney Smith). Written by Ouida Bergere. Directed by William Robert Daily.

Helen Lord is a clever young girl, but unable to convince the managers of her histrionic ability. However, she finally achieves a triumph, and Thomas Burt, a theatrical manager, susceptible to pretty women and dazzled by Helen's triumph, endeavors to make love to her. He is spurned. Not being inclined to a woman who resents his familiarities, Burt engages Gladys Earle, an actress with few morals, to succeed Helen Lord, and gives Helen her notice of release.

Billy Boyd is a young playwright, who finds that genius in the playwrighting line is most perspiration. Billy meets Helen, and is inspired by a scheme, in which to put his latest play over, with Helen in the leading role.

Helen, through make-up, impersonates Madam Dreasco, and Billy enacts the part of the Madam's son, both of whom are expected in the United States. Thomas Burt is summoned to the hotel of the supposed Madam Dreasco. He reads the play, is taken with it and purchases it. However, the contract reads that Burt is to leave the choice of a leading woman to the Madam.

Later, after a most successful "first night," Burt discovers that the leading woman is none other than Helen Lord, the girl he had once discharged. The real Madam Dreasco sends word to the theatrical manager and his leading woman, that she hopes for the girl's unqualified success, and that the playwright who wrote such a good play is certainly entitled to meet the success he has achieved.

A SAFE RISK (Feb. 26).—The cast: Bill Hardluck (Sidney Smith); Joe Inright (Ralph McComas); Daisy Doolittle (Betty Nathan). Written by C. B. Hoadley. Produced by Sidney Smith.

The Hocum Accident Insurance Co. does a land office business and the lame, the halt and the blind who are in need of "safe risks" apply there for accident insurance. Joe Inright draws $25.00 for a week's idemnity, and from that hour on resolves to draw another indemnity if possible.

Bill Hardluck, attracted by the money drawn by Joe, resolves to take out an accident insurance policy. After he does so, needing ready money, he does everything in his power to experience an accident. He takes all kinds of long chances, but is always saved in the nick of time. Finally Bill is blown into the air by dynamite and falls through the skylight into a surgeon's operating room. When he is released, he is certainly in need of accident insurance and is hurried to the insurance office. When he arrives he discovers that the Hocum Accident Insurance Co. has been closed.

BIOGRAPH.

HIS MOTHER'S SON (Reissue No. 38—Feb. 21).—The cast: The mother (Jenny Lee); the father (W. Chrystie Miller); the daughter (Mae Marsh); the son (Walter Miller); an orphan (Robert Harron); restaurant owner (Joseph McDermott).

The quick-tempered masculine old woman has a meek husband and two children who would starve were it not for her efforts. When her son comes home from a spree with the boys she turns him out of doors. The excitement induces an apoplectic stroke, and she dies. Without her, the father and daughter soon are helpless, and at last are evicted from the old home. An orphan boy whom they have treated kindly, casts in his lot with them. In the city the three get work in a cheap restaurant, the old man carrying a banner while his daughter washes dishes and the orphan peels potatoes. The latter often has to take the part of his friends when the manager bullies them.

The old man's son has become a sailor, and after a successful voyage he returns home. Two girls give him a sailor's welcome, and he is going off with them when, in the window of the cheap restaurant, he sees his father, an object of ridicule to the passing crowd. Dashing in, he pulls the old man out of the window and makes short work of the manager when the latter interferes. In the kitchen the girl, who has just been hectored by the manager, hears the commotion. Her protector hears it also. Both come into the dining room and are carried off in triumph by the sailor, who inherits his mother's character and ability. The reunited family sits down to a gorgeous dinner.

THE GUILT OF STEPHEN ELDRIDGE (Three Parts—Feb. 23).—The cast: Stephen Eldridge (Charles H. Mailes); William Eldridge (G. Raymond Nye); John Gordon (Ivan Christy); Douglas Gordon (Jack Mulhall); Mrs. John Gordon (Adelaide Woods); Mr. Curzon (Jack Drumeir); Eleanor Curzon (Vera Sisson); Marie Abbot (Gretchen Hartman); George Trask (Charles Perley).

False entries in the bank's books serve to cover up the peculations of Stephen Eldridge, the cashier, but the discovery of the fraud results in the imprisonment of John Gordon, the paying teller. Gordon implores his wife to keep his little son in ignorance of the disgrace, and vows that he will clear his name some day.

Time passes, and Eldridge is made president of the bank. About the same time Gordon is made a trusty in prison. He takes advantage of his freedom to escape and makes his way to on him to effect his getaway. Questioned as to the source of the money, she replies that an old friend of Gordon, who wishes to remain unknown, sends her a monthly remittance through a lawyer. Gordon half guesses the truth and makes his way to Eldridge's home, where the bank president, seeing him looking through a window, believes it an aparition conjured up by his guilty conscience. Gordon assumes the disguise of a scissors grinder, and thus contrives to keep in close touch with his wife.

Douglas Gordon goes to college and there meets the son of his father's betrayer. William Eldridge is a dissolute junior, always in debt. He has secretly married Marie Abbot, a show girl, and she demands money. He goes to his father and is severely lectured for his bad habits. On the table he sees a memorandum of his father's payments to Mrs. Gordon, and uses this knowledge to force money from his father. Later, at college, he quarrels with Douglas Gordon over a game of cards and taunts him: "You're the son of a thief, living on my father's bounty." Douglas is restrained by the presence of the girl he loves—Eleanor Curzon, daughter of Stephen Eldridge's old friend. He departs to ask his mother if what he has heard is true. When she tells him the story, his one thought is to establish his father's innocence.

When William Eldridge taunts his father with paying conscience money to the embezzler's wife, John Gordon, in his disguise of a scissors-grinder, is watching at the window and overhears the words. His son resolves to get possession of the incriminating document, and goes to the Eldridge home late at night. His father follows him at a distance.

Stephen Eldridge is giving a house party for Eleanor. After the guests have retired, Eleanor returns to the study in search of her hand bag. Hearing footsteps, she secrets herself in a closet. William Eldridge enters the room and proceeds to rob his father's safe. Marie has threatened to reveal his marriage to his father, and, rendered desperate he will stop at nothing to buy her silence. He is interrupted by the entrance of Douglas Gordon. The latter finds the safe open and ransacks it. Eventually he finds, not the paper he seeks, but a signed confession of Stephen Eldridge's crime. As he turns to go, William grapples with him, revolver in hand. Eleanor screams, and the household is aroused. Stephen Eldridge, entering, is shot by his son's weapon. Police enter, and William charges Douglas with burglary. But Eleanor intervenes and accuses William as the thief. At this juncture John Gordon enters, and Stephen Eldridge looks into the face of the man he has wronged. Dying, he backs up his written confession by a declaration of his guilt.

VITAGRAPH.

HUGHEY, THE PROCESS SERVER—(Feb. 21).—The cast: Hughey (Hughie Mack); Kate (Kate Price); Binks (William Shea); Flora (Flora Finch); Spike (Robert Gaillard). Author, Olive Flammer. Produced by Wally Van.

Hughey longs to be a sleuth, but is only a poor process server. However, he has a chance to try out his disguising abilities when he is told to serve a process on Binks, who is noted for his ability to elude service. Hughey has an awful time, right from the start, for Kate, Bink's wife, packs him off to Punxsutawney, to escape the serving, and he leads Hughey a merry chase. Binks hires Spike, an ex-pug, as his personal bodyguard, and he proves an efficient watch-dog when Hughey tries to serve papers on him and Flora, an old maid, becomes struck with his manly beauty and decides to marry him.

Kate then takes a hand in proceedings, and Hughey succeeds in cleverly securing Flora's unconscious aid in serving his process upon Binks. As the old maid hands Binks the fatal papers she learns for the first time that he is married, and Hughey, listening outside, falls into the room with a crash at the news. Spike throws them both out, but Flora, now thoroughly enraged, trips him up and she and Hughey sit on their fallen enemy's chest and pledge their troth of life-long fidelity and love.

FREDDY'S NARROW ESCAPE (Feb. 25). The cast: Freddy (William Dangman); Maria (Helen Gurney); Rose Green (Daisy Devere); Judge Green (Frank Currier); Minister (William Lytell, Jr). Author, Edward Montague. Produced by Frank Currier.

Judge Green, typical small-town aristocrat, has strong objections to Freddy for a son-in-law, and appoints Aunt Maria, his maiden sister, as guardian of Rose, his daughter. Freddy happens to do a favor for Aunty before she knows who he is and pretending to be taken with her, pays a visit to her home, but manages to quietly slip an explanatory note to Rose. He makes violent love to the old maid and she thinks he is going to marry her. When he whistles outside at dark, she thinks Freddy has come for her. She locks Rose in her room, and heavily veiled, goes out to meet Freddy. He does not recognize her and carries her off to the minister's.

At the minister's he is dumbfounded to confront the angry judge, and still more dazed when aunty lifts her veil. Rose, meanwhile, has escaped and followed the couple and she arrives there just as Freddy desperately leaps out the window into her arms. He is caught, however, and Rose, refusing to listen to his explanation, Freddy breaks away and runs for life, pursued by the determined Aunty, while the judge leads Rose home by the ear.

THE ROAD OF MANY TURNINGS (Broadway Star Feature—Three Parts—Feb. 26.) The cast: Myrtle and Edna (Leah Baird); Mrs. Wagner (Louise Beaudet); Mr. Wagner (Van Dyke Brooke); Harry Anderson (E. A. Turner); Walter Irving (Kalman Matus); Carl Whitman (Walter McGrail); Frank Norman (Gerald Gordon); Jonesy (Arthur Robinson). Author, Leah Baird. Produced by Van Dyke Brooke.

Myrtle and Edna are twin sisters. Myrtle is incorrigible, while Edna is sweet and lovable. Upon getting mixed up in a wild escapade at a cabaret, as a result of which Frank Norman is seriously injured in a fight, Myrtle leaves town at night with Carl Whitman. Her family, unable to endure the disgrace, also moves to a different city. A year later, Edna is courted by Harry Anderson and Walter Irving, both of whom are deeply in love with her. She loves and accepts Harry, and Walter swears revenge. Edna's father has insisted that she keep all knowledge of her twin sister from her husband, and when Walter meets Myrtle he gets an idea.

He sends Edna a note, purporting to come from her sister, asking her to come and see her alone. In this manner he succeeds in getting her in a compromising position. He then has Harry come to a certain restaurant where the latter sees Myrtle—whom Harry thinks is his wife because of the resemblance—in a tender attitude with Carl. In a frenzy he shoots her and escapes. Edna meanwhile escapes from the room where Walter has locked her in, and goes home. Harry is stunned at her appearance, for he believes he has shot her at the restaurant.

Rushing out of the house he gives himself up to the police, and in the morning explanations clear up everything, and Harry and Edna are reunited in peace and happiness. Myrtle recovers from her wound and, a changed woman, as a result of her experiences, begs forgiveness of Edna and Harry—which is granted—and marries Carl. The Road of Many Turnings has at last straightened out into the broad highway of virtue and happiness.

LUBIN.

THE REPENTANT (Feb. 21).—The cast: George Austin (L. C. Shumway); Frank Graves (Jay Morley); Hardin (George Borrell); Edythe Martin (Velma Whitman); Nellie (Elenor Belvins); Wiley, her father (Melvin Mayo). Written and directed by Leon D. Kent.

Among the students of a large university are George Austin and Frank Graves. Austin is wealthy, whereas Graves has to work nights in a cafe to pay his tuition. One night Graves reproves a number of boisterous students in the cafe for their actions, and they attack him outside. Austin comes to his assistance, and a bond of friendship is formed between the two men. Austin falls desperately in love with Edythe Martin, the university flirt, and becomes engaged to her. When he finds her flirting in the cafe, he works himself into a frenzy, and Edythe scornfully leaves him. Austin goes home with Graves, and in his rage, denounces the Almighty and the world in general. Graves, who is very pious, begs Austin not to speak so, and the result is a breach in the friendship. Austin soon develops into a pronounced atheist.

In the middle of the term Austin receives word that his father is dead, and he leaves college. Life in New York bores him after a while, and when the opportunity comes for him to visit a Western ranch, which is part of his father's estate, he welcomes it. The western life appeals to him, and he gradually forgets the past after he meets Nellie, a charming girl. He falls in love with her, and one day she accepts him, not knowing of his scorn for religion. Only when Austin tells Nellie she will have to give up her religion does she realize the type of man she is going to marry, and then she gives him his ring. Austin gives vent to his rage again, and leaves Nellie broken-hearted.

Back East, Graves follows his religious inclinations by entering the priesthood. The years pass. Nellie has become a nurse, and Austin has often regretted his action. He visits the East on business and meets with a serious accident. When he recovers consciousness, it is to find Nellie bending over him. He stretches out his arms to her and then remembers his unworthiness. Nellie impresses upon him the work of God in bringing them together again, and Austin finally sees the light. He asks for a priest, and Graves is summoned. There is a pathetic reunion of the old friends. Austin recovers, and asks Nellie if she can forget the past. She tells him she has prayed for this moment during all the years. And the repentant man folds her in his arms. A year later he no longer scoffs at the Bible, but plans with Nellie a great future for their infant son.

FOUR NARRATIVES (Two Parts—Feb. 22). The cast: Corridon (R. H. Gray); Phil Lessey (W. E. Parsons); Diamond (George Routh); Walter (George W. Chase); Mary (Velma Whitman); Morrill (Norman Napier). Written by Marc Edmund Jones. Produced by Paul M. Powell.

One afternoon Corridon, the detective, is at home. Phil Lessy, an Internal Revenue officer, is shown in, and, asking Corridon for his help, proceeds to relate an experience—the first narrative.

Hunting moonshiners in the mountains, Phil learns to love Mary, who is also loved by Diamond, an educated young moonshiner and bad man. On the day that Phil plans to raid them, Diamond receives a mysterious note and plans to leave for the city. Attempting to force Mary to go with him, he is compelled to shoot at her father who starts for him. Her father falls, and Mary joins the party leaving to raid the moonshiners. Diamond escapes and the only clue Phil finds is half of a note that apparently is from a fellow law-breaker seeking to obtain a hidden fortune. As both Phil and Mary's father are wounded, Mary conceives the notion of leaving herself to hunt for Diamond. She does not return and Phil obtains a leave of absence, comes to the city mentioned in the note, and learns of Corridon from his own sister.

Corridon is smiling as Phil concludes and goes to the safe and gets the other half of the note. Morrill, a wealthy clubman, is called in and he relates, at Corridon's request, the second narrative. He explains that his brother, Walter, was wild, got in bad company at college, and was expelled. He explains further that when their father died a large part of the fortune was hidden in cash and never found, and that so, when he began to discover systematic vandalism in his home, he knew that Walter was behind it, and so called Corridon in on the case.

Corridon takes up the story, making the third narrative. He tells that he found the other half of the note in the home of Morrill and that they went to an address given there, but found only a young married couple, and were baffled without further clue. But Phil now recognizes Diamond and Mary from the description, and the police are sent to bring them in.

Mary is persuaded to tell her story. She found no clues in the city until this very day, when she witnessed Phil taking a woman to his arms, and then, crushed at his apparent perfidy, she meets Diamond and is persuaded to go to his apartment with him while he pleads his love. While there word is sent up that the police are downstairs and Diamond tells Mary that the only way she can avoid arrest and scandal is to marry him. She consents, and so was just the bride of a moment when Morrill and Corridon saw them. Mary is then crushed when Phil explains that the woman was his sister, and was advising him to see Corridon.

But in the meantime, a trap has been set for Walter, and the police bring him in. Morrill is angered when he sees that Walter is disguised as a priest, and when Mary learns that it is a disguise she cries out, for it was Walter that has married her to Diamond, and so she is free after all.

THE REDEMPTION OF HELENE (Three Parts—Feb. 24). The cast: Charles Stuart (L. C. Shumway); John Allen (George Routh); Joshua Trent (W. J. Spencer); Helene (Helen Wolcott); Mary (May Cruze); Mrs. Storey (Ann Bronti); Mose Roson, theatrical manager (Melvin Mayo); A Millionaire (Benjamin Hopkins). Written by Julian Louis Lamothe. Produced by Edward Sloman.

In a small town lives Helene Trent with whom John Allen is in love. Thinking only of herself and her career, she hastens her father's death and uses her legacy to go on the stage. John bids her goodbye, hoping that she will return to him. He does not notice that Helene's younger sister, Mary, is deeply in love with him. Helene dances at a banquet and meets a young artist and theatrical manager. Stuart, the artist, falls in love with her and she accepts his money and attentions. Stuart is soon in debt, and works overtime, straining his eyes. A doctor is called and Charles' eyes are bandaged, the doctor warning him that blindness may result if the bandages are removed before six weeks.

During her visits Stuart has come to recognize the sound of Helene's heels in the hall. The manager becomes her friend and features her in a production, which is "tried out on the dog" in Helene's home city. After trying to induce Helene to return, Stuart receives a stinging letter from her, in which she tells of how she makes a fool of the men.

Opening night arrives. Helene has a talk with the manager in her dressing room. Stuart is admitted to the theater and overhears her declare her love for the manager. Stuart determines to see the man, and tearing off his bandages, he boldly enters the dressing room. Then ensues a story scene between Helene and Stuart. He shows her the letter which she sent him. She goads him into a frenzy, he proceeds to choke her, and then throws her to the floor, where she lies still. He stoops over her and, believing he has killed her, rushes from the theater. The manager returns and discovers Helene, just as John Allen, and Mary arrived at the stage door. They rush in and discover Helene as they think, dead. But Helene opens her eyes. John discovers the letter that Helene sent Stuart and reads it and realizes just what kind of a girl Helene is. He tells Helene that she is not fit to be Mary's sister. Stuart becomes blind. Helene wanders all night and finally comes to his studio. Helene enters and unburdens Stuart's mind as to her death. Then he tells her of his affliction. Helene is horrified, then all her womanhood and affection for him comes to the surface and she takes him into her arms.

BILLIE'S REVENGE (Feb. 26). The cast: Mrs. Boyd (Clara Lambert); Aunt Molly (Carrie Reynolds); Tom, Billie's chum (Clarence Jay Elmer); Billie (Billie Reeves). Written by Daniel Ellis. Produced by Earl Metcalfe.

Billie Boyd's mother goes away on a trip. Billie decides to give a series of poker parties during her absence, but he receives a postal saying that his Aunt Molly is coming on a visit. Billie telegraphs to his mother to come home and then goes to the club. He tells the boys of his disappointment, but decides to give a poker party that night. The boys plan that Tom, Billie's chum, shall dress up exactly as Billie has described his aunt.

The party is in full swing when the bell rings. Billie opens the door and tries to keep his aunt (Tom) out of the room, but she follows him in scolding. The boys depart and "aunty" follows Billie all over the house. He finally gets her in her room after she has pestered the life out of him with her attentions. Towards morning Billie gets up and tiptoes to "aunty's" room and is amazed to see Tom lying in bed. He writes a note to William the butler, saying, "When you get this be on the lookout, Aunt Molly has arrived and is a dangerous lunatic. Cold water is the best if she gets violent. Don't let her escape, I will come with a doctor and nurse." He then goes out.

The next morning Billie's real aunt, who is much younger than Billie, arrives. As she is about to step into a taxi Billie passes. He is very much attracted to her. Aunt Molly arrives at the house and the cook shows her up stairs. William discovers the note and he and the cook lock the house securely and then attach a hose to the faucet and they place buckets of water in convenient places. Billie determines to enter the house unseen and climbs into Molly's room. She screams for help. William and the cook hear the cry and as Bill comes flying downstairs he gets the full benefit of the hose. He then falls over a bucket of water. Billie explains the mistake about Aunt Molly to the cook and sends her upstairs to help her. The bell rings and the boys all come in and Billie has to explain matters. Molly hangs over the banister, listening, convulsed with laughter. Billie's mother then appears and she cannot see the funny side of the situation until Molly comes running down, throws her arms around her sister and intercedes for Billie. Billie is very much surprised to see Aunt Molly, the pretty girl who attracted his attention at the depot, and he falls on his knees in thankfulness and adoration.

HAM TAKES A CHANCE (Feb. 15).—The cast: Ham (Lloyd V. Hamilton); Bud (Bud Duncan); Mlle. Dainte (Ethel Teare); Prof. Nonpareil (Gus Leonard); Eph. (Jack MacDermott). Produced by William Beaudine.

Ham and Bud get jobs in Prof. Nonpareil's road show. Bud's job is to exercise Ethel's snakes, while Ham becomes the assistant of Prof. Nonpareil, a knife-throwing artist. When the professor is taken ill Ham takes his place, while he makes Bud the target. Ham is a wizard at throwing the glistening steel—fortunately for Bud.

A MOLAR MIX-UP (Feb. 16).— The cast: Dr. R. H. Pull (Jack MacDermott); His bride (Ethel Teare); Assistant (Bud Duncan); Mrs. Nogg (Myrta Sterling); Her husband (Gus Leonard). Author, C. Doty Hobart. Produced by William Beaudine.

As a dentist's assistant Bud is up to his old blundering ways. There haven't been enough mix-ups in this comedy due to jealous wives and husbands so Bud has to go and mix the electric wires so that every bit of metal in the house is charged with current—and soon every person in the house is dancing a painful jig while held in the power of the electricity. Bud, happy in the possession of rubber gloves, enjoys the big laugh.

THE GUIDING HAND (Feb. 18).—The cast: Stanton Garrett (Robert Ellis); Paul Garrett (Arthur Albertson); Gridley (Richard Purdon); Olive Leslie (Dallas Tyler). Author, Howard Irving Young. Producer, Robert Ellis.

Gridley has served the Garrett's, father and sons, for forty years so that his heart grieves to see Stanton becoming a money-grubbing nervous wreck and Paul a weak-kneed, though good-natured, spendthrift. Paul is about to marry Olive, a woman of the world, and Stanton, though he knows her past, maintains silence because of a clause in the will that deprives either son of his share in the Garrett estate should he marry before thirty.

Gridley appeals to his better nature, and after a grim struggle with himself he listens to the servant whom in recent years he had come to think a doddering old nuisance. Paul declares that the money is nothing to him and that Olive will stand by him, but that worldly person soon changes her mind. Awakened to his folly Paul sees that Stanton also has lost his sneering blase manner, and the years roll back as the two brothers once more reunited romp about the faithful Gridley.

THE PERILOUS SWING (No. 67 of the "Hazards of Helen"—Feb. 19).—The cast: The Operator at Lone Point (Helen Gibson); The Sheriff (Clarence Burton); "Red" Purdy (Franklin Hall). Author, C. Doty Hobart. Producer, James Davis.

Helen is enjoying a ride on her horse, "Hazard," after her day's work, when news comes that "Red" Purdy and his aides are escaping after making a big haul. When the automobile in which they are escaping breaks down they take to a handcar. Helen pursues them down the track while the Sheriff and his posse set out to head them off on a short cut. The gang reaches the drawbridge and after crossing bind the bridgetender and raise the bridge to prevent Helen from following.

Momentarily baffled, she suddenly bethinks herself of her lariat. Tossing a noose around the end of the bridge girder, she spurs the horse from under her and then swings out through space to the opposite bank of the river. The crooks have taken to their handcar again, but Helen reaches the bank in time to board the express and continue the pursuit. Needless to say, "Red" Purdy and his aides are finally brought to justice.

"GOLD DUST" (Two parts—Feb. 15). The cast: John Strang (John Cossar); Flo Dickson (Nell Craig); Jimmy, her sweetheart (Edmund F. Cobb); Edward Dickson, head bookkeeper (Thomas Commerford); O'Rear, the junior partner (Patrick Calhoun).

John Strang, head of the firm of Strang & Co., is ordered away for a rest by his physician. He sailed for South America, leaving O'Rear his junior partner, in charge of the business. O'Rear immediately discharges all the old employes and replaces them with young blood. Among those discharged is Edward Dickson, who has been head bookkeeper for 30 years. He becomes ill and is slowly pining away; as a result of his dismissal. Flo Dickson, the office favorite, and Jimmy, the stenographer, who is in love with her, risk their positions with the firm by writing a letter to the old man telling him to return to work, signing the president's name. Almost certain that he will not recover they wish to make his last hours happy ones. He begins to recover. About this time O'Rear closes a contract with a construction company, the heads of which are crooks. John Strang returns from South America just in time to save his firm from bankruptcy. He tells O'Rear the old employes knew the record of this construction company and had they been at work, would have blocked the deal. Strang then notifies all the old employes to return to work, including Thomas Dickson, Flo and Jimmy are saved.

"POLITENESS PAYS" (Three parts—Feb. 19). The cast: Nat Holsom (John Junior); Amos Broadstreet, a millionaire (John Cossar); Amy Broadstreet, his daughter (Betty Brown); Mrs. Holsom, Nat's mother (Marion Skinner).

Nat Holsom is sick for the first time in his life. Being his mother's only means of support, their funds are soon exhausted and they face starvation. About this time Amy Broadstreet, daughter of a millionaire, decides to take up charity work. By chance she happens in the tenement where Nat and his mother live. Seeing their pitiful condition, she orders food and coal for them. Nat improves and is soon well enough to be out. While taking a walk, he sees a gang of boys abusing an old man. In his weakened condition he strikes the leader down. The old man is very grateful. Amy Broadstreet becomes very enthused in her charity work and asks her father to finance a model tenement which she plans to build. Broadstreet sends his agent to buy the most suitable site possible. The agent tries to buy the tenement owned by the old man whom Nat defended. When he refuses to sell, the agent sends a gangster to put him out of the way. This is accomplished, but before dying the old man apparently a pauper, writes a will leaving his fortune of $1,000,000 to Nat, the only person in the world who had ever befriended him.

KNICKERBOCKER STAR FEATURE

THE BIG BROTHER (Three Parts—Feb. 11).—John Harrison, U. S. Consul, on a small imaginary island, probably around the Hawaiian Islands, returns home on leave of absence. His mind is filled with thoughts of one Violet Hempstead. A friend of his, Henley, has just married a native woman and he is disgusted. At home in Virginia, he proposes to the girl only to find she is engaged to his younger brother Billie. Discouraged, he decides to return and Billie begs to go along. He has his way eventually.

Billie meets Ollie, a native girl, she saves his life, and he falls in love with her. John, thinking of Violet, does all in his power to break this up. Finally, learning Billie is going to marry the girl, John marries Ollie, to save his brother for Violet. Meanwhile comes word John's mother has died, and Billie returns home without bidding John goodbye. When Billie returns, Violet returns his ring as she finds it was John she loved. Billie, rather relieved, goes away on a visit. Meanwhile, John, hopeless in the depths of despair, has resigned as Consul and is sharing a home with Ollie, although not living with her. Ollie tries all her wiles on John but to no effect.

Violet, not knowing of John's marriage, decides to go to him. She does and lands there at night. On the same night John has given up last hold on respect and broken down barriers; savagely he holds Ollie in his arms when he hears Violet outside talking to Henley. He rushes out, as in a dream sees the girl, and not telling her of Ollie takes her to another cottage and says he will talk with her in the morning. Ollie meanwhile follows with a gun, but Henley suspicions and follows her. In a struggle Henley is shot and later Ollie. John tells Violet that Ollie was his wife and girl shrinks from him in loathing, but Henley, who is dying, tells her true state of affairs and later she and John are united.

GIRL OF THE WEST (Three parts—Feb. 18).—Nora, or the tomboy, as she is called, lives alone with her dissolute and drunken father in an old tumbled down shanty. Father is killed in a fight by Jim Lopez and afterward when Lopez attempts to make love to the Tomboy she threatens to kill him. She meets Tom Avery, a well groomed, wealthy college man, who is the silent owner of Bar Z Ranch, and Tom becomes interested in her. She applies for a job cowpunchin, after her father's death and after argument gets it, and proves herself as good if not better than the men.

Meanwhile Mrs. Byrne Grahame, a wealthy society woman living with her daughter, Lillian, and son, Harry, traces her brother (Nora's father) and Nora to Red Gulch and sends the attorney for them. Nora wanders out one night and encounters Lopez, he makes violent love to her, and the girl, furious, takes out her gun and shoots him, thinking she has killed him. Tom coming on the scene takes her home and goes back to look for Lopez. Morson, the attorney, arrives meanwhile and Nora goes away with him, leaving only a note for Tom. She fully believes she has murdered Lopez.

Two years elapse and Nora returns to her aunt's house, a polished young woman. Harry falls in love with her but on the evening Nora is presented at the ball, she meets Tom, who is Lillian's fiance. They fall in love again but it is Nora who says they must break it off because of Lillian. A few weeks elapse and one day at the country club, Nora in her polo togs, sees Tom again. A wild horse, a mankiller, is brought out and Nora decides to ride it. Tom, in anguish, forbids her to ride it, confessing publicly his love for her. Lillian overhears it and is furious. Nora, however, catching Lillian's look, brings the whip down on the horse and it seemingly runs away.

Tom, of course, as Nora expected, pursues her. At a safe distance she slides off the horse and when Tom comes up, he finds her lying face down and thinks she is dead. As he flings himself down beside her, she starts laughing and explains her ruse. He gathers her in his arms and they hide behind a tree trunk, like two mischievous children while Lillian and Harry go past them. Of course, happy ending clinch, etc.

WHO KNOWS (Three parts—Feb. 25).—Gilbert, an elderly man and gambling partner of Dick, is startled by a shot in the next room. He rushes in to find Dick standing over the body of a man whom he has just shot and killed while intoxicated. Gilbert, conversant with police and their ways, realizes flight would be futile until Dick has sobered. The shot has alarmed hotel guests, who are at the door trying to ascertain the cause of the disturbance. Gilbert conceals the body in the bathroom and closes the door. Assuming a provoked mood, he admits hotel manager and house detectives and offers an excuse that Dick is drunk.

After Dick has sobered, Gilbert informs him of his crime. He is horrified. They effect a daring escape and later meet in a distant city. Gilbert's only motive, although an accessory after the fact, is to protect Dick from apprehension. The eye of the law, however, never sleeps. A detective becomes suspicious of Gilbert, and Gilbert sensing the condition, again makes his escape, likewise taking Dick with him. They seek safety in boarding at the home of Myra, formerly employed at the hotel from which Gilbert made his second escape.

Time develops friendship and gratitude, Dick having protected Myra in time of danger, which develops into deeper sentiment. Dick, realizing the stain on his hand, does not permit his love for the girl to belittle his crime. It is here his life undergoes a change. The girl's purity and influence seem to open to him a new world. But his yearning for an existence commensurate with the girl's idealism is blackened by his crime of the past. All this Gilbert sees and understands. It proves an inception for Gilbert to make a noble sacrifice. He realizes his, Gilbert's, life is nearing sundown, while Dick, whose life has been with a rough element, has just passed the development of maturity. Then follows a stirring chase on the trail of the gamblers by the detectives, ending in the capture of Gilbert, who shoulders the crime, and convicing Dick for the girl's sake in his innocence. Dick later visits Gilbert in jail, forgives Gilbert for the "lie." Gilbert reflects that perhaps the Lord will understand and forgive—"Who knows?"

ONE TOO MANY (Feb. 17).—Plump, a carefree bachelor, after a stormy night, awakes to find a letter from his rich uncle, stating that he is going to pay him a visit in order to meet his wife and baby. Plump who has been getting an income for this mythical wife and baby, is frantic. He employs Runt, the Janitor, and also seeks the services of Doris, an actress, to get him the much needed frau and kidlet.

Runt scurries around and corrals a bunch of babies. A male friend of the actress searches the apartment house for a child, a series of complications arise in which one baby answers the purpose of all the parties who are trying to help Plump. Plump, in order to play safe, persuades Madame Nitouch, a French woman, to pose as his wife for the afternoon. Runt also commands his wife to help out Plump. Mrs. Newlywed, who needs $50.00 to pay for a new dress also agrees to be his wife. The time is near at hand for the uncle to arrive.

The baby has disappeared from Plump's room and Runt is forced to be the baby. The uncle, who is near-sighted, arrives. The deception is proving a success when the uncle asks to see the wife. To Plump's horror the three women make their appearance at the same time. The uncle gets wise and Plump is on the verge of losing his income when Doris, the actress, who is an old flame of the uncle, arrives. The uncle acknowledges defeat, gives Plump a fat check and hikes back home, while Plump and Runt divide the spoils.

PLUCK AND LUCK (Feb. 18).—When Pokes, a plumber, is dispossessed from his humble place of business owing to his inability to pay his rent, he accepts the invitation from a neighbor, the piano tuner, to share his store. Jabb's wife is socially ambitious, and to advance herself into the ranks of the elite of her native city has decided to give a musicale at her home. In order to have the piano in excellent condition for the great event she sends Ethel, her daughter, to notify the tuner to come and insnect the piano.

During this time, Jabbs by his overbearing manner has incurred the hostility of two anarchists, tenants in one of his houses. To avenge themselves on their landlord they manage to hide a time clock bomb in the piano at Jabbs' home. When Ethel arrives at the piano tuner's she finds only Pokes present and he is so smitten with her charms that he cannot resist the desire to impersonate the tuner as he realizes that he will have an opportunity to make Ethel's acquaintance.

On Ethel's arrival home she surprises the anarchists at their nefarious work and is seized by them and carried upstairs where they have her bound and helpless. Pokes' attempt to tune the piano is a dismal failure for he succeeds in demolishing all parts of it until he finds the bomb hidden in the inside. He calls the attention of Jabbs to the bomb, driving both Jabbs and his wife in a frenzy of fear as the clock lacks only a few seconds of the time set for the explosion. After they reach the street in safety, their attention is called to Ethel on the upper floor and Pokes proves his nerve by dashing into the house and saving the girl at the peril of his life.

BUNGLES ENFORCES THE LAW (Feb. 24).—Owing to the disturbed financial affairs in their respective countries, three impoverished noblemen, Counts Boolum of Germany, Pierre of France and Shamus of Ireland, decide to marry the daughter of the wealthy Mayor of Mudton. The local police, distinguished for their absolute lack of even the smallest grain of intelligence, have failed in their efforts to drive the foreigners from the town and their worthy chief wires for the world-famed Bungles to bring his mighty brain to bear on the problem. The latter arrives in a cloud of mystery, electricity and uncertainty and forthwith lives up to his name by arresting the Mayor and placing him in the calaboose. The three rivals unfortunately choose the same hour for their proposal and challenged to mortal combat fly through the air.

At last Bungles gets on the trail. He gathers his forces and arrives on the field of battle in time to become a billet for the first shot fired. Undaunted, however, he surrounds the combatants and marches both them and the girl off to jail, where all are jammed in to keep the now frothing Mayor company. Leaving his valiant force on guard, he, almost bursting with pride, hurries off to tell the chief of his success. Fortunately for the prisoners, the jail is very old and rickety and they walk off with it. Scared to death, the guards dash off to tell of the escape.

Mad with rage, Bungles pursues, catches up with his quarry as it walks on to the ferryboat which is just pulling out. Resourceful as ever, Bungles orders his men to pull back the boat. They try but the ferry wins and they are on the point of being dragged into the water when Bungles grasps the rope and with a superhuman effort pulls the boat back to the slip. Pride once again proves his fate, for as he poses to receive the admiration of his followers, the boat again departs. This time, Bungles' effort is too late and the whole force is dragged into the water. Spitting out teeth, water and revenge, Bungles manages to hang on to the side of the boat and on its arrival at the opposite side, climbs over and strides to the calaboose. Horrors, he opens the door, only to find that the prisoners have escaped. Hardly believing his eyes, he enters the jail. A flash of golden hair dashes from behind and Bungles finds himself locked in and looking at him from the outside, is the mischievous face of his erstwhile captive.

LOVE AND LATHER (Feb. 25).—Spook, the barber, is in despair because he is unable to accompany his friend on a fishing trip owing to the fact that he has nobody to take care of the shop during his absence. In looking about for a substitute, he chances to see Pokes, the street cleaner, and mistaking Pokes' white wing suit for barber's clothes, he tries to press him into service for the day. Pokes is willing to accept the offer once he catches sight of Spook's daughter, Ethel, the manicurist of the shop, under whose charms he immediately succumbs.

The unfortunate customers who happen to fall into the none too gentle hands of Pokes suffer all kinds of tortures, even Ethel herself receiving rather rough usage from him. Pokes is notified by the police to be on the look-out for a desperate convict who has recently escaped from jail, and whose chief mark of identification is the absence of one-half of his mustache.

The police realize that the convict will head for a barber shop as soon as possible in order to remove the tell-tale half of his mustache, so hence after the warning to Pokes, they set in to watch the shop. The police warning gives Pokes the idea of securing revenge on Jabbs, Ethel's sweetheart, whose face is adorned by a beautiful hirsute growth of which both he and Ethel are inordinately fond. Finding Jabbs asleep in the barber chair, Pokes seizes the opportunity to shave off one half of his rival's mustache.

This incident succeeds in getting Jabbs very much in wrong with the police who happen to see him walking from the shop and give chase. In the station house Jabbs finds Spook and his pal who have also been arrested on the charge of fishing on private grounds, and for a time things look black for the unfortunate trio, until the real convict who has been arrested in the meantime, is brought in. On being cleared of the charges, Jabbs accompanies Spook home where they wreak the full vengeance upon Pokes for the trouble that he has brought upon them.

TURTLE DOVES (Feb. 23).—Jack proposes to Maisie, who accepts him. Maisie's father overhears and intervenes. He tells Jack to get a job, adding that if Maisie really wants him, she will wait. Jack goes abroad, gold-digging, makes a fortune and returns in five years. He calls on Maisie to see if she has waited for him. Maisie asks how he has filled in the years, and Jack tells her his story, illustrated by the camera.

"At first I thought the life a hard one, but, after a long spell, struck luck. Then I got a bad fever, through over-work and exposure. A neighbor's daughter saved my life by careful nursing, and when my strength returned, I went back to work, made a pile, sold my claim, came home, and here I am."

Jack now asks Maisie to tell him her own experiences, and Maisie replies, also illustrated by the camera: "Well, when you had gone, I was very miserable, my health suffered tremendously, but the doctor was most kind and attentive, and even when I was convalescent, he continued calling."

Maisie adds, as an afterthought: "Oh, yes—and afterwards I married him." She continues: "But, Jack, dear, I'm sure you won't mind that."

Jack, immensely relieved, laughs and replies: "Not in the least, dear, for I am married also!" Here Jack's wife—the girl who had nursed him, of course—enters and is introduced to Maisie; and Maisie's husband, entering at the same time, is introduced to Jack. All laugh heartily as the scene fades out.

I'LL GET HER YET (Two parts—Feb. 25).—The cast: Harry Lightfoot (Pat Rooney); Terence Tightwad (Dan Duffy); Marion, his daughter (Marion Bent); Sallie Slappus, the maid (Jane Bernoudy); Slim, bell hop (Victor Potel); Fat, bell hop (Ed. Sedgwick); Miss Magneto (Eileen Sedgwick). Written and produced by Roy Clements.

Terence Tightwad does not approve of the attentions paid his daughter, Marion, by Harry Lightfoot. Neither does "Murphy," the family dog. "Murphy" and old Tightwad show their displeasure at Harry's insistence on visiting the Tightwad home by combining in a "free-for-all" fight with him, from which Harry emerges "third best."

When old Tightwad spirits Marion away to a nearby resort hotel, Harry picks up the love trail, and, following, finds employment as a bell-hop at the same hotel.

Overcoming all the hazards of the militant father's objections, Harry finally escapes in a spectacular manner with Marion, leaving father and the dog to fight it out among themselves.

DAD'S DOLLARS AND DIRTY DOINGS (Two parts—Feb. 27).—The cast: The Country Girl (Alice Howell); Her Sweetheart (Dick Smith); The Vulture (Phillip Dunham).

Lonesome Lizzie read so much about the joys of city life that she was tempted to steal a little of father's money and journey to the great city. As usual though with a country girl, she had hardly arrived in the city before she fell into the enemies' hands, who soon relieved her of her little hoard and left her on a park bench to sleep off the effects of the deadly drug.

Lizzie awoke with a start to find a rough policeman pounding her on her feet. She departed a sad girl and soon found the enemy who only laughed at her and turned her over to an officer, charging her with vagrancy. Along about this time father died from the effects of his daughter's sudden departure and the papers were full of the death and fortune left to Lizzie' One of the vultures recognized the picture of Lizzie and soon rescued her from prison in order to claim a part of the fortune. How the country lover came to the rescue and the fight he had to get her away from the vultures makes a thrilling story.

The DUPE (Three parts—Feb. 22).—The cast: Herbert (Herbert Rawlinson); Jennie (Agnes Vernon); Reno Kate (Miss Wright); Foo Wing (Barney Furey); Sing (Jack Pierce). Written by Jas Dayton. Produced by William Worthington.

Herbert and his mother, poor but honest people, live in a cheap tenement section of the town. Herbert works in a factory and they are comparatively comfortable and happy. Times get hard, however, and the factory closes down. Herbert tries elsewhere for employment but fails to get work. The landlord has threatened to dispossess them. Desperate, Herbert goes that night to a tough saloon. A well dressed stranger, supposedly wealthy, but who in reality is an opium smuggler, asks him to deliver a suit case at a certain street and for the service hands him five dollars. Herbert, delighted at the chance to earn some money, accepts the suit suit case and leaves.

Meanwhile the address given him by the stranger has been raided for an opium den, the police are waiting and seize Herbert as an accomplice. Having opium in his possession, he

EIGHTY-FIRST STREET THEATRE. A SUCCESSFUL TRIANGLE HOUSE

New York motion picture theatre managers have come to realize that in order to do the biggest possible business it is to their own advantage to secure the very latest and best in photoplays.

That is why A. L. Shakman, of the Eighty-first Street Theatre, and the managers of the other seven houses on Broadway, are running Triangle Plays.

Experience has proved that the motion picture public love, appreciate and are willing to pay for Triangle Plays.

Managers know that their box-office receipts will be increased by the mere mention of the fact that such actresses as Dorothy Gish may be seen at their house.

And they know that the statement that a Keystone comedy is to appear will always bring the crowds, but when they have the added advantage of stating that such stars as William Collier and Mae Busch may be seen the success is assured.

But the signing of a Triangle contract means more than the securing of the best pictures. It means that you have the assistance and help of a competent publicity department in meeting local conditions.

Specially prepared advertisements covering each release, slides, heralds, lobby displays and many other attractive forms of publicity matter may be secured, which will present the message of Triangle Plays to your prospective patrons.

TRIANGLE PLAYS are an assured success, and if you have not already secured information in regard to their presentation in your city, why not communicate with is convicted at a speedy trial and sentenced to the penitentiary. The shock of his arrest and conviction kills the mother. Herbert swears revenge on the law.

A year later, Herbert, released from prison, comes to the city and takes up his life in the slums of Chinatown. Jennie, a little girl of the city, clerks in one of the Chinese curio stores. Herbert meets her and admires her. Foo Wing, a wealthy Chinaman of the neighborhood, also admires her and arranges with Reno Kate, a procuress of the neighborhood, to get the girl. Foo Wing arranges with the owner of the curio store to fire Jennie; he does so and Reno Kate follows her to the employment office and offers her a position in her own house.

Herbert misses the girl but cannot learn of her whereabouts. That night Herbert in escaping from a police raid overhears Jennie scream, as she fights Reno Kate to get free from her house. Herbert bursts into the room and rescues Jennie from Foo Wing and a couple of other Chinamen. In the melee, however, a Chinamen knifes him and he is taken to the hospital. He recovers slowly under Jennie's care. Through her good influence he is taken to the country home to recover.

A few months later the gang send him on a big deal. He finds that by being a party to the gang's deal he will get back at the opium smuggler who convicted him in the first case. Revenge appeals to him, but his reformation is complete, and he declines to join the gang in the plot.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

GRAFT (Episode No. 10—"The Harbor Transportation Trust"—Two Parts—Feb. 14).—The cast: Bruce Larnigan (Hobart Henley); Tom Larnigan (Harry Carey); Stanford Stone (Glen White); Roger Maxwell (Marc Fenton); Dorothy Maxwell (Jane Novak); Kitty Rockford (Mina Cunard); Benn Travers (Jack F. Connoly); Dunn (E. P. Evers); Grant Fisher (E. Clark); Capt. Monk (Frank MacQuarrie); Stevens (Jack Abbot).

Bruce Larnigan, in connection with Jack Stevens, is editing the "Independent," the newspaper which Ben Travers had bought to assist the fight against the trusts. Tom Larnigan has located the head of the Harbor Transportation Trust. In order that he might get evidence against the trust he waits outside their office and follows Monk, an old sea captain, into the place as if he were with him. After learning that Monk has been successful in smuggling in a quantity of opium hidden in his cargo of wild animals and, hearing that the drug is stored in the shop of Gruen, a wild animal dealer, he leaves. Grant Fisher (head of the Harbor Trust) when Tom has left reproves Monk for taking into the private office what he (Fisher) supposed to be an associate of Monk. The old captain says he never saw the man before and was under the impression he was a member of the trust. Fisher then remembers the photographs of Tom and Bruce Larnigan which Stone had distributed to the members of the Graft Trust so that they may identify the trust breakers. Monk leaves and vows to get even with Tom. Fisher informs Stone, who, feeling sure that Tom will visit Gruen's place on a spying expedition, has Dunn, his lieutenant, go there with two assistants to capture Tom.

Dorothy Maxwell and her chum, Kitty Rockford, are shopping when Dunn and his two men come from the office building on their way to the animal dealer. The girls see and recognize him as the man in whose office they both had such exciting experiences. They decide to follow him. Dunn recognizes the girls as two spies of Larnigan. He decides to let himself be followed, hoping to trap the girls. A telegram arrives from the department of Secret Service at Washington, ordering Tom to report at once to the Consul at Rio de Janiero, who will instruct him regarding a secret mission. Tom decides to start at once and turn over the securing of evidence against the Harbor Trust to Bruce. Kitty and Dorothy follow Dunn. They are trapped in Gruen's place and put into a small cellar. Dunn and Gruen then prepare to land Bruce.

Tom and his friend, Ben Travers, have strolled down the docks while they discuss Tom's trip south. While they are gazing out to sea Captain Monk and several of his sailors pass. He recognizes Tom, and he and the sailors knock Tom and Travers senseless, carry them aboard his ship and make them prisoners in the hold. Stone feels much elated at the news that Tom Larnigan is shanghied and sailing for a distant country, and that Larnigan's two spies are prisoners at Gruen's. Curious to see what the female spies look like, he goes to Gruen's and is astonished to find that it is Dorothy Maxwell and Kitty Rockford who have been his secret enemies. He plans a revenge that is in accord with his evil nature. Near the animal store is a low dive where the poor female inmates are kept as slaves. Stone arranges with the keeper of this place to turn over the prisoners to him. He gives the Italian keeper the key to the cellar and tells the man to chloroform the girls before trying to remove them.

Dorothy and Kitty have not been idle. They have discovered an old pick and crowbar. These tools have no effect on the heavy doors, so they start to remove the padlock of a small door leading to the next cellar, their idea being to get to the cellar of the next house and so escape. But in the next cellar are untamed lions. Bruce and Stevens start for the animal store to get evidence against the Harbor Trust. Once inside, they are threatened by Dunn's men and Gruen. In backing away Stevens steps on the trap and falls into the cellar containing the lions. Bruce is knocked senseless by Gruen. Backing against the wall in horror as he sees the great beasts settle for a spring, Stevens feels the wall behind him give away, and he crawls through the open door just in time. The door is closed and the girls are overjoyed to find Stevens with them.

He hears the tramp of feet on the stairs outside, and thinking it is from the men above he proceeds to barricade the door. It is the men sent by Stone after the girls. Finding the door barred they proceed to force it. Reinforced by Gruen and Dunn's men, who have dropped Bruce on having heard the noise outside, the men break into the cellar. In spite of the efforts of Stevens and the girls to keep it closed, the door is forced. Stevens battles against great odds, but just before he is overpowered a number of police rush to his rescue. Fisher goes to the store to remove the opium, sees the body of Bruce and backs away in horror. He steps on the trap and falls to his death among the lions. The fight in the other cellar drowns his cries and his presence in the cellar is not known until his body is found.

Meantime Tom and Travers are dragged on deck by Captain Monk and given to understand there is no turning back on that ship. Tom asks him where the boat is bound for and receives the answer, "Rio de Janeiro." Tom shows his satisfaction, displays his official badge and declares they will go as passengers. He orders the best the ship affords and he and Travers settle down for a pleasant trip. Bruce, badly injured, attempts to carry on the fight alone.

HIGH FLIERS (Two parts—Feb. 9).—The cast.—Miss High Life (Rosemary Theby); Mr. Dude (Harry Myers). Produced by Harry Meyers.

Miss High Life works behind a counter for the stupendous sum of $6 a week. Mr. Honest, who is rather near-sighted, is smitten with the charms of Miss High Life, but though he makes good wages, she rejects his overtures, for he is miles from being what is popularly termed a "sport."

The unwearying hum of life at cabarets is a great annoyance to Miss High Life's sister, Miss Plain. Unlike her sister, Miss Plain never spends a cent on complexion, talks sense and laughs only when there is something to laugh at. She is secretly in love with Mr. Honest, who is pining in vain for Miss High Life. A change is brought about when Mr. Dude, proposes to Miss High Life and is accepted. Mr. Honest gradually becomes wise to the fact that his affections have been misplaced and promptly bestows them on Miss Plain.

Financed by Mr. Dude, who makes $20 a week, but looks like $100, Miss High Life plunges into real life. That is, she spends her evenings in smoky cafes watching the antics of the cabaret and ordering her special cocktail very strong. Many are the silver cups that she carries away from dancing contests. Joy-riding is as elemental to her as food, while the only joy-ride her sister occasionally indulges is in a rocker on Mr. Honest's lap. What does it matter to Miss High Life that she frequently returns home in the small hours dead weary and with a splitting headache; that the next day she must stand behind her counter more dead than alive. And what does it matter to Mr. Dude that he has to subsist the rest of the week on pork and beans and one lone dollar and press his own clothes.

And then comes their wedding, financed by Miss High Life's parents. It is a big affair and is followed by a $40 apartment and $1,000 worth of furniture. Mr. Honest marries Miss Plain at his own expense and they content themselves with an $18 flat.

Mr. Dude has occasion to discover that a rag-time player, cocktail imbiber and A1 dancer may make a very poor cook. In addition to that the next month finds him absolutely stranded, unable to pay the rent or even distantly approach the wife's extravagant habits. While their belongings are being moved to poorer quarters they have the additional mortification of beholding Mr. and Mrs. Honest make themselves comfortable in an automobile. It is but a "flivver," and they walk the car at five miles an hour, but they do enjoy it.

THE PIPE DREAM (Feb. 22).—The cast: Mrs. Hopeful (Rosemary Theby); Hubby (Harry Myers); Mr. Piffle (Joseph Daily). Written by Samuel Greinger. Produced by Harry C. Meyers.

Mrs. Hopeful devotes her time to the Cause, completely overlooking hubby. Things come to a crisis when he tells her that he can't feed on woman's rights. She replies that if he doesn't like it he is at liberty to march, for she can always shift for herself. He takes her at her word, packs his grip and leaves.

To celebrate her liberation she goes to the movies. They suggest to her an idea. She will write scenarios; it is the easiest way of making a living. She writes a photoplay entitled "Mean Husbands" in ten parts. Before inserting the manuscript into an envelope her womanly instinct prompts her to give it a dash of finely scented perfume.

The scenario safely on its way, she gives herself up to visions. She imagines Mr. Piffle, the scenario editor, offering her a $50 a check for her script besides begging to do him the favor to accept a $10,000 staff position. She imagines a good many other things and in the end considers her success an established fact.

She communicates the news of her imaginary checks to Mrs. Exaggerate, who communicates them in an improved form to Mrs. Gossip, who tells them to hubby. By this time the $50 check has grown to three times that amount. His wife's phenomenal success nearly breaks hubby's heart. Now she is lost to him for good.

A month passes without Mrs. Hopeful hearing a word of Mr. Piffle. But this is a sure sign that he likes her scenario. Unfortunately the landlord calls for his rent and he leaves in a terrible huff when she refers him to the day when the check is bound to materialize.

This is the naked truth: Mr. Piffle is so delighted with the perfume of Mrs. Hopeful's script that he decides to keep it until the last whiff is gone out of it. The entire office staff uses "Mean Husbands" in ten parts as a means of perfuming their handkerchiefs. Finally the day arrives when they have to part with it. One last and lingering farewell whiff and the script, including a note from Mr. Piffle, speeds back to its owner.

Hubby, in the meantime, summons sufficient courage to go and beg his wife's forgiveness. She does not even deign to bestow the favor of a word. She merely points to the door. He turns to go.

At this critical moment the letter carrier's whistle blows. Hubby fetches the letter, hands it to her and turns to go. She feels nervous, for checks are as a rule not conveyed in large envelopes. She motions her husband to stay awhile. Yes, it is her scenario. Mrs. Hopeful's emotions as she read Piffle's note cannot be reproduced in words. It contained the few significant words: "The perfume is excellent." Hubby stays at home.

MADAME CUBIST (Two parts—Feb. 23).—The cast: Madame Cubist (Mary Fuller); Tom Decker (Curtis Benton); Carl Dana (Herbert Grey). Written by Elaine Sterne. Produced by Lucius Henderson.

Tom Decker, a young society man, loses his money gambling. His friend, Carl Dana, suggests he try the easiest way of making money, which is to marry it. Carl has been in love with a woman of great wealth and beauty, known in society as Madame Cubist. She has laughed in his face, and Carl, eager to be revenged, hides his true motive and urges his friend, Tom, to try to win the beauty. Tom turns from such a proposition with disgust, but his comrades at the club, headed by Carl, bet him five hundred dollars he cannot land Madame Cubist, and Carl offers to stake him to the courtship. Tom, never having seen the famous lady, save in photographs, hesitates but after awhile consents.

Tom meets Madame Cubist unconventionally and soon finds that he is falling desperately in love with her. She, too, is enamored. But over Tom's head hangs the thought of the wager, and he determines to tell her all—and thus place himself at her mercy. But although he tries repeatedly to tell her, she never gives him an opportunity.

Madame Cubist plans a brilliant ball to announce their engagement. All their friends are invited. Tom plans to go after one perfect evening with the woman he loves. He decides to go away until he has worked honestly and made himself worthy of her. He writes her a letter telling her all this, and gives it to one of her servants to deliver after he has gone that night.

The dance is a gay affair and Madame Cubist is the life of her party. But Carl has not forgotten his rejection. His time for revenge has come. He claims a dance and takes her away to an alcove where he brutally tells her the truth—that the man she loves is marrying her for her money. She will not believe it until he lays the signed note in her hands.

After the guests have all gone, she faces Tom and tells him what she has learned, and begs him to tell her it is not true, but he cannot. Dejectedly he tells her it is true. Then he listens to her volume of wrath and leaves her. He returns home while she sobs her heart out, but even as she is crying the servant gives her his letter which was to be delivered after all had gone. She reads it. It is a full confession telling her how he has learned to love her, but is going away until he feels he deserves to strive for her love.

In a flash she has forgiven all as she sees the bigness of the man. She flies to the telephone. "Tom," she sobs, "if you are going away tonight, I want to go too. Will you ask me to elope or must I ask you?" Needless to say he asks her and all ends well.

AFTER THE PLAY (Feb. 25).—The cast: Warren Prescott (Herbert Rawlinson); Princess Olga (Edna Maison); The Husband (Herbert Barrington); East Indian (George Gerunger). Written by Ben Cohn. Produced by William Worthington.

As Warren Prescott was sitting by his fireside he heard a gentle tapping against the window pane that attracted his attention. He saw a form bending low. The person manifested that he wished to enter, and Warren opened it, only to find himself looking into the barrel of a revolver. After binding and blindfolding his victim, the intruder escorted him to an automobile. After a long ride Warren was taken into a house where he was released of his bonds. When he opened his eyes after the bandage was removed, he saw no one, but as he looked around he saw lying upon a tiger skin, the most beautiful woman he had ever seen.

The woman looked at him for a moment with a sort of languid look, and then a slight smile played about her lips, and she began to speak. "You no doubt wonder what this is all about?" Warren could do nothing but nod in assent, so bewildered was he. "Im the Princess Olga, my father is a reigning prince in India and has betrothed me to a neighboring prince whom I dislike, and, to avoid him, I came to New York, but he has followed me, and is now on his way to this house. I saw you on the street today, and felt sure that you would help me. Will you?"

"The reason that I do not seek help from someone else is that the Prince must be done away with without anyone knowing of it," said the Princess.

"What is the matter with your man Friday who brought me here?" Warren answered. "He seemed to understand the work thoroughly."

"No, he is of my tribe, and that could not be, besides even he must not know why I had you brought here."

When Warren indignantly declared he would take no part in the contemplated murder, her eyes flashed fire. "Very well then, you shall never leave this house alive, for when the Prince arrives, I will tell him that you have forced yourself upon me, and he will kill you, and if you attempt to leave, I have given orders that you be shot at dawn.

As Warren was trying to think out a solution, some way out of the dilemma, the noise of an auto was heard. The Princess arose and hurried to the window. She turned towards Warren, and as she looked at him, she seemed to melt before him, and tears filled her eyes. She fell on her knees and pleaded. She became hysterical, she told him that she believed in him, and that he was a real man, and that he would help her. Her orders that he be shot if he attempted to escape were given in a moment of thoughtlessness; she was sorry, but now it was too late; her man was deaf, and could not be called, and was standing ready to shoot.

At last a knocking at the door was heard, and a demand for admittance, and the Princess bade Warren to open, which he did at once, but as the key turned in the lock, he remembered that he had no weapon, not even a penknife. It was then too late, and a burly fellow entered. As Warren and the man stood face to face, he could see no trace of an Indian Prince in him. The man accuses Warren of being in his wife's room and demands an explanation. Warren realizes he is the victim of a "badger game" and writes out a good big check. The woman leaves to cash the check.

Warren, sitting reading, turns the last page, reads for a moment, then slowly goes to the window and looks out. The rain is still beating against the window. He turns, looks at the book, smiles, shrugs his shoulders, tosses the book on the table, picks up a cigar and sits down as the picture fades out.

JOKER.

MARRIED ON THE WING (Feb. 26).—The cast: Ernest Smythe (Ernest Shields); Grace Darling (Lois Wilson); Jay Lee Bean (Sherman Bainbridge); The Attorney (Roy McCray). Written by Ben Cohn. Produced by Ernest Shields.

Ernie has just been notified by his attorney that his uncle has bequeathed his entire fortune to him on the condition that he marry Grace Darling, a girl to whom he has been engaged for some time. Owing to an unfortunate delay in getting the will, it happens that the same day on which the condition expires is the same day that Ernie is notified of his inheritance. In case Ernie fails to carry out his uncle's wishes as expressed in his will, the estate will revert to Ernie's cousin, Jay Lee Bean. While the attorney is telling Ernie of his good fortune, Jay comes in; and, hearing his name mentioned, hides behind curtains and waits to learn more.

Ernie is a good looking young man. While they are talking, Jay sees Ernie frequently drinking cough medicine from a bottle and he gets a brilliant scheme to get possession of the estate himself. While Ernie is showing the attorney out, Jay dilutes the cough medicine with strong whiskey, and when Ernie returns, he finds the cough medicine has quite a different taste. While he is talking to Grace over the 'phone, telling of the condition of the will, he is seized with a violent coughing spell, and has access to his bottle of medicine. It takes only a few swallows of the potent remedy to put Ernie in an intoxicated condition.

Jay comes in at this moment, pretending he has just arrived. He is greeted by Ernie as a long-lost brother. Jay persuades Ernie to take a cold plunge, and while the latter is in the bathroom, Jay locks the door and takes all of Ernie's clothes and hides them.

The cold water revives Ernie, and he realizes that he has only a short time to have his marriage performed. Unable to get out the door, he escapes through the window, clad only in his B. V. D.'s. In attempting to enter the house through a window to get his clothes, he is arrested by a policeman who takes him for a burglar. Grace, who is impatiently waiting at the church for Ernie to show up, finally calls up his home, and, unable to get a response, communicates with the police station. Ernie recognizes her voice, and grabbing the 'phone from the astonished sergeant, quickly tells her of his predicament before the police can grab him. Unable to get any reply, Grace determines to investigate conditions at the police station.

Ernie meanwhile has persuaded the police to allow him to go to the church, accompanied by an officer, and he and Grace miss each other on the journey. Ernie, learning that Grace has gone to seek him at the police station, grabs the preacher and hurries back to the police station. Grace, having missed Ernie, starts back for the church. The God of Chance is with them, for half way between the two places they meet, and the ceremony is performed in the middle of the street, just as the clock strikes twelve. The discomfitted Jay has been foiled in his attempt to steal the inheritance, and for his pains is taken to the police station on the charge of speeding, while the happy couple hurry home to dress Ernie in more appropriate attire than that which he obtained in an old barn in his escape from the policeman.

BISON.

HIS MAJESTY DICK TURPIN (Two parts—Feb. 12.) The cast: Old King Corona (Peter Gerald); The Madcap Queen (Grace Cunard); Count Charles (Jack Holt); Prince Frederick (Francis Ford); His servant (I. Lippner); Captain of Guards (Neal Harding).

The old King of Corona, by his heavy taxation, has heavily oppressed the peasants. His young wife, by her frivolous ways, has earned the name of "The Madcap Queen." Prince Frederick sympathizes with the poor peasants and an unsuccessful endeavor to lower this burden by reducing the tax. The charming personality of the madcap queen has quite won the heart of Prince Frederick, but he congratulates himself that he has kept the secret so well hidden that no one suspects him of loving the queen. Count Charles has the good will of the king and resents the popularity of Prince Frederick. He is outspoken in his admiration for the pretty queen and his attentions to her have become a matter of talk.

Prince Frederick, leaving the palace one day, sees the miserable condition of the peasants. At home that night he picks up a book of the adventure of Dick Turpin. He reads of how that famous highwayman robbed the rich and gave the money to the poor. He decides to do the same thing, and a short time later the count and several others come in with the news that they have been robbed. In another part of the town a mysterious person leaves a bag of gold with a crowd of peasants, telling them that it is the gold of the rich to pay their taxes. The robberies of the rich continue, even the king and queen being made victims. Later the king remarks on the familiar appearance of the bandit and says that he reminds him of some one he knows well. The queen suspects the identity of the gentlemen bandit and through strategy learns who he is.

The king orders out every available soldier and tells them to capture the bandit. The queen learns of the plans of the pursuers and believing that the bandit will be captured makes a quick trip in her car and manages to hide the man in her car and take him through the lines of the pursuers to safety. Some one has seen a man in the queen's car and tells the king. When the king asks the queen if it is true that some one was in the car, she says, "Certainly, I was in it myself!" The queen slips into Frederick's apartments and when he returns from one of his robberies hides behind the curtain. Prince Frederick comes in accompanied by his servant and dismisses the latter with a warning that if he should ever disclose the adventures they have gone through his reward will be a home in a dungeon or possibly death. Frederick discovers the intruder in his room and orders her to come forth. The prince is very much disconcerted when he recognizes the queen. She tells him that she is going to tell the king because he did not thank her when she assisted in his escape. He pleads that if she does it will mean his death and asks if she really intends to let him die. Upon her assertion that she does, he tells that as he must face death, he may as well confess that he loves her. His surprise is very great when the madcap queen tells him that she has been trying to get him to say that he loves her for some time, and they agree to keep the matter secret. In the excitement which follows the news of his capture the old king dies and there seems every prospect that peace will come to the country and its queen.

A RECOILING VENGEANCE (Three Parts—Feb. 19).—The cast: John Clifford (Edward Hearn); Helene, his wife (Betty Schade); Mme. Aimee Ledoux (Rosita Maristini); Nysam of Thrahore (Albert Miller); Thesba, the Nysam's favorite (Caroline Meredith). Scenario by Ruth Ann Baldwin. Produced by Norval McGregor.

To John Clifford, confidential agent of the British Secret Service, is given the task of delivering into the hands of the Ameer of Afghanistan important papers. Mme. Aimee LeDeux, adventuress, and in the employ of the Turkish government, is sent to get the papers away from Clifford. She and her three confederates board the ship, Brama, on which Clifford and his young wife sail next day for India. As Clifford, his wife, and the adventuress are walking on the deck one of Mme LeDoux's confederates drops from an advantageous position on an upper deck a pail of water on the head of clifford. Instantly the two other agents run up as though to help. Helene kneels by her husband's side and Mme. LeDoux stoops to aid her, thus shielding the actions of the two men who search Clifford's pockets, securing a mass of papers before the captain and other passengers come up. The injured man recovers consciousness and is taken to his cabin where it is found that he was only stunned. He then tells his wife that he felt the men going through his pockets.

But the two men did not get the much-wanted papers. He is alarmed for their safety, but his wife offers a plan. Carefully she folds the papers and pins them around her Panama hat, slipping the silk scarf over them. The party arrives safely in India. Still not suspecting that Mme. DeLoux has had anything to do with the attack, the Cliffords invite her to accompany them to an army post in the northern part of India, where Mrs. Clifford is to await her husband's return from Afghanistan. Mme. DeLoux goes with the Cliffords after leaving instructions with her agents to follow them. Arriving at the post the officer in charge informs Clifford that he has been apprised of his coming and has arranged for a camel train with military escort into Afghanistan, leaving the next morning. Mme. DeLoux hears this news with a scowl, and that night the conspirators manage to secure both Clifford and his wife. Mme. LeDoux to get rid of Helen, Clifford's wife, has one of her agents carry the young woman to the notorious Nysam of Thrahore.

Arrived at the harem, Helene arouses the jealousy of Thesba, who is the favorite of the Nysam. Martha and one of the unhappy inmates of the harem takes Helene under her protection. Together they escape into the jungle after bribing a eunuch. The Nysam discovers the escape and starts out to search for the runaways. Thesba, infuriated, hides in the elephant's howdah. Meanwhile, Mme. LeDoux has taken Clifford to the ruins of an ancient temple where she thinks they will be safe from possible pursuit. Martha and Helene escape through the jungle, but the latter sprains her ankle and at last can go no farther. They see the ruins in the distance and Martha decides that Helene shall hide there while she goes for help. Suddenly Helene spies her husband and runs to him. Mme. LeDoux's men instantly separate the two, Helen's hat falling to the ground in her struggles. Martha realizing that they have fallen into a hornet's nest, hurries into the jungle towards the army post. The next morning Mme. LeDoux realizes that the absence of the Cliffords must soon be discovered by the soldiers at the post and determines to act at once.

"We will now provide you with entertainment," she announces to Clifford, and leads him out, followed by one man, while the other seizes Helene. When Mme. LeDoux's party first arrive at the ruins, they discovered two tigers inhabiting a room. Quickly barring the doorway they imprisoned the tigers. Mme. LeDoux then leads Clifford along a wall overlooking the den below. A moment later his eyes behold Helene on the opposite wall.

"Tell me where the papers are or I will have your wife thrown into the den of tigers," declares Mme. LeDoux.

"Don't tell her. Don't tell her, John" calls Helene wildly. "She does not dare to do it and besides, Martha has gone for the soldiers."

At the news Mme. LeDoux, infuriated, gives the signal to the man holding Helene. He gives the girl a push and down she falls into the tigers' den. Clifford pushes aside Mme. LeDoux's restraining hand, snatches the whip from her girdle and jumps down into the den beside his wife. Just then the native whom Mme. LeDoux had beaten sometime ago because he was caressing Helene creeps up behind her and pushes her into the den. The tigers see the broken body on the flags at the opposite side of the den, and are attracted by the smell of blood. Clifford and Helene escape from the barred doorway to meet the soldiers whom Martha has brought. The soldiers congratulate Clifford, and the captain asks concerning the papers.

"They are quite safe," replies Clifford, and they return to the courtyard where the papers are indeed found, still reposing under the scarf of the Panama hat.

THE STAMPEDE IN THE NIGHT (Two parts—Feb. 26).—The cast: Jack Harding (Hoot Gibson); Nell Wilson (Olive Golden); Her Father (William Canfield); Neal Banning (Neal Hart); His Daughter (Peggy Coudray). Written and produced by Jacques Jaccard.

Old man Wilson is much inclined to a liberal use of liquor. His daughter, Nell, is known and liked by all the cowboys of the surrounding ranches. Jack Harding is especially fond of Nell. Old man Wilson fears Jack.

The manager of the ranch on which Jack works is negotiating with a live stock exchange relative to the sale of a bunch of horses; and, accordingly, the buyer of the exchange, Neal Banning, arrives on the ground, accompanied by his daughter, to look over the stock. Jack finds the city-bred girl very fascinating, while she finds much to admire in the young cowboy. The two take many rides together, in which Jack explains the country and the business of the live stock people to the girl. Nell notices the growing intimacy between the two, and is very down hearted over it.

Banning takes a liking to Jack and the girl tells him he can secure a place with her father in Kansas City. Jack promises to think the matter over. Banning and his daughter leave for the railroad station to await the arrival of the stock. Nell, noticing the growing preoccupation of Jack surmises he is thinking a great deal of the other girl, and she decides to exert herself to win him back. The boss of the ranch receives a letter from the buyer stating that the horses must be delivered at the railroad point at a certain time, and asking that Jack be allowed to accompany the horses, as he has a position in mind for him.

The men in charge of the horses set out on the journey, which will take a couple of days. On the second stop they throw up a temporary corral, to keep the horses from straying. Nell follows the men and arrives at their camp after dark. She determines upon a desperate move to prevent Jack from leaving. Accordingly, she cuts the corral fence and stampedes the horses. The cowboys, aroused by the uproar, hurriedly pursue the fleeing horses while Jack, seeing the fleeing figure whom he thinks is guilty of the outrage, pursues it. Fearing he will not overtake the fugitive, Jack begins to shoot, and a well directed shot brings the figure down. When Jack arrives, he is very much surprised to find that Nell is the one he has wounded; and he asks her why she did such a foolish deed. Nell then tells him that she stampeded the horses because she did not want him to leave. Jack realizes that it has been Nell all along whom he has cared for. He picks her up and carries her safely to the house.

At the station, Banning and his daughter are anxiously awaiting the arrival of the horses, which finally arrive just as the train starts to leave. The girl is very much disappointed when she is handed a note from Jack, telling her that he has changed his mind and decided to remain on the range.

THE DISAPPEARING GROOM (Feb. 21).—The cast: The Bride (Billie Rhodes); The Groom (Ray Gallagher); The Best Man (Neal Burns); Captain Blunt (Harry Rattenberry). Written by Al E. Christie. Produced by Horace Davey.

When a man is about to get married he sees all things in a happy light and such was the outlook of the groom on the day before his wedding. His friend Neal was to be best man and the hours fairly flew by. The bride-to-be is make preparations for the happy occasion, while her parents are congratulating themselves on getting such a nice son-in-law.

In a seaport nearby, there is "trouble in the camp." Three of the sailors fall out with Captain Blunt and in a "peeve" desert the ship. When the captain learns he is short three men, he tells the mate to get three men and it doesn't make any difference where they obtain them. The mate leaves on his errand and locates one man in the person of a hobo. The arrival of one man soothes the skipper's wrath somewhat, but he sternly informs the mate to get busy and capture the others.

Neal meanwhile has been assisting Ray to get ready for the ceremony and the two set out for the house of the bride, where all is ready for the wedding. Unfortunately they cross the path of the mate from the schooner and he tries to take the two friends to fill the vacancy on the ship. They resist and in the scuffle Neal escapes while poor Ray is taken to the ship and set to work. Neal tells of the bold abduction and the wedding party sets out to rescue the unlucky groom.

Captain Blunt decides that he can do with the two men and the ship leaves. When the party arrive at the dock the ship is some distance out, but they charter a launch and set out in pursuit. Ray is ordered to furl the sails and in spite of his protestations is forced to climb into the rigging. From this point of vantage he sees the pursuing launch and is happy that he is about to be rescued. The skipper, thinking the party are coming to take one of his men, has Ray hidden below and when finally they board the ship he cannot be found.

Ray finally manages to escape and reaches the launch alongside. The wedding party returns to land and go on with the delayed wedding. When the ceremony is started, the best man is missing and all realize he is beyond their aid. The happy bride and groom are united while the unhappy best man is forced to manipulate a mop on the deck of the fast disappearing ship.

HER FRIEND, THE DOCTOR (Feb. 25).—The cast: Mr. West (Harry Rattenberry); His Wife (Stella Adams); Eddie (Eddie Lyons); His Chum (Lee Moran); Mary West (Betty Compson); Doctor Bonner (Ethel Lynn). Written and produced by A. E. Christie.

Mr. West, the owner of a village grocery store, is considered the "magnate" of the town. Eddie is head clerk in the store, and he and his employer's daughter, Mary, have been in love with each other for sometime. Mary is at college and things about the village are pretty dull for Eddie.

Eddie's employer shows him a letter from Mary stating that she will soon be through school. Eddie tells his chum, Lee, the good news. Mary arrives, and the first few days after her return are happy ones for Eddie. But the "green-eyed monster" comes between them, and Eddie is inconsolable. Mary has met many friends at college, among them being Dr. Bonner. One day Eddie is given a letter by Mary to mail, and he sees that it is addressed to Dr. Bonner. He tells his chum of the trouble, and the chum offers him lots of consolation, but is unable to drive Eddie's "blues" away.

One day as Mary is cleaning up the boys' room she sees that Eddie has been drawing comical pictures of what he thinks is Dr. Bonner. She realizes that Eddie is suffering from jealousy and determines to cure him. She accordingly writes a note to Dr. Bonner asking the doctor to visit her, and manages it so that Eddie happens to see the note.

This fans Eddie's jealousy into a flame, and he tells Lee that he will "fix the doctor" when he arrives. Mary meets her guest and takes the doctor to her house. The two boys refuse to even meet the doctor, and late that evening Mr. West tells the boys that Mary has taken supper up to the doctor's room, as the doctor is indisposed. They determine to run the doctor off that night. Mary bids her guest "goodnight" and is soon fast asleep. The two boys, masked and armed with revolvers, sneak into the doctor's room, intending to scare him away. They are very much surprised when the doctor shoots at them and wounds Lee. When the lights are flashed up, Dr. Bonner is discovered to be a young girl, and the two friends are hard put to it for an excuse. They claim they have just routed a bunch of tough burglars.

Eddie realizes his jealousy is unfounded and a reconciliation takes place. Dr. Bonner takes personal charge of her victim and he finds much to admire in the skilful way she handles the case. Eddie agrees with Mary that her friend the doctor is a "great friend," but insists that Lee keep the doctor out of his way.

LAEMMLE.

JOHN PELLET'S DREAM (Feb. 24).—The cast: John Pellet (Rupert Julian); Carter (Bertram Grassby); Thompson (Abe Mundon); Marcia Gray (Elsie Jane Wilson); Parson Gray (Sydney Haben); Mrs. Gray (Mrs. Alexander). Written and produced by Rupert Julian.

Parson Gray lives with his wife and daughter, Marcia, in a Western town. Due to Marcia's winning personality the Gray house is well known. John Pellet and his two comrades, Carter and Thompson, are in the government survey service and have been enjoying the society of Marcia, while waitng for orders from the government. Each of the three men is straining every effort to win Marcia and it is a sad blow when they receive a notice to carry a survey in the Death Valley country.

The three friends reach their territory and spend a few days getting everything in shape. John, thinking of the long hot days, has brought along a supply of beer and at the end of a hot day, the friends are anticipating a good drink. Unfortunately they have diminshed their supply more than they thought and the only remaining bottle is a small one, hardly enough for one man's thirst. The friends propose to toss a coin to see who shall get the bottle, but the toss turns out a failure, each man's coin being the same. Accordingly the boys agree to postpone the decision until the next day when the man who can relate the most interesting dream shall get the bottle of beer.

Next morning finds the three up early and Carter, as master of ceremonies, suggests they tell their dreams. He tells his first. His dream was that he had won Marcia and saved John from suicide (after he had learned he had lost the girl). Thompson relates his dream. He dreamed that he and Marcia had married and lived happily ever afterwards. John's turn is next and he is slow about starting. Finally he relates the following story:

He and Marcia had been married the day the three left town. Marcia had placed a locket about his neck. After the three had arrived in the desert, John was deserted and left to die of thirst. By will power alone he had followed the two and found their camp, and the bottle of beer had saved his life. He ends the story with the statement that he dreamed he was thirsty and drank the beer. The others agree that his dream was wonderful and dash inside to get the beer. Their surprise is great when the bottle is found empty. They then return to the other man and opening his shirt find a locket around his neck. They agree that he deserved the beer and congratulate him on his success.

HER GREATEST STORY (Feb. 27).—The cast: Mazie King (Myrtle Gonzalez); Eugene Tilton (Fred Church); Con King (Val Paul); Jim Wharton (Alfred Allen); Benny King (Frankie Lee). Written and produced by Lynn Reynolds.

Mazie King is "sob sister" on one of the large daily papers and because of domestic troubles at home her stories have lost their "punch." She is called "upon the carpet" by Wharton, the managing editor, and told that there must be some improvement in her stories. Tilton, the city editor, hears their talk and tries to comfort the girl.

Mazie's home life is not happy. Her husband, Con, is a gambler and dope fiend, and has no consideration whatever for his wife. In order to gain money for his ventures, he does not hesitate to threaten harm to their child, a boy of three, unless he is furnished funds. Mazie has often given up her carfare in order to keep the child from harm.

Things reach a climax one Saturday when Mazie receives a notice that her services will not be needed after the end of the next week. She tries to keep the knowledge of her disappointment from the office force, but Tilton surmises the trouble and in his friendly way proves of comfort to the girl. There is little consolation for Mazie at home. Instead she is threatened and even roughly handled by her husband, when she refuses to give him money. The husband has his revenge later by taking their child to a low saloon and leaving word for his wife to bring him some money if she wants to see the child. Mazie unwillingly borrows the money from Tilton and rescues the child from the low dive.

Con has a gay time on the money and his spree ends up in a fight in which he is mortally wounded. The managing editor learns of the killing and assigns Mazie to the case, telling her to get something out of it. Mazie recognizes the body as her husband and is shown a note he left begging his wife for forgiveness. She leaves without revealing her identity.

That evening Mazie writes the real story of her life and closes with the episode of her husband's death. The story makes a hit with the editor and he holds the presses to get the story in for the Sunday edition. He remarks to the boys that the story reads like truth. Later Mazie eating a much needed lunch in a restaurant, is joined by Tilton. He notices the briuse on her arm and then she tells him the story was real and the dead man was her husband. Wharton sees the two and joins them, telling Mazie to be sure and report as usual the next week. Tilton cheers the unhappy girl and suggests that they had better see how Benny is getting along. The two leave and Mazie accepts the kind attention offered by her friend, and there is reason to believe she will depend more and more upon him in the future.

POWERS.

UNCLE SAM AT WORK (No. 8, "As Fisherman, Postmaster, Health Officer") (Feb. 17). Installment No. 8 of this exhibits Uncle sam in the triple role of fisherman, postmaster and health officer.

We are shown part of the work of the Bureau of Fisheries, the interior of the government fish hatcheries with their myriads of tiny fish and thrilling scenes in the pursuit and capture of the whale. Methods of capturing the monster are illustrated, and we have a glimpse of the great creature before he is cut up for the valuable products which his great carcass contains.

The interior of the general postoffice in Washington gives us a vivid idea of the handling of the vast quantities of mail which pass each day through the hands of the officials. Sorting and stamping of letters, all done at incredible speed, is strikingly illustrated.

Uncle Sam is a splendid doctor and is tireless in his experiments for bettering the health of his children. Here he is shown in the midst of one of the experiments upon small animals which have so often resulted in benefit to the human race.

TRAPEZE WORK BY MISS LEITZEL (on same reel as foregoing). Miss Leitzel is well known in vaudeville as a skillful and daring performer on the trapeze. She performs feats of agility before the eye of the cameras, varied by feats of remarkable strength for such a slender girl. Hanging by one hand, she whirls her body around like a human pin-wheel, making no less than fifty revolutions in the air. An exhibition of rope-climbing ends the act.

RED FEATHER.

SONS OF SATAN (Five Parts—Feb. 12).—The cast: Henry Normand (Gerald Ames); William Freshley (Lewis Gilbert); Arthur Felix Sawyer (Arthur Cullen); Editor of "Whispered Words" (George Bellamy); Winifred West (Blanche Bryan); Dick Fenton (Charles Rock); Lord Desford (Hayford Hobbs); Earl of Littleborough (Windham Guise); Countess (Nina Grey); Detective Ransom (Douglas Munro). Produced by George L. Tucker.

Henry Normand is the chief of a gang of thieves and murderers known as the Sons of Satan. Under the name of Paul de Villereau he is also a famous detective, and both he and his organization, "Freshley's Detective Agency," have at times been of service to Scotland Yard, though their real purpose is the levying of blackmail.

De Villereau is attracted to Winifred West, an actress, who is engaged to Lord Desford, the son of the irascible Earl of Littleborough. Winifred refuses a gift sent by the detective, who determines to get the girl into his power by foul means. Dick Fenton, Winifred's guardian and stage manager of the theater in which she appears, who loves Winifred, suspects the evil character of the detective.

De Villereau's plans are facilitated by his relations with Desford's stepmother, who has been afraid that a foolish letter of hers will come into the hands of her husband. She pays heavily for its recovery, but the letter restored to her by De Villereau is only a forged copy. She is summoned to her tormentor's headquarters and there finds herself completely in the toils. The presentation of the Littleborough jewels to the new countess is to take place shortly. De Villereau has a description of the safe, and it is soon made clear to Lady Littleborough that she must assist him to obtain possession of the jewels.

De Villereau effects an entrance into the grounds for himself and his gang. Lady Littleborough is forced to act as a confederate and bring the dressing gown which is to incriminate the unconscious Winifred, who has been invited to spend the night. A fragment of stuff found caught in the safe and a jagged rent in Winifred's dressing gown prove damning evidence against the girl. The distracted Desford tells Fenton what has happened and the stage manager is certain that Winifred is the victim of a plot.

Desford consults Freshley's Detective Agency and engages De Villereau to find the real criminal. But the suspicious Fenton discovers that there is some understanding between Lady Littleborough and the detective. De Villereau realizes that she is dangerous to his scheme. She is accordingly gagged and bound, while the criminal hastens back to London to secure possession of Winifred.

Fenton, disguised as De Villereau, releases Lady Littleborough and hears the whole story from her. Winifred has been cleverly abducted under the eyes of the police by De Villereau and his gang. Fenton determines to beard the villain in his den. He writes a note to the countess, which Desford is to give her at midnight if he has not returned by that time.

Fenton interviews Freshley, but the man escapes and turns the tables upon Fenton by pumping a suffocating gas into the room. De Villereau seems to triumph all along the line. Winifred is forced to go on an errand which will bring the countess into the same trap. Finally De Villereau and his men drive away, bearing their drugged victim, Winifred, while Lady Littleborough and Fenton are left bound in an oil-soaked hut, the light fuse left by De Villereau creeping ever nearer to the oil. Young Lord Desford, however, has opened Fenton's note. The two victims are released just in time. As De Villereau sees the flames of the burning hut he smiles and exclaims: "The last possibility of evidence against us has gone."

In the presence of Desford and Fenton, Lady Littleborough tells her husband everything and his love proves equal to the test. After considerable difficulty with Scotland Yard a raid is organized, led by Fenton, who is disguised as De Villereau. It is then that the latter drives up with the jewels and finds his stronghold taken. He realizes that the game is up, and facing the victors smilingly takes a gentle puff at a doctored cigarette, which kills him as it had killed a previous victim. His master, Satan, who has been shown gloating over his career at intervals, now receives his faithful disciple.

BIG U.

A BEAST OF SOCIETY (Three Parts—Feb. 24).—The cast: Jason Foley (Herbert Barrington); Giles Luther (Douglas Gerrard); Cora Foley (Louise Vale); Elsie Foley (Betty Schade). Written by Harvey Gates. Produced by Travers Vale.

Better than all else, Jason Foley loves his wife, Cora. Prosperous up to this time, he has indulged her whims, gratified her most extravagant wants. They have one child, Elsie, a girl of six years. Cora, raised by a selfish, pleasure-loving aunt, has fallen into her ways. The instant Jason attempts to retrench the young wife commences to be dissatisfied. The woman's discontent makes room for the attentions of Giles Luther, Jason's business partner, who is infatuated with her. Luther ruins his partner financially, and Cora is furious. She blames it all on her husband, believing him to be stupid, weak and inefficient.

Jason and his wife are forced to move to a small, modest home. Cora is sullen and unresigned to her poverty. Then Luther comes to her and secretly furnishes her with money which the woman, under the vague pretext of being a loan, accepts. Soon after Jason makes the discovery that his one-time partner, Luther, was back of the pool which reduced him to poverty. Suspicion, not only of Luther, but of his wife, grips him. He remembers his wife's hand in urging him into the pool. Jason hastens home; he arrives in time to catch a fleeting glimpse of Giles Luther scurrying away. He breaks into the house in time to catch Cora in a suspicious action, as though she were hiding something. It is the money Luther has left her. Jason demands an explanation, to be shown what it is she is concealing. Refused, he tears her aside and brings the money out. For the first time Cora seems vaguely to realize her position, and the possibility of losing Jason; and, more than all, her child. She pleads for forgiveness, for her child to remain with her, or at least to be allowed to take it. Jason refuses. Luther takes her, but the years that follow are sorrowful, painful for the girl

Jason disappears. He moves to another city and assumes another name. Years later finds Elsie, a girl of seventeen, with a wonderful gift for the violin. Jason has plodded along, with poor success financially. Elsie, to assist, has taken up playing in one of the fashionable restaurants. Jason has brought her up to believe her mother dead. Luther finds it necessary to the enlarging of his profession to move to the city where live Jason and his daughter. Time comes when the pair, visiting the fashionable cafe, see Elsie. Cora is enchanted by the girl's playing, while Luther becomes infatuated with her beauty. Cora makes the girl's acquaintance and finally takes her under her wing as a protege. Luther takes advantage of this to win the girl's trust and friendship. Too late, Cora is made aware of his real intent—to desert her and secure Elsie for himself. Both Cora and Luther are unaware of the girl's identity. Jason is shocked when his daughter tells him the name of the woman who is interested in her, and he tries to dissuade her from associating with the woman.

Jason learns through young Fred Larson, Elsie's sweetheart, that she has accompanied Luther to his studios of an evening after work. Thoroughly aroused, Jason sets out alone to bring his daughter home. Cora has suspected Luther, also. Preceding the above action, the maid has brought to her an odd pin, found upon the floor. Elsie had worn the pin there. Cora recognized it as one which belonged to her husband. Cora hastens to the cafe where Elsie plays. It is late. Elsie has left. Through one of the waiters she learns that Luther accompanied the girl. She speeds to Luther's studios and intrudes at the moment when it would seem that the man would gain his ends by brute force. In the struggle that follows, Cora kills him.

Jason Foley enters on the instant. Elsie goes from Cora's arms to those of her father. The woman looks from the dead body of Luther to Jason, her eyes pleading silence as to who she is. Her arms go out suggestively in longing, and then, shielding her face, she begs Jason to hurry the girl away. Jason understands something of what has happened. He knows that Cora knows her own child. Jason leaves the place with Elsie, and places her in the arms of the boy she loves, a good man. The mother love is too strong, and later Cora again seeks out the girl. There is a suggestion that Cora and Foley will come to an understanding later.

"THE GIRL AND THE GAME" (Chapter 8—"A Race for the Right-of-Way"—Two parts—Feb. 14.—Seagrue, who had established a construction camp out on the desert and was pushing railroad building operations in keen rivalry to Rhinelander, on appearing in the streets of Las Vegas one morning, discovered Helen in Spike's company. She had him thoroughly outfitted with new garments, provided him with pocket money and purchased a railroad ticket for him to the city.

Seagrue called for the assistance of the local sheriff and after Helen had gone her way, accosted Spike. Spike was resolved to have nothing more to do with Seagrue, but when Seagrue flashed before him a big document offering $500 reward for Spike's arrest and conviction, Spike gave in, tore up his railroad ticket gloomily and got into Seagrue's car.

The unusual sensation of two railroads being built across the desert spread like a boom from town to town and the territory was invaded. Even patches of sagebrush became worth fabulous prices in the eyes of residents. Native sons promoted all sorts of industrial projects to take advantage of the new wave of prosperity.

In the path of the rail-laying crews was Cassidy's land, the ownership of which meant the control of the strategic. Cassidy had been carried sky-high by the terrific inflation values and refused to sell to Rhinelander for a penny less than $10,000. No sooner had Rhinelander grudgingly completed the deal when Seagrue arrived. Playing upon Cassidy's credulous idea of what his property was worth he influenced him to accept a check for $10,000, thereby establishing a competitive claim to the property.

When Seagrue decided to use force to get rid of his competitors, Rhinelander wired Helen Holmes at Las Vegas: "Seagrue is using force to protest my right-of-way. Have attorney meet me at the depot at 11 o'clock. Arrange for special to bring deputies up here. Rhinelander."

Seagrue tapped the wires and heard the message, also Helen's reply. "Attorney will meet you on arrival. Special will be ready to leave any time after 11. Helen."

As a result Seagrue had Cassidy's house moved in front of Storm's crew, thus impending their progress. In the meantime, Rhinelander had gone to town, secured the deputies and with them boarded a special train to return. But Seagrue's men were busy. Bill and Lug secreted themselves in the head end of the coach and as soon as the train was well out of town, held up the fireman and engineer, cut off the engine, putting on speed and left the coach full of deputies far in the rear. The conductor, using an emergency telephone, notified Helen, who immediately started out in pursuit in an old engine.

In the meantime Storm decided that radical action was necessary. Hooking up a powerful engine with a heavy equipment car he drove these at terrific speed in the direction of Cassidy's house. Suddenly the engine was detached but the heavy equipment car headed forward like a catapult, straight at Cassidy's home. The next instant it tore straight through.

Seagrue was maddened beyond reason. Calling his men he dashed forward at Storm's crew. The ugly gang was armed with picks and shovels. Bloodshed was in sight. Then came the old engine driven on the front of the coach, their rifles gleaming menacingly in the sun. Seagrue had enough. Once more he had been defeated by Helen.

CUB.

TOO PROUD TO FIGHT (Feb. 18).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); the Swede (George George); Sam (Gordon McGregor); the Father (Louis FitzRoy); the Daughter (Belle Bennett); the Mother (Janet Sully); Tilly (Louise Horner).

Jerry sees Tilly being chased by, as he supposes, a vicious dog and, seeing a chance to play the hero, he goes to her rescue. The owner of the animal appears and proves that the animal is quite harmless, much to Jerry's chagrin. Tilly and the dog's owner then have the laugh on the disgusted Jerry, who talks to himself and goes through such strange actions that a cop, who has been watching and listening to him, decides he is crazy and starts to take him away. Tillie pleads with the cop to release Jerry, which he finally does.

Jerry accompanies Tillie to the house where she is employed as servant and she invites him in and treats him to a glass of beer. Tilly sees one of her admirers, a husky Swede, coming and hides Jerry under the table. The Swede sits down at the table and helps himself to Jerry's beer. Startled by the approach of someone outside, whom they believe to be the owner of the house, the Swede runs out the back way and Jerry emerges from under the table. The frightened Tilly barely has time to hide him in a clothes basket when Sam, a laborer, enters. The Swede retraces his steps and, finding that the intruder is Sam, throws him down the cellar. His rival thus disposed of he begins to make love to Tilly. Jerry ventures to raise the cover of the basket and look out but is discovered by the Swede, who makes a dash for him but the nimble Jerry is too quick for him and jumps into the dumb waiter. The Swede, not to be thwarted, runs down the cellar but Jerry hears him coming and jumps into the furnace, which is the only place of refuge in sight. Not wishing to follow him into the furnace the Swede returns to the kitchen, only to be hit on the head with an empty beer bottle by the angry Tillie and knocked unconscious.

Sam stars a fire in the furnace and Jerry is forced to crawl up through the pipe. Emerging from the furnace he scares the mother and daughter nearly to death and their screams bring the father, revolver in hand. He fires at Jerry, who being unable to find an exit, dives back into the pipe and falls unconscious on the cellar floor, his clothes on fire. He revives in time to escape the clutches of father, who chases him about the cellar until, somewhat blinded by the smoke from Jerry's clothes, the father runs upstairs, thinking Jerry has gone out that way. Jerry, however, jumps out of the window but is seen by the Swede who starts in pursuit. A chase takes place, which ends by the Swede chasing Jerry into a sawmill and on to the roof. Here a fight takes place between the two but Jerry is no match for the husky Swede, who picks him up and throws him into the midst of a bunch of loafers. The Swede is not content with this, but seeing that Jerry is uninjured he takes a chimney and hurles it into the crowd, knocking them helterskelter. Jerry has no trouble in inciting the crowd to capture the Swede and they all pounce upon him while Jerry stands back and applauds. While the fight is raging two policemen are seen coming and the crowd soon scatters headed by Jerry, and the Swede is left to be arrested and taken away by the police. Jerry, laughing in derisive triumph, is seen peering around a post as his enemy, the Swede, is lead protestingly away.

"TOO MUCH MARRIED" (Feb. 23). The cast: Nell (Carol Halloway); Jack (John Sheehan); Uncle (John Steppling); Mrs. O'Laughlin (Lucille Ward). Directed by Jack Dillon.

Jack and Nell are newlyweds. Nell simply can't cook and Jack is sure that if he goes on eating her grub much longer, dire things will result. He plays ball with her biscuits and they certainly do bounce—but don't break. Helen tearfully goes right home to mama, but Jack concludes that she will be back all right, and doesn't spend any time worrying. He decides to give her a surprise when she does return and phones an employment agency to send a cook. The cook arrives—full-blooded Irish, and encumbered with a baby.

Then Jack's uncle comes for a visit to give him a start when married, as promised. Fearing that Uncle will not come through with a donation if he learns of the quarrel, Jack presents the cook, Mrs. O'Laughlin, as his wife, and while uncle is not overly pleased, he makes the best of it and writes out a large check. In accordance with his policy that the lady of the house should handle all moneys, the check is given to Mrs. O'Laughlin, "phoney" wife.

Hark! From the kitchen comes forth the squeal of a baby. Jack tells Uncle that he has been married secretly for two years and that the baby is his. Uncle has the little family pose for their picture and then sets out to get baby some toys. Passing through the park, on his way back, he decides to rest a while and sits down on a bench beside Nell, who is crying repentantly. She sees the photo in his hand and he proudly tells her that it is his nephew's family. Uncle likes Nell's looks and invites her to come home with him to see the family and she accepts. When they arrive, Jack is introduced to Nell and they meet as strangers. He introduces Mrs. O'Laughlin as his wife. Uncle persuades Nell to stay as nurse. In the meantime, Mr. O'Laughlin seeks to recover his wife and learns of her whereabouts through an employment agency.

Uncle leads Jack and Mrs. O'Laughlin to "their" room and bids them goodnight. Nell, indignantly returning downstairs for her suitcase, admits O'Laughlin, who wants to see his wife. Nell immediately sees a light, and leads him to Jack's room. Then O'Laughlin starts to massacre Jack and Nell unintentionally flees into Uncle's room. A mighty shove from O'Laughlin sends Jack into Uncle's room and he demands to know what Nell is doing there. Mrs. O'Laughlin appeases her husband with the check and as explanations follow, Uncle squares Jack with another large check.

"COOKING HIS GOOSE" (Feb. 27). The cast: Ima Knut (Orral Humphrey); Mrs. Banks (Gladys Kingsbury); Her Daughter, Liza (Dixie Steward). Directed by Nate Watt.

Ima is a bachelor whose love of whiskey is only exceeded by his love of pie. The local eat house goes broke and the bachelors of the neighborhood are compelled to cook their own grub. Ima stands in for a while until he eats a morsel at Mrs. Banks', which she informs him has been cooked by "my darter Liza." He then finds he loves Liza with his whole stomach, and for fear some other gay Lothario will capture this culinary treasure, he marries her.

Ima's state of mind can be imagined when he discovers that Liza is a base deceiver as to her culinary capabilities and the only things she can cook are pork and beans—the latter according to the labels on the cans, already prepared under strict, scientific and antiseptic conditions. His bitter disappointment drives him to drink and to the horror of Liza, he returns to the connubial hearth blissfully intoxicated.

Even a bad cook will turn at last, and driven desperate by Ima's unkind remarks on her cooking, her mother's cooking, her father's cooking and the whole family's cooking, she reaches for the whiskey bottle and vents her anger on Ima's head. As the last flicker of consciousness departs, he seems to see Liza changing into an animated whiskey bottle, which, with a wicked leer, starts chasing him about. Wherever he runs, he is pursued by the bottle.

At last he discovers an enormous club and attacks his erstwhile friend, and now bitter enemy. With joy he sees it scatter into a million pieces; then it unites once more and pursues him madly. Exhausted, he at length escapes to the shade of a friendly tree. Here he falls asleep only to be awakened and deluged from above, where the bottle, having climbed the tree, is pouring its contents over his aching head. He comes to and finds that Liza has revived him with the contents of a milk jug, prefering a live drunkard to a dead husband.

MUSTANG.

"DOUBLE CROSSED" (Three parts—Feb. 25) The cast: John Kling (Thomas Chatterton); Ort Lemp (Jack Richardson); Anna Kling, John's wife (Anna Little). Directed by Tom Chatterton.

Big-hearted John Kling, a stock raiser, made his money by struggling for it. He mingled with his "boys," shared in their joys and helped them through their sorrows. Anna, Kling's wife, longed for his personal devotion, thinking because he was so engrossed in his business that he neglected her, though he is working for her alone.

Lemp is a tramp. He has but one redeeming trait and that is his personality. Kling receives a rush order from Drift & Co., the packers. The boys work with tireless energy for the man they love and the train starts for the East on schedule time. It is a long hard pull and the heavily taxed engine has all it can do to draw the train load of cattle to the summit. Kling's consignment almost reaches the top when the coupling, back of the engine, snaps and the trainload of cattle starts downgrade. The telegraph operator sees the runaway train and wires Kling. He and one of the men leave on a hand car, pumping their way toward where they suppose the wreck will be. The crew has deserted, but Lemp was on the train.

Using the European war as a background the author has succeeded in evolving a plot which, while embracing the leading features of the great conflict, does not give offense to any of the participants.

In the role of Rhoda Lyons, a western girl who is studying abroad when the war breaks and unwillingly drawn into the maelstrom of conflicting forces, Miss Gerber combines the daintiness of innocent girlhood with the intense dramatic action of the western character, which seeks obstacles for the sheer joy of overcoming them.

Death stares him in the face, but Lemp is no coward. He climbs the ladder to the top of the train and works the chain brakes. When Kling comes up to the standing train, he thanks Lemp and gives him a chance to make good. Kling shares his business and home with Lemp, and Lemp falls in love with Anna. Anna repulses Lemp's profession of love. Kling's attention lags and Lemp's increases and Anna, discontented, finds some comfort in the only companionship offered, while Kling is working to earn money for her pleasure.

Kling leaves one night to oversee his boundary posts. Lemp pleads with Anna to go away with him. Kling's horse steps into a chuck and breaks a leg. Kling, returning to the ranch for another mount, through a window of the house sees Lemp and Anna together. He hears Lemp's entreaties and he sees Anna draw a gun when Lemp oversteps himself. Kling laughs bitterly but treats Lemp as though nothing had happened. He inveigles him into a stock deal, advances him money and takes his share in the ranch as security. When word comes that all is lost, Kling has his revenge, for he shows Lemp the cowboys driving his cattle onto Kling's land, and Lemp realizes that he is ruined. He pleads with Kling, but Kling taunts him. He locks the door and turning to Lemp, accuses him of trying to steal his wife, and forces him to fight.

Anna, hearing sounds of the scuffle, beats upon the locked door and begs and pleads that they stop. But Kling was beating an everlasting lesson into Lemp and when he has finished, Lemp has learned his lesson well. Then Kling turns to Anna, tells her of his great love, and their reconciliation is complete.

AMERICAN.

"LIFE'S HARMONY" (Three parts—Feb. 22.) The cast: Faith Pringle (Vivian Rich); Josiah Pringle (George Periolat); Gordon Howard (Alfred Vosburgh). Directed by Frank Borzage.

Josiah Pringle, a benevolent old musician, who ekes out his livelihood by giving music lessons, after playing the organ for twenty years in the church of a little New England hamlet, must make way for a younger man, Gordon Howard, who comes from Boston. Faith Pringle, adopted by Josiah and his aged sister, Letitia, is leader of the choir, and when Pringle is replaced, she refuses to sing, but relents at Pringle's gentle insistence. When the new organist appears, Pringle's pupils leave him for the younger man, but he feels no resentment against Howard and compliments him on his playing.

A young ruffian attacks Faith, but Howard rescues her and Pringle, deeply appreciative, invites Howard to the house. For many years Pringle has been working upon an improvement in organs. He shows the model to Howard who discovers a point that has baffled the old musician for ten years. The young ruffian, seeking a way to revenge himself on Howard through Pringle, shows Pringle a newspaper bearing the picture of a young man, resembling Howard closely, sought as an embezzler, but Pringle, in his kindly way, says that if Howard has reformed, he will not be the first to persecute him.

Pringle places his model in the hands of Howard, to obtain a patent. Howard writes that he has secured an advance of $20,000 royalties and they hear nothing further from him. As the weeks drag by and Pringle's small store of money is exhausted, he and his sister are forced to the decision that Faith must be returned to the orphanage whence she came. The day of her departure comes all too soon. At the last moment, Howard comes in and explains that after receiving the money he placed it in a safe for the time being. In passing a building in the course of construction, he was injured. At the hospital to which he was taken, no means of identification were found on him, and just as soon as he recovered his memory he returned to the Pringles. The cloud on his antecedents is cleared when he looks at the newspaper pictures and says "My brother—the poor fellow is dead now."

Through Howard's influence, Pringle is reinstated as organist and the friendship between Faith and Howard quickly ripens into love.

RUTH'S REMARKABLE RECEPTION (Feb. 22).—The cast: Ruth (Frances Keyes); Butler (Jay Yorke); Head Conspirator (Gus Anderson); His Helper (Arthur Le Vin); Student of Ruskin (Maurice Steuart).

Ruth, an old maid, was the only one who had ever visited Hades Square and felt sorry for the poor little children there. It was a favorite place to send new policemen and test their courage, and if they were alive at the end of the week they were considered good cops.

The old maid decided to invite the boys of Hades Square to her home for a children's party. Settlement workers who realized what was in store for the kind-hearted woman pleaded with her to abandon her purpose.

In spite of protests, however, the old maid had her way, and the dirty-faced little boys came to her home to the party prepared for them. She invited them to have a good time and enjoy themselves, and they did. The dignified butler felt the impact of a missile from a sling-shot, a rare and expensive statue was destroyed during a fist fight between two of the "dears," while the chandeliers in the reception room crashed to the floor during acrobatic stunts performed by one of the children.

A little boy sat on the steps of his home, next door to the old maid, reading a volume of Ruskin. He was just the kind of child that the bad boys from Hades Square would delight to torment. He was deeply immersed in Ruskin when a lassoo thrown by an expert hand landed around his neck and he was jerked, protesting, into the house next door.

The bad little boys were very rude to the student of Ruskin, but they got the surprise of their lives when their prisoner, angered by their disrespect for his favorite author, soundly trounced them all, and converted them into eager, if unwilling, students of Ruskin.

As the children were leaving, their meek attitude, far different from their former belligerency, their tough leader asked the studious little boy if he could borrow his copy of Ruskin. The student of Ruskin agreed, and asked why he wanted to read it.

"Well, it's dis," said the boy from Hades Square. "You seem to do everything to this book except swaller it, and you're de best rough-house scrapper I ever seen, so I guess when I get through chewin' de words in dat book I'll be able to lick every kid in de square."

PERKINS' PEACE PARTY (Feb. 24).—Henry Perkins (Walter Heirs); His Wife (Louise Emerald Bates); Sailor (Riley Chamberlin).

Among his neighbors Henry Perkins was regarded as a human incarnation of the Dove of Peace. He hated strife. But Henry Perkins' domestic existence was one of domestic warfare. His wife had a high-geared tongue and Henry's sister, who lived with them, could also talk like a house afire. They nearly drove Henry distracted, one day he disappeared, leaving a note to his wife in which he said: "I cannot stop the fighting in my own home, so I am going abroad to stop the war in Europe."

Henry went away with one of his pals, a business man who claimed he had been ruined by the way. They traveled in Henry's Ford car, all the way from Jacksonville, Florida, to New York, picking up en route a tramp whom they ran over. To prevent him from suing for damages, they offered him a free trip to Europe, but the prospects of the trip looked dubious when they lost their car through a crack in a New York sidewalk, it carrying along most of their funds. Then they met a kindly sailor man, who offered them a free trip to Europe, because he was in sympathy with their project. He told them it would be necessary to stow them away, but added "after we are out on blue water you will be my honored guests."

The kindly sailor, as it later developed, was a fraud. His ship was shorthanded, and the unfortunate peace advocates found that they were compelled to work their passage. Worse than that, the ship did not go to Europe but returned to Jacksonville, their home town, and Henry's wife was waiting at the dock. Much to Henry's surprise she put all the blame on the others, and vengefully horsewhipped them, then leading Henry back to his home. Perkins never again attempted to interfere with the war in Europe. He decided that the best thing to do was to remain at his own fireside.

"PADDY'S POLITICAL DREAM" (Feb. 10). Directed by Jack Dillon.

Paddy is a laborer who goes to sleep during his noon hour and dreams that he has been lifted to the rank of a political boss. His first official act is to enter a saloon where he is immediately the center of an admiring company of hangers-on, bums, etc., and the object of the particular attention of the bartender. Going down the street he encounters a widow who is in straitened circumstances and he furnishes her with money to supply the daily bread. Nearby he notes his political antagonist, Eddy Simpson, making a stump speech to a large crowd of factory hands. He immediately calls his henchmen, the police among the number, and starts a riot which results in breaking up the political mass meeting and scattering the crowd to the four winds.

Paddy has a great pull at police headquarters and when some of the rioters are brought in, he shows his power by securing the release of his own sympathizers and throwing the ward-heelers of the opposition into jail. Being a friend of the people, he is very hard on autoists who break the speed laws, etc. Consequently, the motorist who comes under the wrath of the court is very thoroughly fined and given the limit of the law.

Paddy's office is located next door to the police station and constant communication is established by means of a chute through which various donations from those seeking political help come. Local merchants send various gifts of produce—meat, etc.—in lieu of cash. The local butcher, from whom money is expected, makes the fatal mistake of sending Paddy a side of beef. Paddy's "meat inspector" consequently calls upon the unhappy butcher, finds his meat unfit for use and condemns the entire shop. Paddy is astonished to receive a coffin containing a dead man as graft from the undertaker. Supposed dead man, however, comes to life and smokes Paddy's cigar. Before Paddy can overcome his confusion the man escapes.

When an important election comes up Paddy has completed a very strong organization which works for him at the polls with the result that there is very much adroit stuffing of the ballot boxes. When a voter in his booth starts to mark the wrong side of the ballot, the curtains part and Paddy appears with a large mallet. Unless the voter changes his mind and his vote, the mallet does terrible execution. As a result of Paddy's strenuous efforts, there are very few votes for the opposition and while he is gloating over his political power and success of his various methods, the one o'clock whistle blows surely. Paddy wakes up to find that his political triumphs have only been a dream.

IGORROTES, CROCODILES AND A HAT BOX (Feb. 13.) The cast: Madame Parlevoo (Louise Alva Owen); Count Romany, a spy (Arthur Moon); Baron Pooh Pooh, also a spy (Paddy McQuire); Josie, Madame's friend (Priscilla Dean). Directed by Jack Dillon.

Madame Parlevoo, a foreign emissary is carrying a hat box in which a secret code is hidden and this information is contained in a letter addressed to Count Romany a spy in the employ of the army of the unemployed.

Romany calls his chief lieutenant, Baron Pooh Pooh by name and orders him to get the code which Madame is carrying in the hat box. As Madame is stopping at the sea shore the spies go there and after many attempts Baron Pooh Pooh finally succeeds in purloining the coveted hat box.

The theft of this causes him, in his attempts to escape to enter the village of an Igorrote chieftain who declares the Baron's intrusion to be a violation of an inviolate law of their religion and the only atonement to appease the anger of their God is the blood of the Baron.

The Igorrotes tie him to a lunging board and throwing spears at him are about to make the fatal lunge, when Count Romany appears on the scene, and interrupts the execution by stealing the hat box. The sacrifice of the Baron is abandoned until the Count is captured the Igorrotes overtaking the latter in an alligator farm, where he takes refuge in the section of an old alligator. They are about to lead him back to the village when the police intervene and learning of the theft, open the box to find it empty.

AT THE END OF HIS ROPE (Feb. 17).—The cast: Rube (Rube Miller); Madge (Madge Kirby); School Teacher (Alice Neice); Slick-Fingered Matt (Arthur Tavares).

"You'll have to ask father," declares Madge. Father, a redoubtable sheriff, is reading a poster promising a liberal reward for the arrest, dead or alive, of Slick-Fingered Matt. The poster shows a large, lifelike portrait of Matt. Rube interviews the sheriff, argues with him and finally fights with him. He is considerably worsted in the mixup. The young couple decide to elope. But they lack money enough. The sheriff goes to the village and posts the reward notice, where it is viewed by Matt, whom the sheriff fails to recognize because Matt is using a baffling disguise—a large black moustache. Matt, however, is recognized by Rube, who decides to catch him and win the reward money.

Matt knows the School Teacher and sends a note to her telling her to dismiss school and meet him by appointment. The scene changes to the school room, where Madge is blowing beans at the School Teacher. She is in danger of severe punishment when Matt's note arrives and school is dismissed. Rube, in the meantime, arrives and flirts with the School Teacher, but is settled by Matt—with a mallet. His prone form is concealed by the Teacher. The sheriff arrives. The School Teacher flirts with him and leads him on, all of which is seen by Madge at a window. In the meantime Rube revives and beats Matt, and Madge calls her mother, who finds the sheriff making undue advances to the School Teacher. A general chase results, in which Madge follows the School Teacher and Rube takes hotly after Matt. A posse of citizens, armed with brickbats, starts in pursuit.

Matt gains a hayloft and the girl follows. Matt seeks to escape by a hoist, but, while he goes down one side, Rube goes up on the other, and vice versa, thus frustrating his opportunity to get away. Finally Madge jumps on a rope with Rube, and the crook is cornered, and both Matt and the School Teacher taken into custody. Rube wins the reward money, which is more than sufficient for his elopement with Madge.

HEAVEN WILL PROTECT A WOIKING GOIL (Feb. 20).—The cast: The hero (Russ Powell); the heroine (Priscilla Dean); the villain (Arthur Moon); his accomplice (Paddy McQuire); the shop girl (Louise Owen).

The villain is having a stormy interview with his accomplice. They argue over a matter of ten cents, which the villain advanced to the tool the day previous. The scene changes to Nellie's home in the country, where the hero, Joe, is taking leave of Nellie's mother, promising to find the heroine who has gone to the city in search of her drunken father. Joe beats his way on a freight train. In the meantime, the villain and his accomplice are making attempts to lure away a sales girl in a nearby department store. During their nefarious operations, the tool spies Nellie on the street, and follows her. He is joined by the villain in an automobile.

By a ruse, they get Nellie into their car and take her to the villain's office. The villain has a terrific struggle with Nellie. Nellie bests the villain and escapes. The shop girl is discharged and is given notice by her landlord that unless she pays the rent she must leave. She is just in the act of taking poison when Joe, who has found Nellie, arrives. The bottle of poison, thrown out into the hall, accidentally strikes the villain, and he and his accomplice enter, endeavoring to capture the shop girl. But she escapes. Joe and Nellie get away in a "Flivver." The villain and his accomplice give furious chase. They capture Joe and Nellie and brutally tie them to a railroad track.

A passenger train is approaching. As it draws nearer and nearer, Joe and Nellie struggle furiously to free themselves, but are unable to do so. In the nick of time they are saved by a passing tramp. During this time the shop girl has warned the local police, who gave chase to the villains. Their automobile has been disabled, so they get away in the "Flivver." They accidentally take a terrible leap over a dizzy cliff to a point several hundred feet below, but escape injury. However, they are well punished for their attempted villainy and decide to permanently leave the territory.

SEE AMERICA FIRST NO. 22.—"The Home of the Lumber Jack" (Feb. 23).—Each part of the country has its traditions, and in the north pine wood country the traditions are those of the lumberjacks, who are fast disappearing with the depletion of the forests. In this installment the Mutual Traveler spends the day in the home of these great, strong, picturesque fellows among their giant pines. She is shown visiting the shanties, where each lumberjack has his bunk and the mess cabin, famous for its excellent food. Then are pictured the two methods of logging—the old, which was by the use of horses the new, by wire cables, which drag the logs to the railway. The pretty Traveler is shown out in the woods with the men at work with their axes and saws, and she herself takes a hand in chopping down the great kings of the forest.

Not to be outdone in picturesqueness, Miss Mutual Traveler is garbed in a costume quite as interesting as that of the men. On her feet she has dainty moccasins, on her head a jaunty skating cap, and her body is enveloped in a gay, warm mackinaw.

This glimpse of the life of Minnesota's lumberjacks, who spend all their winter in the woods and come down in gangs in the spring

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 23, "Key West, Fla." (Feb. 20).—Tropical Florida offers such wonderful wintering facilities that the mutual Traveler can't resist them, so in the Gaumont (Mutual) split reel scenic, "See America First," No. 23, she takes her audiences with her on a jaunty little trip along the famous trestle railroad down to Key West, in the midst of its sparkling waters. And then she visits all the wonder spots of the place and sees the tropical foliage, the flowers, the fruits, the drives and the picturesque homes. She also visits a tortoise shell factory, where she is given a wonderful and costly comb to take back up North with her as a proof that she had visited the South.

KEEPING UP WITH THE JONESES (On the same reel with "See America First," No. 23).—In the second half of the picture, "Pa" McGinnis has a lot of fun "Keeping Up With the Joneses." Harry Palmer, the famous cartoonist, makes him do it, much against his will, and to "Ma" McGinnis' disgust.

LIFE'S BLIND ALLEY (American—Five parts—Feb. 17). The cast: Walt Landis (Harold Lockwood); Helen Keating (May Allison); Rose McKee (Nell Franzen).

After a long, dry season, Walt Landis, the owner of an isolated ranch, is in desperate need of water. His cattle are dying for lack of it. The young ranchman tried to persuade his neighbors to let him use their water supply but they refuse to accept his note, and he has no money.

Walt wins the devotion of Wampanah, an Indian, by saving him from a poisonous snake. But he distressed the redskin greatly by killing the snake. It is Manpanah's belief, according to the traditions of his race, that the snake is the messenger to propitiate the rain god.

They wait and wait for rain, but none falls. At length, one day, Walt saves the life of an Eastern millionaire, Adam Keating. The older man's daughter, Helen, is sent for, and comes West to take care of her father during his illness. Hearing of Walt's predicament and moved by gratefulness, the Easterner buys an interest in the young man's ranch, and advances money to help him from his distressful predicament.

As the father and daughter linger, Walt becomes more and more in love with Helen. After their return home, he follows them to the East, and proposes to Helen. Used as she is to the more cultivated but more shallow men of the East, Helen sends the stalwart rancher away, and marries a New York club man named Fred Sherwood. Walt, growing more lonely on his solitary ranch, at length marries Rose McKee, a factory girl, with whom he has come in correspondence by answering a note she had placed in a box of collars.

As time progresses, Helen's blase husband tires of married life. On Walt's ranch, Rose, used to the rush and whirr of busy life, is palled on by the solitude and pines for the city again. At length, weary of his son-in-law's dissipations, Helen's father sends his daughter and her husband to Walt's ranch, in which he still retains a share, to see if life out-of-doors will not have a regenerating effect upon the young man.

Thrown together, the four find themselves turning naturally to their tastes. Helen sees the real worth of Walt Landis. Fred finds Rose more to his taste than his wife. He flirts with her, and she is flattered by his attention. One day, Walt and Helen discover the two in each other's embraces. As they start to cross a stream, Rose and Fred are caught in the quicksands.

It seems like a solution to their problem to the young rancher. If the two would only sink to their death, he and Helen might be left to face happiness together. But his higher nature gets the better of him, and he saves them from a horrible death.

Helen and Sherwood return to their home in the East, mismated and unhappy as ever. Rose and Walt remain on their ranch with no bond of sympathy in common to see the wonder of the stars together, and be happy in the beauty of nature.

SILAS MARNER (Thanhouser—Five parts—Feb. 19).—The cast: Silas Marner (Frederick Warde); His Sweetheart (Louise E. Bates); Supposed Friend (Morgan Jones); Godfrey (Thomas Curran). The story of Silas Marner was that of a man who became embittered and estranged because of a false accusation for thievery which had been placed on his head by a friend whom he had trusted. Driven from his native town, he settled down, a miserable, unhappy weaver far from home, and let one passion—the love for gold—become the absorbing motive of his existence. In the town where he plied his trade lived Squire Cass, the father of two sons. One of them, Godfrey, by name, was a serious-purposed conscientious young man, on whom his father leaned for support. The other, Dunstan, the younger, was a spendthrift and a roysterer. As the elder son grew in favor with his father, and as his marriage to Nancy Lammeter, the daughter of a most respectable family, seemed imminent, Dunstan resolved that his brother should be forced to fall from grace.

Thereupon he succeeded in getting his elder brother under the influence of rum, as they were on a journey through the country, and while Godfrey was in this condition, Dunstan inveigled him into marrying a pretty barmaid. When he returned to sobriety, Godfrey was horrified at what he had done. He provided for his wife, and returned to his home. But Dunstan used this knowledge to force money from his brother's share. At length, the younger brother's rioting used up what money Godfrey could easily give him. Godfrey was forced to ask for time. As Dunstan returned from hunting one night, he stopped in Silas Marner's cabin as shelter from the rain. He discovered the miser's hidden gold, and taking it in his hands, ran from the house.

In the darkness and the rain, he did not see an old well near by. He fell into it, as he ran, and was drowned. Silas, on returning home, was nearly crazed at the loss of the only thing he loved in the world. Squire Cass and Godfrey, hearing nothing from Dunstan, believed that he had wearied of his restricted life, and thought that he had run away from home. And so Godfrey married Nancy, and the following New Year's Eve the Squire gave a ball.

That same night, Molly, Godfrey's bar-maid wife, decided that she would confront the squire's son with their child. But as she reached the road near Silas Marner's hut, she became exhausted from her journey through the snow, and fell by the way. Eppie, the child, ran to the light shining from Marner's window, entering the house, and fell asleep by the fire. The weaver was also asleep, and when he awoke and saw the child's golden hair shining in the fire light, he thought it was his gold come back to him. He reached for it and picked it up in his hands, to find that it was the curly locks of the child.

The mother's voice was heard calling, but when Silas reached her, she was unconscious. She later died. Godfrey, recognizing his barmaid wife in the dead woman, knew that Eppie was his own child. But he did not confess to Nancy—not until years had passed and life had granted them a childless fireside.

Then the Squire's eldest son told his wife the tale. Together they went to Marner's hut and begged Eppie to come with them. But she remained true to the old weaver who had grown to love her more than life itself. When the old well was drained, the remains of Dunstan were found, the money box clutched in his hands.

"I ACCUSE" (Gaumont—5 parts—Feb. 21.) The cast: Judge Gray (Alexander Gaden); Rev. Morgan Landman (Charles W. Travis); Eloise, his daughter (Helen Marten); Harold, his son (Albert Macklin); James Harrison (Henry W. Pemberton); Luke Harrison (John Reinhard); Jake (John Macklin); Banker Ward (W. J. Butler); Alice Ward (Iva Shepard); old man servant (James Levering); old woman servant (Mary I. Davis). Scenario by G. D. Proctor. Directed by William F. Haddock.

Robert Gray, a brilliant young lawyer, who has just been elevated to the bench, is greatly in love with Eloise, daughter of Reverend Morgan Landman, rector of the village church. Though well beloved by his flock, the rector has one failing—an ungovernable temper, which is evidenced when he discharges his coachman for a trivial offense. Unknown to anybody excepting the rector, Abel Harrison has a mortgage on the rector's home. James Harrison, the son is also in love with Eloise. When James proposes to Eloise she refuses him, and he taunts her with loving the judge, who has never asked for her love. The rector, coming on the scene, canes James. James induces his good-for-nothing brother Luke to take a job at the rector's left open by the discharge of the coachman.

Emboldened by his successful career, the judge proposes to Eloise and is accepted. They are about to be married when James Harrison comes to the judge and demands the arrest of the rector on a charge of murder. James says that the rector murdered his brother Luke, and produces numerous witnesses with seemingly conclusive proof. Much against his will, the judge is forced to issue the warrant and hear the case. The rector is found guilty of manslaughter and given a long term by the judge.

Meanwhile, in order not to hinder his career, Eloise refuses to marry the judge until her father is vindicated. James finds that he holds a mortgage on the Landman home, and turns Eloise and her brother Harold out of the house. Judge Gray tries to raise a loan to help Eloise, but the banker to whom he applies is the father of the girl, Alice Ward, whose advances the judge had received coldly. She blocks the loan.

Five years later, James Harrison, now a church warden, is haunted by memories of the rector. Thinking he sees the rector in his old pulpit he drops the collection plates and falls unconcious to the floor. The ordeal affects his mind and body. Meanwhile Luke, the good-for-nothing brother, is discharged from prison, where he has been serving a term for a minor offense. Luke is in the power of an evil man who demands money. Luke tries to raise money from his brother at whose house he is staying, concealing his identity from everybody, but his brother, James.

Refused by James, Luke puts his room in disorder, leaving bloodstains everywhere, thus manufacturing evidence of a probable murder. The old servants take the story to Judge Gray, who orders the arrest of James Harrison.

At the trial the jury failed to agree. The old servants came and asked the judge to go to the home where they were haunted by strange noises. The judge finds Luke Harrison there hiding in a closet. "It is Luke Harrison," cries the judge to Harold Landman. "Then your father and James Harrison are innocent men."

The appearance of Luke in the flesh automatically brings about the release of the rector. His story causes the conviction of James Harrison. The rector is reinstated in his position in the church and in the hearts of his parishioners. Eloise and Judge Gray are married by the rector a few days later.

THE OVAL DIAMOND (Thanhouser—Five Parts—Feb. 24).—The cast: Robert Ledyard (Harris Gordon); Sylvia Daunt (Barbara Gilroy); Her Uncle (Arthur Bauer).

The story is centered about an oval diamond, a priceless gem, found by a South African miner on his claim. His possession of it has aroused the envy of his stepbrother, Major Dennison, his former partner, and the latter's son, Arthur Dennison, and of four miners who owned adjacent claims. To escape their plotting to gain possession of the stone, the owner and his daughter, Sylvia, left for America.

Shortly after their arrival in the United States, however, Major Dennison and his son had effected an automobile accident with the taxicab in which Mr. Daunt and his daugther were riding, had killed his stepbrother, and had escaped with diamond. Later, on her search for the gem, Sylvia had gone to her uncle's house where she had been imprisoned and restrained from going beyond the high walls which enclosed the place.

All this had happened before the beginning of the play. Things of importance for Sylvia do not begin to happen until the entrance of Robert Ledyard, impressionable youth, over the garden wall. On a trip south, Robert discovers that there is something mysterious and unfathomable about the house next to the one in which his uncle, whom he is visiting, lives.

To further his suspicions, he discovers a very hampered and unhappy looking girl in the enclosed yard. Feeling certain that she is in trouble, he throws a note to her in which he offers his services, and asks her to nod her head if he can be of assistance. Hardly waiting for a reply, he follows his note over the garden wall, and learns the story of her distress. The complications which follow with the return of Major Dennison and his son before Robert has time to return to his uncle's house, start Robert's fight for the possession of the oval diamond.

Robert escapes, eludes now Major Dennison and his son, and later the four miners, who, too, have come to America determined to possess the diamond. He finds the diamond a thousand times and loses it again. It travels through hundreds of hands during the brief five thousand feet of its existence, but in the end it comes back to stay in the hands which own it. Sylvia marries Robert. They start North on their wedding trip. In his pocket the young bridegroom carries a small package which he carefully guards, feeling nervously now and again, to see that he has not lost it.

Following them is a mysterious character who watches and shakes his head shrewdly as he sees the evident feeling of insecurity which possesses Robert. As the young bride and groom sit on the rear platform of the train, the stranger appears before them, removes his mustache, and demands at the point of the pistol, that Robert hand over the small package in his pocket. It is Colby, one of the miners. Knowing that resistance is futile, the young man hands over his guarded package, and the thief drops from the speeding train. After he had gone, the young husband laughs, and pulls from an inside pocket the real diamond. The one he had given to Colby was paste.

A LAW UNTO HIMSELF (Five Parts—Centaur—Feb. 28).—The cast: Allan Dwight and Jean Belleau (Crane Wilbur); Bill Holden (Louis Durham); McFadden (E. W. Harris); Bob Clayton, Jean's friend (Carl von Schiller); Paul Belleau, Jean's younger brother (Francis Raymond); Pascal, a Mexican (Steve Murphy); Senator Thurston, his daughter (Virginia Kirtley). Written by Lillian V. Brockwell. Directed by Robert Brockwell.

Allan Dwight, sheriff, and Jean Belleau, a young French surveyor, live in Circle City. They bear such a striking resemblance that they can hardly be distinguished one from the other. Jean has a half-wit brother, Paul, whom Holden, a political crook, teases and bullies. Dwight catches him in the act, thrashes him, and incurs the enmity of the bully. That night Holden and Pascal, a Mexican, meet McFadden to get from him their share of money contributed by Senator Thurston for certain nefarious undertakings. McFadden does not turn over what Holden and Pascal consider their rightful share and they vow vengeance. Their opportunity comes when Paul, the half-wit, in trying to enter McFadden's outhouse to get his runaway dog, is menaced by McFadden. Pascal fires at McFadden, killing him, and then throws the gun and Paul beside the dead man. When the crowd, which is attracted by the shot, gathers around, Holden accuses Paul of the murder, and incites the mob to lynch him.

Bob Clayton, a friend of Jean's, attempts to stay them, but, being unsuccessful, he hurries to notify Jean and Dwight. Dwight arrives first and tries to circumvent the mob's fury. A struggle follows in the course of which Dwight is thrown against the barrel upon which Paul is standing and the boy is hung. Jean arrives and swears vengeance upon those responsible for his brother's death.

Dwight is in love with Evelyn, the daughter of Senator Thurston, who is in control of the party known as the Thurston gang. Dwight makes his feelings known in the matter of the gang's activities, and Evelyn feels that her father is the brunt of his remarks. Dwight, however, continues his course of attempting to stamp out the work of the gang. A month or so rolls by and a mysterious bandit appears. After each successful robbery he leaves a note signed "The Devil." He becomes so daring that a vigilante committee is organized to capture him.

In his mountain lair it is seen that "the devil" is none other than Jean Belleau. His lieutenants are Clayton and Holden, the latter having confessed to Jean that Pascal was his brother's murderer, causing Jean to end the Mexican's existence. Holden has grown jealous of Jean and makes known the bandit's identity to two detectives, advising them that he may be known by his horse, which is branded with the form of a pitchfork. When Jean goes to town he is pursued by the officers, but escapes capture by hiding in Dwight's automobile. Dwight learns that he is in his car, and, desirous to save the good that is in him, Dwight permits the bandit to take his car to escape while he takes charge of Jean's horse. Jean returns the car the next morning and leaves with it a note saying that he has decided to give up his lawless life.

Soon after Jean leaves after extracting a promise from his friend, Clayton, that he, too, will also abandon the life of an outlaw. Holden assumes the leadership of the gang and plans a bold daylight robbery, proposing to assume the character of "The Devil." Clayton overhears the plot and determines to frustrate it for the sake of "The Devil's" name. In the attempt Clayton is shot by Holden, who, with his gang, escapes to the mountain retreat.

When Dwight hears of the robbery and is told that "The Devil" is responsible, he determines to seek out Jean and either make a man of him or bring him back a prisoner. He starts out on Jean's horse. Meanwhile the vigilante committee is also bent upon entering the bandit mountain stronghold. Holden was badly wounded in the affray at the bank. Holden wounds Dwight and, noting the remarkable resemblance between the sheriff and Jean, he places evidences of the bank robbery upon the man he has wounded. So the posse finds Dwight, and, of course, their natural assumption is that Dwight has been the bandit.

Dwight is taken back to town and arraigned before the authorities. An account of the bandit's career is printed in the papers and attributed to Dwight. Jean, speeding Eastward on a train, reads the story and, realizing the situation, wires back to the Circle City authorities to stop prosecution until he arrives. He does return and Dwight is released from custody. The police are anxious to run down Holden and offer Jean certain clemency if he will lead them to the mountain stronghold, where Holden and his men are hidden. Jean consents to avenge the death of his friend Clayton, at Holden's hands.

When Jean and the posse arrive a pitched battle takes place. At last Jean and Holden meet. After a terrific fight Jean succeeds in rolling Holden over to the edge of a cliff. Holden falls over it, but Jean, with a firm grip upon his wrists, holds him suspended in midair as he himself lies at the edge of the cliff on his breast. One of the bandits takes aim and fires at Jean. As the bullet enters his body Jean, with a convulsive movement, loosens his hold on Holden's wrists and the latter is dashed on the rocks thousands of feet below.

Jean struggles to his feet and tries to make his way back to the posse, but only succeeds in reaching his faithful horse and at her side he falls. Meanwhile Dwight has recovered from his wounds and found a happy resting place in the arms of Evelyn.

Triangle Film Corp.

HONOR'S ALTAR (Kay-Bee—Feb. 20).—The cast: Frederick Mallery (Walter Edwards); Winnie Mallery (Bessie Barriscale); Warren Woods (Lewis Stone); Dolly (Lola May); Paul (Robert McKim).

Frederick Mallery, a self-made millionaire, wants to get rid of his faithful wife, Winnie Mallery. At a club Mallery hears Warren Woods boast to his cronies that he has lost his sense of honor. Later Mallery makes Woods an offer of $50,000 if he will win the affections of Mrs. Mallery and so free him. Woods agrees. With the connivance of the husband who is always claiming to be busy, Woods takes the woman to receptions, dinners and balls.

Finally Woods manages to break down toward dusk at a notorious roadhouse. He induces Mrs. Mallery to enter the place. Then he thinks to compromise her by informing her husband where she is. But her trust in his manhood overcomes this idea. He gets an automobile and takes her home. Woods lures Mallery to the house that night, promising to show he has won over Mrs. Mallery. Instead he meets him outside the door, scores him as unworthy of a good woman's love, and tears up the check for $50,000 he has received. Mallery is humiliated, but goes up to his wife's room and is forgiven.

HIS PRIDE AND SHAME (Keystone—Two Parts—Feb. 20).—The cast: Chief of police (Ford Sterling); mayor (Guy Woodward); his daughter (Juanita Hansen); chief's son (Bobbie Vernon); chief crook (Bobbie Dunn).

A band of crooks make life interesting for everybody concerned. First the police capture the chief crook. Later he gets free and is recaptured by the chief of police. Then the chief's son is locked up in the cell, while the crook hies himself away. But the police chief's son makes good in the end by helping the mayor's daughter to freedom across slippery roofs, narrow girders and finally across a cable. The chief of police and the mayor get all tangled up together and sometimes mistake each other for crooks and fight desperately.

HELL'S HINGES (Kay-Bee—Feb. 20).—The cast: Blaze Tracy (William S. Hart); Faith Henley (Clara Williams); Rev. Robert Henley (Jack Standing); Silk Miller (Alfred Hollingsworth); Clergyman (Robert McKim); Zeb Taylor (J. Frank Burke); Dolly (Louise Glaum).

To the tough western town named Hell's Hinges come the Rev. Robert Henley and his sister, Clara Williams. Silk Miller, the crafty saloon and gambling house keeper, stirs up sentiment against the better element. Some rough men and women interrupt the service. Blaze Tracy, a notorious gun man, drives the bunch out of the church when one of the men insults Faith. Silk decoys Henley to his saloon, where Dolly, one of the dance hall girls, induces him to drink till he is intoxicated.

Blaze goes away to a nearby town to fetch an organ for the church. On his return he finds the church burned down, Henley killed and Faith brokenhearted over the disaster that has come to the good element. In fury Blaze shoots the treacherous Silk, sets the saloon on fire and sees the flames wipe out the town as the result of a high wind. He takes Faith away with him, saying that their future would henceforth lie beyond the mountains.

DAPHNE AND THE PIRATE (Fine Arts—Feb. 20).—The cast: Daphne La Tour (Lillian Gish); Philip de Mornay (Elliott Dexter); Jamie d'Arcy (Walter Long); Prince Henry (Howard Gaye); Fanchette (Lucille Younge); Francois La Tour (Richard Cummings); Duc de Morney (Jack Cosgrave).

Tiring of the idle life at court, young Philip de Mornay goes on a hunting trip with his father, Duc de Mornay. Philip comes across Daphne La Tour, the daughter of the gamekeeper. As she eludes him, he has some toughs in his pay to steal her. She is taken to the house of one Fanchette in Paris. All the women of this place are seized by officers and sent on a ship to America, where they are to be auctioned off as wives for the planters.

Meanwhile, Philip has quarreled with the King's Counsellor. In a fight he thinks he has killed the official. He flees to the purlieus of the city, joins a band of pirates and goes to sea. There is a fight between the pirate ship and the ship bearing the women. The pirates are defeated at the last moment by the bravery of Daphne. As a reward she claims the life of Philip. On shore he rescues her just as she is to be married to Jamie d'Arcy. Philip and Daphne are married, and afterward live happily in France as people of rank.

SOUTHERN MOTION PICTURE CORPORATION

Petersburg, Va., December 13th, 1915.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:—

We have in our Petersburg Theatres four Pannill Screens that have given entire satisfaction for over four years and a new Gold Screen that we have just had installed by Mr. Pannill gives us the prettiest picture in the city.

Dear Sir:—

After installing your screen in Columbia Theatre I had to reduce my amperage ten amp. less than before. I only use 25 amp. at 60 feet throw for picture 10 x 14, and have as good picture if not better than any in Norfolk.

I will make sworn statement to above facts if wanted.

Mr. Henry Pannill,
Norfolk, Va.

Dear Sir:—

At your request I visited the Strand Theatre several evenings during the past week. They are using the Pannill's Gold Picture Screen. I observed a marked difference in the softness of the pictures—the pictures stood out clear and well defined, and there seemed to be an entire absence of irritation or strain upon the eyes which often troubles one in other screens.

I think your screen is a great improvement over many of the old ones that I have seen.

Yours truly,

VULTURES OF SOCIETY (Essanay—Five Parts—Feb. 14).—The cast: Teddy Bimms (Lillian Drew); Eloise Cleverman (Marguerite Clayton); Raymond Raphael (E. H. Calvert); Abraham Cleverman (Ernest Maupain); Mrs. Cleverman (Florence Oberle); Joseph Gripp (Edward Arnold); Diamond Kate (Mae Howard); Prince Aggregio (Hugh Thompson); Baird (A. W. Bates).

A little waif of the prairie, "Teddy" Bimms, grows to girlhood under the care of a rancher who had known her father before he was shot by Mexicans. Baird decides to send her East to school, "to make a lady out of her," and while she is in the midst of her studies he dies, leaving no will.

With little money and no friends she seeks the city and employment as a stenographer. Her smart appearance wins her work, but when she refuses to comply with all the employer's conditions she is invariably discharged. She finally gives up the struggle after obtaining a position as secretary to the great Abraham Cleverman, millionaire merchant. She had been temporarily aided financially by Raymond Raphael, a fellow roomer, who saved her from being thrown into the street. She was destined to meet the debonair Raymond again.

Mrs. Cleverman, society leader, is preparing for the most brilliant event of the season—the debut of her daughter Eloise, who but a short time before had created consternation in the family by dancing on a table in a gay midnight cafe. Teddy Bimms demands Cleverman obtain an invitation. It is sent to her under the name of Senorita Theodora De Menza.

In the meantime Raymond Raphael, who is leader of a band of society thieves, finds that his resemblance to Prince Aggregio makes things easy. He kidnaps the Prince and poses as Aggregio himself. The real noble is imprisoned in "Diamond Kate's" home. Raymond goes to the Cleverman reception.

He meets Teddy and makes love to her. She later catches him in a daring theft of a tiara and learns his game, but says nothing. Eloise tires of the party and joins her Bohemian companions. Later she is carried into the "Diamond Kate" flat intoxicated. She is locked in a room. But Teddy, returning home in a taxi, sees it all. She enlists Gripp, the detective, who had been on the trail of the jewel thieves.

In a daring attempt she liberates Eloise. Later police raid the flat and the Prince is freed.

"There is your rescuer," Gripp tells the Prince, pointing to Teddy. The gratitude of the Prince is unbounded.

Cleverman decides to come to an understanding with Teddy.

"We must break. What's your price?" are his words here.

"Your coffee plantation in South America and $500,000," she replies.

He pays and shortly after the Princes Aggregio, she who had been a prairie wolf, sails for Brazil with her Italian nobleman husband.

KENNEDY SQUARE (Vitagraph—Five Parts—Feb. 21).—The cast: St. George Temple (Charles Kent); Harry Rutter (Antonio Moreno); Kate Seymour (Muriel Ortriche); Hon. Douglas Seymour (Thom Brooke); Landon Willetts (Raymond Bloomer); Colonel Rutter (Dan Jarrett); Mrs. Rutter (Hattie Delara); Doctor (Harold Foshay); Pawson (Herbert Barry); Artig (Logan Paul). Produced by S. Rankin Drew. Author, F. Hopkinson Smith.

St. George Temple, a typical Maryland gentleman of the old school, lives in an aristocratic home on Kennedy Square, liked and respected by everyone. Harry Rutter, a warm-blooded young Southerner, tells him of his falling out with Grace Seymour, with whom he is in love, and her father, the Hon. Douglas Seymour, on account of his having been intoxicated. The old Southerner gives him a good scolding, then promises to act as peacemaker. He does so very effectively, and some time later, in a reception in the Rutter home, the engagement is about to be announced when he gets into a quarrel with Willetts, who is also in love with Kate. Words come to blows, and the two men fight a duel in one of the outbuildings by torchlight. Willetts is severely wounded. Colonel Rutter, the boy's father, disowns him, angrily exclaiming that he has disgraced himself, his family and broken every

FACIAL EXPRESSION

Film Producers spend staggering sums in salaries to actors and actresses, who, with their knowledge of "FACIAL EXPRESSION," convey to us the trend and plot of the play—wonderful, yes, MARVELOUS! Often a "hidden smile" or "wink" will convey to the audience that which words would be inadequate to describe—and all in the fraction of a second.

What if the screen shows a CLOUDY picture and the highlights and the shadows of the face are "flat"—the audience did not SEE THE POINT. WHAT THEN! Just mingle with your audience to-night and you'll KNOW.

Is it any wonder that some exhibitors fail? No, they go down by mere force of gravity.

The MINUSA GOLD FIBRE SCREEN, "Built by Brains," will show your films in their "True Light"—to the highlights on a single hair. The facial expression will be as in real life—soft, beautiful. While a "Minusa" shows a very Brilliant, Natural picture, it is not glaring, and WILL NOT TIRE THE EYES!

Get a "Minusa" and watch YOUR facial expression change. You'll SMILE—Always.

law of hospitality. Kate refuses to see him, and Rutter turns to his friend, St. George, who takes the boy to live with him. Kate remains firm, and the Colonel cuts both his son and St. George at the club.

The Patopsco Bank fails and St. George mortgages his home to pay Harry's debts. He learns this, and goes to South America. There, after many exciting adventures, he is given a half interest in a valuable ruby mine by Senor Ortiz, a wealthy South American, and Harry's fortune is made. Shortly after, Harry returns to his old Maryland home to find St. George living in extreme poverty. He buys back the old home and restores the old gentleman to his proper position; then a reconciliation is effected by Colonel Rutter asking his son's pardon. The meeting between Kate and Harry is brought about, and Kate, with a cry of joy, comes into Harry's arms.

HER BLEEDING HEART (Lubin—Five Parts—Feb. 28).—The cast: Marion Lane (Rosetta Brice); Dr. George Page (Richard Buhler); Allen Craven (Crauford Kent); Lucy Mallory (Inez Buck); Sonia Crator (Karva Poloskova); Mr. Lane (William Turner); Mrs. Lane (Mrs. Carr). Written by Daniel Carson Goodman. Directed by Jack Pratt.

Marion Lane lives with her parents in a small town in the Middle West. Being the possessor of a fairly good voice, Marion is jollied along by her vocal teacher and her friends who insist that if she could only get to the city and complete her studies she would become a second Patti. Marion persuades her parents to let her go to the city and later through a girl friend, who is studying art at the Academy, Marion is introduced into the best social set. She meets Allen Craven who takes advantage of her innocence and then runs away, leaving Marion to bear the responsibility of her indiscretion alone. Later at the maternity hospital, Marion meets Dr. George Page, who becomes interested in her, believing her to be a poor young widow.

Marion grows despondent and tries to commit suicide, but is prevented from doing so by Dr. Page, who cheers her up and gives her a new incentive in life through a suggestion that she study nursing. Upon her recovery Marion takes a course in nursing and after her graduation she becomes Dr. Page's most valuable assistant. Gradually Page and Marion grow to love each other, and after a time Page proposes marriage, but Marion will not listen because of her past. Finally through reading a book that dwells with great emphasis on the very same subject, Marion changes her mind and becomes the wife of Dr. Page. For a while all goes well. Then one night Dr. Page takes Marion to a skating rink. Among the skaters Marion recognizes Craven. He is in the company of a celebrated Russian dancer, who has been his mistress for years. Dr. Page seeing Marion's agitation, thinks her ill and takes her home, where unable to stand the strain any longer, Marion confesses her past, withholding nothing. Although crazed by grief at Marion's confession, Dr. Page in his bigness blames only the man and prays that the time may come when he can get his hands on him.

After Dr. Page and Marion depart from the rink, Craven and Sonia leave their seats and at Sonia's solicitation, telephones to Dr. Page and asks him to join them at supper. Page declines, but in return invites Craven, who is his old time pal, to come to his (Page's) house, saying that he (Page) is in deep trouble and needs a friend's advice. Craven goes to Page's house, but leaves Sonia outside the door to wait for him. In the meantime Marion, believing that her confession has put an end to everything, has gone to her room and secured her husband's revolver and is just about to kill herself when she overhears Page and Craven talking. With the revolver clutched in her hand, Marion creeps softly downstairs to the room where the men are and suddenly the realization is brought to Dr. Page that the man who has been his life long chum, is the man who ruined his wife. Marion seeing the horror in her husband's face, faints, and Page with the cry of a maniac throws himself upon Craven.

A struggle ensues during which each man strives to secure possession of the revolver. A shot is heard, and Craven sinks to the floor. Sonia, hearing the shot, rushes into the house later when the servants arrive accompanied by a passing policeman. Sonia says "It was a clear case of suicide, I saw him shoot himself." Page with a look of gratitude to Sonia turns to Marion, folds her in his arms and leads her away.

DIMPLES (Columbia Pictures Corp.—Five Parts—Feb. 14).—The cast: Dimples (Mary Miles Minter); Her Father (William Cowper); His Friend, Horton (John J. Donough); Robert Stanley (Thomas J. Carrigan); Joseph Langdon (Schuyler Ladd); Melbourne Howard (Fred Tidmarsh); Eugenia Abbott (Peggy Hopkins); Mrs. Riley (Charlotte Shelby); Tom Craig (Harry Ford); Minister (William Raushser); His Wife (Mae De Metz).

Dimples lives with her father in an old attic room. He is a miser who hoards his gold in a bag hidden in the room. Dimples does not know about the money, but Horton, the miser's only companion, does. Dimples wants a doll, but her father is too miserly to buy it. Horton pawns his watch and gets a rag doll for Dimples making her happy.

Dimples' father dies suddenly, and Mrs. Riley, an aunt, who lives in a southern city, is notified. Mrs. Riley writes that she will come and get the little girl. Horton is afraid Dimples will lose her inheritance to this strange relative. He changes the gold into bills of large denomination and seeks a place to hide the money. He is followed to Dimples' home by Craig, a thief, who watches Horton sew the money inside the doll. Craig, in attempting to get the doll, kills Horton. People arrive and Craig is frustrated in his plan but escapes. Mrs. Riley takes Dimples south with her.

In a southern city Robert Stanley and Joseph Langdon are in love with Eugenia Abbott. Robert and Eugenia have been engaged since childhood. Langdon, meeting Robert in the club, accuses him of winning Eugenia through his money. Eugenia really loves Langdon, feels the childhood engagement is binding—besides Robert has a fortune. Langdon and Robert have a quarrel, which ends in Robert knocking Langdon down. Robert gets to thinking the matter over and writes Eugenia telling her he is penniless, and that he is willing for her to break the engagement if she desires. She is glad of a chance to escape and writes him to that effect. Langdon and Eugenia announce their engagement and Robert goes to the country for a few days to forget. Before leaving Robert places his entire fortune in the hands of his attorney, Welbourne Howard, and leaves for Mrs. Riley's farm, Mrs. Riley having advertised for boarders. On the farm Robert meets Dimples and she falls in love with him. He also is smitten by her, but hesitates to speak his heart on account of her youth.

One day a panic occurs on the stock exchange and Robert's entire fortune is swept away. Howard sends a messenger boy to the Riley farm to notify Robert that he must have more money to protect his margins. Meantime, Craig, the thief, discovers where Dimples and her doll have gone. He makes his way to the Riley farm, where he steals the doll. Robert gives chase and overtakes the thief. Begging his freedom, Craig tells Robert of the money inside the doll. Robert cuts open the doll and finds the fortune. Just then the messenger boy arrives and Robert gets the telegram. He knows he has no money and he is ruined. Dimples sees a change come over him. Dimples finds the telegram as Robert wanders away to think over his troubles. Dimples has an idea. She manages to get the bicycle belonging to the messenger and hurries to town in time to save Robert's fortune with the money from the doll. There is a reversal and Robert cleans up a large sum of money. Howard takes an automobile to the farm and arrives there just as Dimples returns. Robert discovers that Dimples has saved him, and subsequently their fortunes and their hearts are united.

FOX FILM CORPORATION.

"THE FOOL'S REVENGE" (Five Parts—Feb. 13.)

Anson, a clown, lives happily with his wife and his small daughter until Randall, a wealthy libertine, begins to pay attention to Anson's wife. Randall alienates the love of Mrs. Anson and induces her to leave her home. Anson follows his wife to Randall's home, murders her and chokes Randall into unconsciousness. He disposes of his wife's body by throwing it over a cliff.

Anson transfers to his daughter the affection he formerly lavished on his wife. He makes money in the oil industry and leaves the stage. Despite his opulence and his love for his daughter, he can not forget the man who wrecked his home. He learns that Randall, now married, is to be the guest of a Mr. and Mrs. Mendell. Anson, who has become the partner of Mendell although the two have never met, sends word to Mendell that he is going abroad and that in his absence his business interests will be cared for by his confidential man. He suggests that his confidential man be allowed to take up residence in the Mendell household. The proposition is favorably received, and Anson, disguised as a butler, becomes an inmate of Mendell's home.

Mendell devotes no small attention to Mrs. Randall. When Anson discovers this he does everything in his power to aid Mendell in the latter's conquest of Mrs. Randall. Mendell, however, is also an admirer of Anson's daughter, Ethel, whom he has seen while out riding. Unaware that Ethel is Anson's daughter, he

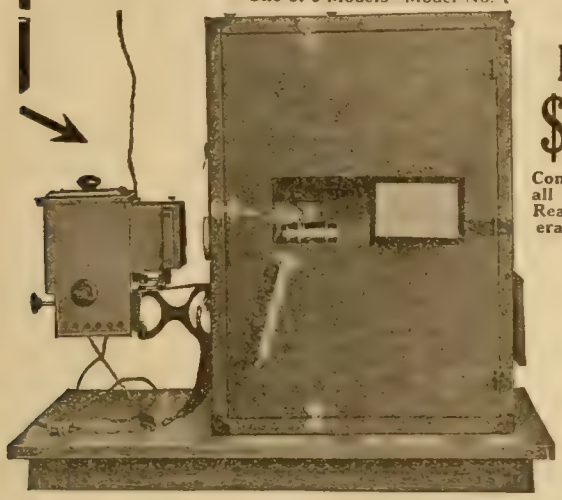
AT LAST!

A Really Portable Practical Motion Picture Projector

Thousands of lecturers, teachers and salesmen are demanding a really portable, easy-to-operate, fire-proof projector. One that will take regulation size film and project without the slightest flicker. The Portoscope is up to standard in every respect—the standard of modern cinematography. You can supply this great demand by selling the PORTOSCOPE.

One of 3 Models—Model No. 1



Price $135

Complete with all equipment. Ready to operate.

The PORTOSCOPE

The Portoscope has won the hearty approval of professional and business people who have improved their work with Portoscope Visual Instruction. It is portable and practical. Takes a regulation film—has absolutely no flicker. It is perfect mechanically—sturdily constructed to withstand the hard usage to which a portable machine is subjected, but nothing sacrificed in durability to eliminate weight.

Compact—Size of Suitcase

The Portoscope is built into a carrying case, which is the size of a suitcase—weight about 30 pounds. Simply constructed. Any one can set it into operation in four minutes. Any table furnishes suitable stand.

When a booth is required we supply same—a portable, light, fire-proof booth, easily set up and taken down. But with our standard equipment there is

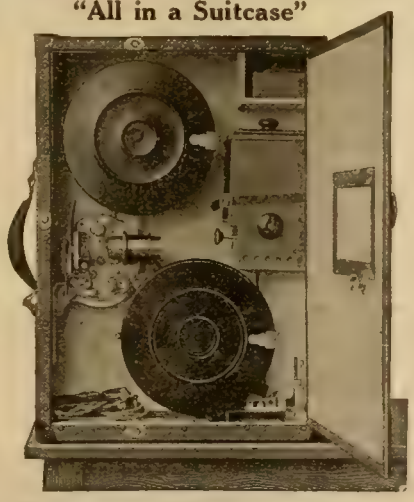
No Booth Needed

The Portoscope is absolutely safe. The Portoscope Fire-Shutter is positively automatic. The fire-proof film magazines are enclosed in an asbestos-lined case, making the entire outfit doubly safe. The case door must be closed before it is possible to operate the machine.

Safely Shows "Still" Pictures

The Portoscope Heat Eliminator makes it possible to stop the machine and show detail in any certain picture—no chance of film fire. This Heat Eliminator permits only cool, strong white light to strike the film.

"All in a Suitcase"



Has Stereopticon Attachment

The Portoscope can be instantly adjusted for stereopticon purposes. There are also many other distinctive features too numerous to mention here. Don't wait—write us today for booklet. Get in touch with a proposition that is a real money maker. Just the thing you have been looking for.

breaks into Anson's home, carries off Ethel and speeds away in an automobile. En route to his special apartment, the machine is wrecked and Ethel is knocked unconscious. She is taken into the Mendell home and placed in bed in the room which has been vacated by Mrs. Randall, who tired of Mendell's attentions.

Mendell, recovering from slight injuries sustained during the automobile accident, returns to his home. He goes to the room in which Ethel is sleeping. Anson, unaware that it is his own daughter in the room, suggests that Mendell take the woman he admires to his apartment. Anson slips into the room, chloroforms his own daughter in the belief that she is Mrs. Randall, and carries her off to the den maintained by Mendell. He leaves her in the power of Mendell and then telephones Randall that Mrs. Randall is in an apartment with Mendell. Randall hurries to the apartment, kills Mendell and then discovers that the woman in the room is not his own wife. The big moment of the action comes when Anson discovers that the woman he has turned over to Mendell is his own daughter.

THE WRONG DOOR (Five Parts, Feb. 21).—The cast: Fern Hardy (Flora Parker De Haven); Phillip Borden (Carter De Haven); "Bumps" (Ernie Shields); Housekeeper (Helen Hayward); Hardy (G. A. Williams); Bates (Harry Schumm); Herne (Fred Church).

Phillip Borden, a young millionaire owner of a steel foundry, attends a musical comedy and sees Miss Frou Frou, who in private life is Fern Hardy. He immediately loses his heart and determines to win her. Fern Hardy is the foster-child of a reformed "crook," but these facts are entirely unknown to her. Bates, a notorious New York crook, with his accomplice, Herne, visit the Hardy flat, and after Fern retires, the men "frame up" a great haul. Hardy agrees to steal a sum of money from Borden's foundry.

The crime is committed and the foundry watchman is discovered half dead. In his hand he clasps a card case, which bears Hardy's name. The following day, Fern gets a note from her father telling her that Bates will let her know where he is. Fern goes to her father, who is in hiding in a secret chamber, in Bates' apartment, and Hardy confesses that he committed the crime.

Hardy begs Bates to allow him to go out. While on the street Hardy is overcome with guilt and is at the point of committing suicide, when Phil Borden happens along in his automobile and takes him to his home. Hardy ultimately confesses how in his youth he kidnapped a little child from a wealthy home, taking with him an ivory box, containing jewels. He determined to keep the baby for ransom, but his wife prevailed upon him to raise her as their own.

Hardy then resolves to obtain the money from Bates and return it to the man from whom they stole it. He goes to Bates and makes his request. The result is a fierce fight. The same night Phil becomes intoxicated at his club and decides to finish off at a Turkish bath. He staggers up the steps, but instead of entering the right door, he enters Bates' apartment which is next to the Turkish bath establishment. The room is dark when Borden enters and as he strikes a match he sees in the dim light the face of Hardy, being distorted with agony and two hands clutching his throat. The match goes out and Borden is violently thrown to the floor. When he opens his eyes he looks directly into the face of a tiger skin rug. Suddenly a blow stuns him and the next thing he knows, he is being arrested.

Fern goes again to visit her father and accepts a sum of money Bates gives her remarking that her father left it for her. Bates' housekeeper, seeing Fern receive the roll of bills, demands a share and is refused. Resolved to obtain money somehow, she steals some jewelry from his desk, takes the ivory box and sells the box and contents at an auction shop. While on a shopping tour, Fern is attracted by the sound of an auctioneer's voice. She enters the shop and is surprised to see the auctioneer holding up for bids her much treasured ivory box. Unable to resist, she enters the place, but not before Phil Borden sees her and follows her in, and when the bidding for the box starts he secures it. He offers it to her, but she refuses to take it without paying for it. Phil then gives her his card and tells her that whenever she wants it she may call upon him and get it. When Fern has saved enough money to pay for the box she goes to Phil, but he refuses to take the money. He forces the box into her arms and she leaves thankfully. After she has gone, Phil finds several bills on his desk where she has slipped them under the blotter.

Upon examining the bills, he recognizes the number marks of his stolen money. Borden goes to Fern to find out how she obtained the money, and she gives the address of Bates. When Borden is admitted to Bates' apartment he recognizes the tiger rug on the floor. His mind reverts to the night of his adventure and he realizes that this is the house in which Hardy was being tortured. He compels the housekeeper to confess to him and she tells the complete story of the night Hardy was pleading with Bates to be allowed to return the money and Phil unexpectedly entered the room.

After the housekeeper finishes her story, Borden is confronted by Bates. In an instant Borden springs upon him and they are in a struggle. The housekeeper, frightened and fearing one of them to be killed, opens the secret doorway and Hardy weakened by months of confinement totters forth. He manages to gather strength and filled with hate towards Bates, springs upon him like a dying panther and claws him from Phil. In this struggle Hardy is mortally wounded and sinks back dying as the officers, called by the housekeeper, enter the house and the raid is made. Fern comes to the house for news of her father and enters just as Bates, the housekeeper and the gang are arrested and taken away. The dying Hardy tells Phil that Fern is the little child that he stole and begs him to take her to her rightful parents.

THE GRIP OF JEALOUSY (Bluebird—Five Parts—Feb. 28).—The cast: Virginia Grant, (Louise Lovely); Beth Grant (Grace Thompson); Harry Grant (J. Belasco); Phillip Grant (Hayward Mack); Hugh Morey (Conlin Chase); Jack Morey (Harry Hamm); Silas Lacey (Lon Chaney); Harvey Lacey (Mr. Neff); "Uncle Jeff" (Walter Belasco); Linda (Marcia Moore); Cora (Dixie Carr). Scenario by Ida Mary Parks. Director Joseph De Grasse.

The Grant and Morey families have been enemies for generations. Beth Grant and Jack Morey marry secretly, and when the expected result of marriage is near at hand, decide to leave home rather than betray their secret. Virginia Grant overhears their plans to leave, and, thinking Morey has dishonored her sister, tells Harry Grant, who proclaims vengeance upon Morey.

Silas Lacey, a rich planter, asks of Harry Grant consent to Marry his sister, Virginia. Lacey, not being of the proper social strata, Grant is indignant in his refusal and throws Lacey bodily from the house. Lacey kills Grant, but everybody suspects Jack Morey, who has fled when his secret wife gives birth to a child and dies. Only Jeff, an old slave of Lacey's knows that Lacey is the murderer of Harry Grant.

Virginia, in the belief that Beth's child is illegitimate, conceals the fact of its birth and secretly leaves it upon Jeff's doorstep. Inside Jeff's cabin at the time was Jeff's daughter Cora, safe from bloodhounds that have been trailing her, but ill unto death by childbirth. When Jeff finds the baby on his doorstep he believes it is his grandchild and rears her as Linda.

When fifteen years elapse the story is resumed. Hugh Morey lays siege to Virginia's hand, but she will not marry him because she believes it was Jack Morey who had killed her brother Harry. Lacey is also a persistent suitor, but is disdained by Virginia who really loves Hugh Morey despite the family feud. Virginia's greatest burden is the secret knowledge that Linda, who is being raised by Jeff as his grandchild is actually her niece, the daughter of the dead Beth Grant.

Lacey claims possession of Linda, as she is supposed to be the offspring of one of his slaves. Lacey's son, Harvey, covets the girl Linda. To old Lacey, however, Linda is valuable. Virginia's care of the girl at Jeff's and her great interest in the welfare of the supposed slave-child gives him a strong influence to bear upon his suit for Virginia's hand. Finally Virginia consents to marry Lacey if he will free Linda.

Harvey Lacey hears of the bargain and while old Lacey is "waiting at the church,' kidnaps Linda and takes her aboard a river boat. By the coincidence of moving picture license, Jack Morey, who has never been heard from since he left home, following the murder of Harry Grant, is travelling on the same steamer. Seeing Linda carried on board the boat and locked in one of the cabins, Jack Morey rescues her in the nick of time. Complications are soon set right. The ending of the story is the wedding of Hugh Morey and the proof, through Jeff's disclosure, that Lacey was the murderer of Harry Grant.

WORLD—EQUITABLE.

THE CLARION (Equitable—Five Parts—Feb. 14).—The cast: Harrington Surtaine (Carlyle Blackwell); Dr. Surtaine (Howard Hall); Esme Elliott (Marion Dentler); Dr. Mark Elliott (Charles Mason); Norman Hale (Geo. Soule Spencer; Milly Beal (Rosemary Dean); Max Veltman (Phillip Hahn). Director James Durkin.

Dr. Andre Surtaine is a wealthy manufacturer of a patent medicine cure-all. He idolizes his son Hal, who knows little of his father's business and does not realize that their wealth has been built upon a fraud and on the pitiable weakness of sufferers throughout the nation. Hal falls in love with Esme, the daughter of Dr. Mark Elliott.

Years before, Dr. Surtaine, while at the beginning of his career as a peddler of his nostrum, had been attacked by a man whose wife contracted the morphine habit through taking Surtaine's fake medicine. In his father's factory, Hal meets Milly Beal, who is ignorant of the fact that she is the daughter of this old time enemy of Dr. Surtaine.

"The Clarion" is a newspaper published in the city where Surtaine's medicine is manufactured. Through the influence of a minister "The Clarion" attacks editorially Dr. Surtaine and his business. Taking his father's explanation for granted, Hal believes the newspaper attack unjustified and in order to get a retraction, purchases "The Clarion." Hal conducts the newspaper along ideal lines but meets with all forms of opposition from the heavy advertisers and influential citizens.

One of his attacks is against Kathleen Pierce, a wealthy girl guilty of reckless automobile driving. The editorial against her swamps "The Clarion" with libel suits and brings about the withdrawal of most of its important advertisements. The attack also estranges Hal and Esme, who is one of Kathleen's friends, and who tried in vain to keep the story out of the paper.

Hal's father heads an attempt to suppress news in "The Clarion" of an outbreak of contagious disease in the poorer quarter of the city, lest the news interfere with an "Old Home Week" celebration then in progress. Hal bravely refuses to be influenced and reveals the conditions that brought about the epidemic.

Milly Beal, starts on the downward path. Under the influence of drink she visits Dr. Surtaine and denounces him as having been the cause of her mother's death, through his fake medicine. She shoots Dr. Surtaine, but Hal arrives just in time to spoil her aim and Surtaine is only slightly wounded. Hal then learns from Milly the truth about his father's medicine business. Torn between his love for his father and his duty as an editor, Hal leaves his home and goes to live in a hotel and work out his problem for himself. He finally publishes the names and pictures of the owners of the "Rookeries," as the district in which the epidemic started is called, and that section of the town is quarantined.

Led by Veltman, an anarchist and old employee of "The Clarion," the mob of foreigners pours down to attack "The Clarion" in the belief that the newspaper is responsible for their troubles. Veltman hurls a bomb into "The Clarion" office, wrecking the building and killing a number of the mob. This crime turns the sentiment of the mob against Veltman who is pursued furiously through the town and finally run down with Hal in lead of the pack of pursuers. Hal and Esme are re-united and Dr. Surtaine, to regain his son's affections and respect, abandons the manufacture of his notorious medicine.

A WOMAN'S POWER (World—Five Parts—Feb. 21).—The cast: Minerva Rawlins (Mollie King); Newt Spooner (Douglas MacLean); Red Spooner (Charles Mitchell); Bud Newton (N. J. Thompson); Lucinda Mertch (Lillian Cook); MacAllister Falkins (E. M. Kimball); Clem Rawlins (Simeon Wiltse).

Newt Spooner's determination to kill Henry Falkins, who has denounced Newt and sent him to prison, grows deeper rooted with the years. It seems that the red-branded hatred in his mind has seared its impression upon every fibre of his being. And then Minerva Rawlins enters his life. The change in Newt's nature does not come in a flash. Despite the influence of the girl he loves, he still cherishes his hatred

Fate throws the two men together in the Philippines. Amidst battle and bloodshed the vision of Minerva follows Newt. His opportunity to slay Henry Falkins occurs; but the influence of Minerva reaching out even across miles of salt ocean, stays his hand at the eleventh hour. How Newt's final stage on the upward path he has set himself to follow is reached, is depicted dramatically. The last barriers with which Newt has steeled his dark hatred are swept away and a woman's power saves him from himself and the vengeance of the law.

Seamless Mirroroid Screens

We could not improve the goods or finish but succeeded in making Mirroroid seamless up to 12 ft. in width in running lengths of 200 yds.

This further strengthens our claims that Mirroroid is the greatest projection surface in the world. Claims substantiated by over 9500 exhibitors the world over.

Shipments Made in One Hour. No Delays Possible.

Beware—Take Care—Investigate!

The U. S. Circuit Court Sustains Validity of Mirroroid Patents. So does the Du Pont de Nemours Co. of Delaware. You will, and can be held liable for any suits on infringements. All Metallic Screens Infringe Mirroroid Patents—So Protect Yourself.

Mirroroid is made in 3 Tints, 2 Finishes: Rough and Medium Matte. Backed up by a five-year guarantee. Sold the world over at 36 1/9 cents a square foot. Get Our Large Free Samples—Yes, Do It Now.

70c. Extra Profit from 20 Admissions

Manager Sharding of Georgia Motion Picture Theatre, writes that his net profits are $63 to $70 a week.

Motion put the money in the motion picture business and the BUTTER-KIST Pop Corn Machine acts the same way in making people stop, look and buy! Hundreds of theatre owners are now operating this "little gold mine." And you are missing from $300 to $3000 EXTRA yearly profits without it.

This wonderful machine will make big Extra Profits for any theatre, large or small.

"Profits as high as $112 per week," writes F. G. Pickett of the Hippodrome Theatre at Fairmount, W. Va.

"Profits $5.25 to $8.50 a day from Butter-Kist machine in our lobby," writes H. G. Heck of Utica, N. Y.

Scores of theatres paying rent, light and heat from Butter-Kist sales.

Butter-Kist Pop Corn Machine

makes the famous crackling white pop corn with the toasty flavor. Folks can't resist its coaxing fragrance. Draws people to your theatre. Occupies only 26 by 32 inches of floor space! Plenty of room in the lobby or down near the stage. Move a chair and you have room for it.

Runs Itself

Automatically pops, removes the unpopped kernels, and butters each fluffy white morsel evenly—then super-heats it to a tantalizing crisp!

We're advertising this matchless treat to millions—line up your theatre with this big new national success.

A Small Payment

starts this machine popping you extra profits and increasing theatre attendance. Balance soon paid out of Butter-Kist earnings.

Mail the Money-Making Coupon and get our handsome book, "The Little Gold Mine," that gives photos, letters, proof of profits, easy terms and full details. It's F-R-E-E! You lose cold cash every day you delay. Sign and mail the coupon AT ONCE.

The Verdict of the Leading Newspapers of Chicago and Philadelphia, where the Famous Players Film Company's unusual production, Mary Pickford in "Poor Little Peppina," has received extended bookings in advance of its regular release, is expressed in the following enthusiastic manner:

"Mary Pickford plays with a sincerity, a vitality, and an unconsciousness that make her work carry in astonishing measure the imprint of reality. The picture is beautifully produced and interestingly developed, moving along with plausibility."—Kitty Kelly in the Chicago Tribune.

"'Poor Little Peppina,' Mary Pickford's newest film, is distinctive for several reasons."—Louella O. Parsons in the Chicago Herald.

"Mary Pickford's remarkable versatility is presented in full measure in 'Poor Little Peppina,' a gripping photoplay. The picture which is the best in which Miss Pickford has ever appeared, runs for a full hour and a half, and there is action every minute."—Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.

"Not since that marvelous creation, 'Jean, the Juggler of Notre Dame,' of Mary Garden's was revealed, has as an attractive and well acted 'boy' been seen. One finds the same assurance of art in both characters. 'Poor Little Peppina' is cleverest of Pickford pictures."—Philadelphia Evening Ledger.

"The staging is very elaborate, the scenes are realistic to the minutest detail. As to the acting, Mary Pickford is, as always, adorable and a joy to watch."—Philadelphia North American.

"'Peppina' arouses everybody's sympathy and the audiences yesterday were as one in voting this character one of the most fascinating enacted by Miss Pickford. Scenically the photoplay is built large, and the story never abates in interest."—Philadelphia Record.

You will agree that this notable Famous Players' production deserves every word of these great newspapers' praise!

Clara Kimball Young

Gives Her Reasons

For Organizing a New Film Corporation with

Lewis J. Selznick

as President and General Manager

Havana, Cuba, February 12, 1916.

To the Motion Picture Exhibitors.

Gentlemen:—When the formation of the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation was announced recently, showing my association in a new company of which Mr. Lewis J. Selznick is the President and General Manager, I made a hasty statement of our plans and promised a further announcement of my individual thoughts in the matter. Since then, even down here in Cuba, I have heard of the avalanche of telegrams, telephone calls, special delivery letters and personal applications made by you for the pictures which our new organization will release in October. This is most encouraging and I desire to place before you now the reasons for my abandonment of the salaried method of paying the motion picture artist, and taking an interest in my own concern, and relying on this interest for my reward.

I HAVE REFUSED MANY OFFERS OF A CONTRACT. THE LOWEST WAS $3,000 PER WEEK.

The reasons for my action must therefore be interesting to you and briefly here are the more important ones:

1—FREEDOM: To think, do and act as I think best. I am the responsible party and must deliver the goods.

2—ARTISTIC DEVELOPMENT: By this new arrangement I will be free to study and improve. I am not one to think I have attained perfection. I must progress. I can't stand still and be contented.

3—HARMONY: Mr. Selznick and I are in perfect accord. Our ideals, ambitions and policies are fixed and in perfect agreement. Our organization will be synchronized from the office boy up. Team work will be our motto.

4—NO MORE DEAD WEIGHTS: Our pictures will not be sold as a part of a program. You buy direct the Clara Kimball Young pictures and no deadwood.

5—PROTECTION OF EXHIBITORS: We give you an absolute guarantee of big business. It will be the essence of our success.

6—PROTECTION OF PUBLIC: You won't need Federal or any other kind of censorship if you buy the Clara Kimball Young pictures produced by us.

7—CONTROL OF SCENARIOS: No subsidized director or pussy-footed scenario writer can force a mediocre play on me under Mr. Selznick's management of our company.

8—CONTROL OF CASTS: We will cast these pictures with artists especially suited for the parts in each picture.

9—DIRECTION: The name of our director—a man of great international reputation, a great master of the genius of picture presentation, famous and already deemed immortal for his master-pieces—his name will be announced shortly.

10—MOTION PICTURE DISTINCTION: Mr. Selznick and I intend by our efforts to raise the motion picture profession to the dignity of an art and take it out of the machinery class.

11—MOTION PICTURE TRAINING SCHOOL: I will now be able to realize my keenest ambition and establish a school for motion picture acting and give the graduates a chance to earn a good living.

12—HAPPINESS: I am an associate and not an employee in the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation. Can there be a greater happiness for an artist than such an opportunity to fulfill one's life's ambitions?

Cordially yours,

Clara Kimball Young

The two telegrams shown on these pages are typical of the reports on TRIANGLE PLAYS which are constantly being received from exhibitors.

There is a reason back of the success of TRIANGLE PLAYS—a reason back of the increased profits to exhibitors.

Plays of the right kind, productions of the best, and stars of the first magnitude combine to make motion pictures that pay.

To be definite, TRIANGLE PLAYS pay because——

Because vampire women like Louise Glaum are always popular.

Because Constance Talmadge has a following that alone would fill many a house.

Because as a commedienne there are few who can equal Polly Moran.

Because actresses like Fay Tincher, who already have many successes to their credit, are an asset to any theatre.

Because Louise Fazenda can keep any audience howling with joy.

Because Lola May is the kind of an actress that people are willing to pay to see the second time.

Because releases like Billie Burke, in "Peggy," never fail to make big money for exhibitors.

Because—TRIANGLE PLAYS like "Betty of Greystone" are the kind that meet the popular demand—the kind the public love.

Because—Keystones like "The Submarine Pirate," which has already made a big hit, can only be secured through TRIANGLE.

Detroit's Big Theatres Getting Highest Prices With Triangle

T-N-F Theatres Attract Brooklyn's Very Best

Ben Title's Patrons Tell Him That the Triangle Pictures are Finest They Ever Saw

HIS MAILING LIST GROWING DAILY

Ben Title of Flatbush, who runs the T-N-F Theatres, is known as the man who caters to "the entire family" from Pa and Ma down to mother-in-law. He is a man who takes advantage of his opportunities and this is one of the reasons why he is often referred to as the "man who always makes good." The secret of it all is that he keeps faith with his patrons by giving them the very best that money can buy. The following letter shows how he keeps in personal touch with his supporters

Dear Sir or Madam

The management of the T-N-F Theatre takes pleasure in announcing to its patrons that it has secured for their benefit and entertainment the first exclusive run of Triangle Plays in Flatbush.

The Triangle Plays that have ever been thrown upon the screen. They are directed by master minds and the management is confident that these productions that are beyond question, and have the approval of our patrons.

We further wish to state that these plays will be shown at this theatre every week the same as usual. We desire at this time to call the attention to the fact that the Triangle Plays are the most magnificent productions that it is possible to procure.

We further wish to state that these plays will be given at this theatre every Tuesday and Friday. The prices of admission will be the same as usual. We desire to call the attention to the fact that the prices charged at the Triangle-Ince Theatre range from 25c to $2.00 for the same production.

Thanking you for your patronage and feeling confident of meeting your continued support

Respectfully yours,

BEN TITLE

The following is another letter from this successful exhibitor, after he had been running the picture for more than two months. Like the other progressive film buyer that he is, before booking all of his houses he tried the service at one place first.

T-N-F THEATRE
East 14th Street and Newkirk Avenue,
Brooklyn, N. Y.

Triangle Film Corp.,
1457 Broadway,
New York City.

Dear Sir:

It gives me great pleasure in writing to you with reference to the service the Triangle Plays are making at the Avon Theatre. I have found this to be of great value as office receipts, and am also pleased to say over and over again, show that Triangle Plays my patrons ever saw.

Furthermore wish to say that owing to the fact that I am also a Triangle Enthusiast I have also arranged to show these plays at the above theatre, which is located in the most thickly settled section of Brooklyn. The enclosed letter I have received will show you that they are well worth the boost these Triangle Plays get.

Yours truly,

BEN TITLE

In the course of an interview Mr. Title said, "One of the indications of the drawing power of Triangle is my increasing mailing list. Since I have taken on the service it has grown a hundred

Craft Reports Daily-Change Theatres Have Inaugurated Bi-Weekly Change Policy

PRICES INCREASED FIFTY PER CENT

All Doing Better Business Now Than They Ever Did Despite Stiff Competition

P. P. Craft, the man who sewed up the Detroit rights for Triangle plays, while the sewing was good, recently made a flying trip to New York. He waltzed into the executive offices, all smiles and gave a most enthusiastic recital of his success in the city of the automobile. He waltzed into the executive offices, all smiles and gave a most enthusiastic recital of his conquest of the town which a certain automobile manufacturer famous Mr. Craft told how he bucked most disencouraging opposition, how he eventually made among others, five of their policy from a daily gus Sun to bi-weekly change, how he managed to get to a bi-weekly change, how he managed to get two theatres to raise admission and thus allow Triangle for the biggest private exhibition, town despite the stuffest kind of competition, and how he "turned" houses that were "lemons" into rich mines with golden guts.

"Detroit is a good moving-picture city," said Mr. Craft, discussing the situation, "but the competition is the keenest I have ever encountered. Many of the theatres are owned by syndicates and they simply try to fight the Independent houses to a standstill. In spite of Detroit, however, and the theatres showing the best pictures, I favors and the public is absolutely impartial. It favors the theatres showing the best pictures. Before I introduced Triangle to Detroit I treated the city with one of the most spectacular advertising campaigns it had ever seen. Many days before our first openings were all worked up and were as curious to see the plays as boys after a circus. The newspaper and billboard advertising combined with big shows more people boost, brought to the opening parades and bally-hoo, brought to the opening days were even better than we could take care of—we had to turn hundreds away. The second days were even better yet than our first nights. All my competitors but they didn't do half the business we did. The Duplex is now doing business at the old Triangle-Ince Theatre that opened with Detroit. Many of the better theatres in the Triangle raised the prices of admission but that had absolutely no effect on the public. In fact, it whetted their curiosity to see Triangle the prices were raised from ten to twenty-five cents, and at two theatres admissions ranged from fifteen to fifty cents. The latter was an increase in admission prices of about 100 per cent.

Running Plays Three Days

"The Globe and Forest theatres, two of the best and biggest neighborhood houses in the Middle West, before they used Triangle used ordinary features and changed their program daily. I spent days trying to convince the management that my policy of running high grade film three days and changing stuff every week was wrong with daily changes. They did as I suggested finally, just to convince me that I was wrong. To-day, just as many seem, they are doing more business changing twice a week with Triangle than they ever did with other big features changing every day. Every exhibitor knows the reason why. Good films advertise themselves, and

"The PAWN of FATE"

PIERRE DUFRENE, a peasant of Normandy and his pretty wife, leave their picturesque farm for the gay world of Paris, confident that in Pierre the world is to discover a new artistic genius.

¶ Pierre is really the dupe of a wealthy Parisian painter who has fallen in love with Pierre's wife. Lesar, the Parisian, plays upon Pierre's artistic ambitions and lures him on to become at last the butt of a cruel jest.

¶ His illusions shattered and his faith in his wife dimmed. Pierre turns upon his false friend and takes partial toll for his wrongs in physical violence.

¶ In the depths of despair, Pierre is about to seek solace in suicide when arrested and confronted by the man he has mortally wounded.

¶ In his dying moments Lesar atones and the reconciliation between Pierre and his wife comes in a scene of deep pathos and compelling heart interest.

"The PRICE of HAPPINESS"

THE story of "The Price of Happiness" deals with the bitter disillusionment of a woman who envies the seemingly more fortunate lot of her wealthy friends. The heroine of the story becomes discontented with her own simple home life and seeks happiness amid the false gayeties of the world in which her richer acquaintances live.

¶ In a series of startling dramatic episodes, she learns that the supposed happiness of three of her former chums is based upon a false structure of material success and luxury, and that they are paying a bitter price for their success.

¶ Slowly it dawns upon her that there is no such thing as happiness in the usual sense of the word, but that true happiness dwells side by side with modest contentment and the interests of a real home.

¶ In the end, after estranging herself from her husband, she returns to him and to her child with a new spirit of contentment and peace.

MOORE'S GARDEN THEATRE, WASHINGTON

MOORE'S STRAND THEATRE, WASHINGTON

THREE COMPETITORS WHO ACT AS ONE

THE total film rental paid the V-L-S-E by the four largest down-town houses of Washington, D. C., during the week of January 16th, probably exceeded the combined rental of all other features shown in that city.

At The Strand and The Garden, operated by Thomas Moore, the Big Four was represented by "The Battle Cry of Peace," "My Lady's Slipper," and "The Heights of Hazard," respectively, while at Crandall's, on the same block, "The Misleading Lady," was the business-building attraction. A block away, The Cosmos, charging 15c. and 25c., featured that tremendous success, "The Great Divide" and "The College Widow."

Of even greater significance than that three centrally located, next-door neighbors should concentrate upon V-L-S-E plays as the vehicles to fill their houses, is the fact that one of this number was sold this service by another.

It was Mr. Moore, who upon finding that he could not use all the Big Four output, induced Mr. Crandall, formerly his keenest competitor, to take those which either The Strand or The Garden had not the open time to book—this without a V-L-S-E representative ever having called upon Mr. Crandall.

A sense of fairness, based on his own success; the liberal "open-booking" policy of the Big Four, and the consistent excellence of its productions prompted this unusual support.

The exhibitor in search of features of proved earning power, who gives these facts the consideration they deserve, will not err in judgment.

Gentlemen:

Herewith find check for payment of "Thou Art the Man." Am using "The Great Divide" today and playing to big business, although the day is only half over.

I used "The Misleading Lady" Monday and Tuesday last, and played to big houses both days. My patrons were delighted with the picture, and many asked me to get more of the same calibre.

The Big Four is certainly on the right road to success. The "open market" is a long-looked for service, and I sincerely congratulate you on being the first big feature concern to institute it.

Trusting "The Big Four" features keep coming in the same quality measure as those I used this week, I am

THE GIRL WHO DARED

Of Course It's a "Hazard of Helen" and the Girl is

HELEN GIBSON

The Most Daring Actress in Pictures

Kalem leaps still further beyond all competition with "The Girl Who Dared." Not one thrill—but many—make this a railroad picture that will never be equalled for reckless, astounding—almost foolhardy—daring. The thrill of speeding motor boats, the breath-catching whirl of courageous riding feats and the hair-raising punch of railroad thrills surpassing any that have been attempted in the past, stamp this a production that will set a standard for audacious exploits.

Special Six Sheet Posters

Have been prepared for this amazing production—also 1 and 3-sheet four-color lithographs. Book it—and boost it—for all you are worth. It's a single reeler you'll want to show your patrons again—they'll demand it. Released Saturday, March 18th—Get Busy Now.

WHEN HUBBY FORGOT

Ethel Teare in a lively farce comedy built around an absent-minded hubby and a pretty "friend of the family." Ethel's vivacious and fascinating personality is seen at its captivating best.

Released Wednesday, March 8th. Attractive 1 and 3-sheet, 4-color lithographs on this comedy.

A RACE FOR A LIFE

Another "Hazard of Helen" that profits by the combination of plucky riding exploits and the familiar railroad thrills. It works up to a smashing climax that will leave them gasping for breath.

Released Saturday, March 11. Striking Scenes on the 1 and 3-sheet four-color lithographs.

MAYBE MOONSHINE

Ham as a moonshiner—leader of one clan: Bud as his deadly rival, there's the base for a corking good burlesque of the typical moonshine story. You are missing a big bet if you haven't taken advantage of the interest in Ham's return to boom these new comedies.

Released Tuesday, March 7th. The stock three sheets on "Ham and Bud" are proven business-builders. Use them with the 1 and 3-sheets on each release.

Facts and Comments

WHILE we are unalterably opposed and always will be unalterably opposed to censorship of every conceivable variety we have no hesitation in allowing space to the communication which has been sent by the censorship advocates in the industry to the exhibitors of Illinois in response to the latter's indignant protest against the advocacy of censorship within the ranks of the industry. Indeed we are glad to print the letter of the censorship manufacturers. Truth always gains when contrasted with error. We entreat our readers' attention to this precious paragraph: "We realize the urgent necessity for National Censorship—first because it is bound to result in our general good and secondly because we feel that once we have proper national censorship it will be a stepping stone to the abolishment of all forms of state censorship." Have you ever read of two more naked conclusions unsupported by a single argument addressed to reason? In the cold atmosphere of facts these bare conclusions freeze to death. Let some of these men who speak in such hopeful terms of the effects of "national censorship" or state censorship appear with the exhibitors before legislative committees in the various states and watch the spirit of state jealousy and state independence. These men talk as if they had never heard of state rights and as if they had never read a page in the political history of our country.

There is no reason to doubt that a Federal Board of Censors would be just as arbitrary as a State Board of Censors.—N. Y. American, February 18.

THERE are men in the industry; few, indeed, but quite obtrusive, who believe that somewhere in Washington there is an oil of miraculous substance and power which poured upon the head of the Federal Censor will make him wholly different from the state censor.

HOW quickly and how effectively a plain honest fact puts to flight the great army of glittering generalities. At the Maryland hearing on the censorship at Annapolis the advocates of the measure launched forth into intemperate denunciations of the "bad motion pictures" until the atmosphere in the committee room became almost sulphuric. Then one member of the committee quietly said that he had been a patron of motion picture theaters all these years and never seen a single picture which would answer the description of the superheated reformers. The crowd in the room applauded. Evidently this truth-loving assemblyman had voiced the common experience.

AN OLD friend and reader of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD writes in a letter to the editor: "A feature is announced as of five reels by the producer, figuring this as five thousand feet, the running time would be something like an hour and a quarter. Announcement of the shows throughout the day is made accordingly and then we find that the subject is either five hundred feet over or five hundred feet under five thousand feet. To maintain your published schedule it means either racing the picture or dragging it out, all of which is very bad." We are glad to publish this statement of our correspondent and pass it on to the producers and exchanges. The letter concludes: "Of course it is recognized that this trouble does not exist in the cities where film headquarters are located, because the showman can get the desired information, but it would be a benefit even to him if the publicity matter of the film people carried the information in question." This is the day when the needs of the exhibitor ought to be studied in their minutest details by every exchange and every producer who expects to stay in business.

WE WANT to impress upon all exhibitors in the city and state of New York the necessity of attending the Great Exhibitors' Rally at Albany (Hotel Ten Eyck), March 1 and 2. Matters of supreme importance are to be discussed and acted upon. Read notices in the news and advertising columns of this week's issue of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD. Then, after reading them, ACT. The exhibitors of other states have shown their desire to get together and to organize, the New York exhibitors have done the same time and again. Remember that the convention at Albany will be watched by exhibitors all over the country.

Actor Versus Type*

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

ACTORS there are, possibly a half dozen all told, who can impersonate almost any leading character yet conceived for the screen story. Actors there are who think they can, and their number has not been computed, not as yet. Besides, there are few roles to be enacted and many calling only for a performer who looks the part, a "type." Keeping in mind that we are dealing with an appeal to the eye alone, it becomes very important that true exemplars of the different parts are chosen in the cast, especially among those who have little more than physical representation to attempt. The work of mental revelation falls to the principals, and only the most capable authors and directors begin to realize how much of that should be brought to light.

As usual, farce offers the exception. An actor who is naturally funny may be short, tall, broad or narrow—he has only to be himself. His limitations are his own, not those of the role, unless he is woefully miscast or given scant opportunity. The higher we soar, the more necessary it becomes to entrust a role to an actor who seems to be its "characteristic embodiment."

The importance of types does not strike one forcibly until after one or more bitter experiences. Stories of high intrinsic value are often seriously injured by carelessness in making up the cast. Then we must widely separate the stage performer from the screen interpreter on account of the constant use of uttered language in the first case, calling for exquisite enunciation and an almost constant study of language itself, resulting in an enlarged vocabulary. Only a stupid actor is not benefitted by the constant repetition of words from the verbal resources of many authors. We may feel without using words, but we unconsciously employ them in thinking.

Try to think hard on any subject and you will find yourself thinking in unuttered phrases. Even the clarity of your thought is affected by your ability to give that thought adequate expression. Whether rightly or wrongly, we are continually arguing with ourselves, debating whether to follow one course or another, and this closely connects mental activity with the medium through which it is ordinarily revealed. We may not always think wisely on that account—that is a matter of judgment—but our vision is widened by the words which come to us from the storehouses of world-thought, put there by other minds.

If education means anything, it means an increased ability to impart knowledge through the acquirement of it—in that way we affect one another's mental and moral training—but it has not yet been deemed necessary for star interpreters of the screen story to give off ideas. Think of some of those drawing salaries at least one-third as large as any modest publicity department would claim. Some pleasant fellows and nice little girls, these stars, possessing one or another attribute which gradually attracts public fancy until it becomes boosted into fame.

"How sweet!" "How handsome!" "How comical!" the kindly audience murmurs, just as it does when darling babies, or even some cunning puppies, are shown on the screen. The actor's physical attraction wins, together with little flickers of inspiration reflected from creative minds concentrated on the production. When that physical attraction is particularly suited to the role, the characterization becomes effective without any tremendous amount of mental exertion—a most fortunate circumstance—on the part of the character's impersonator.

Physical fitness of primary importance, there follows an essential not easy to define, the ability of an actor to lay aside consciousness of his existing self and take on imaginatively some other identity than his own. He may call up remembrance of some character like that he attempts to impersonate and express emotion as that conjured-up personality might under certain circumstances, but it is when he exercises his imagination in a sustained and determined manner, just as does the author of a story, that he can give the appearance of actuality to a character which is merely an ideal creation.

The whole process is not far removed from that of the one we pass through in the dream state. The habitual current of thought laid aside, the interpreter who becomes seriously engrossed in a portrayal lives alternately in two worlds, one in which he is improvising an existence wholly different from that he ordinarily follows, the other one to which he is suddenly recalled when the director, for one reason or another, breaks the continuity of story action. Capable directors make as few such interruptions as possible. They jar the keen sensibilities of a good performer and nullify some of his best work.

"Put yourself in his place," says the capable director. "You are impersonating a man who judges everything through the medium of a gloomy and morose temper—he is looking out at the sunlit scene through a smoked glass." Once in this mood, imbued with this spirit, the actor unconsciously plays his role so that it deeply affects the audience. His emotions and his actions cease to be forced in outward appearance, for they are truly of an involuntary kind. Just so when the character is that of a cheerful person, one who sees everything in its brightest aspect.

The moment an actor succeeds in applying both common sense and imagination to his impersonation he ceases to be a "type" and becomes an interpreter. Interpretations of the finest sort are not only acts of judgment based on experience, but they are greatly affected by dominant feeling or mood. The interpreter's attention must necessarily be fixed on this mood, his mind so completely engrossed by it that his current of thought is not changed by little interruptions at rehearsals. He is thinking the thoughts of his assumed characer, not to be diverted by his surroundings, nor by his own self consciousness.

When the true interpreter's mood is distracted by the intrusion of some inappropriate idea or feeling, he is compelled to make an effort in order to keep within his role, and this becomes eventually visible on the screen. On this account—it is a fact worth every director's consideration—the capable actor should be given a clear view of his part in advance, together with its relation to the whole story, and permitted to work out his own interpretation within the limits of action imposed by camera scope and general environment. His effort should be volitional.

Sweet little girls and handsome boys will always have a place in motion-picture production—we love to look them over—but their present prominence must eventually give way to real character interpretation by women and men who look the part, understand its significance and have the power to impress that meaning on an audience with a power that is deeply felt. Along with the advent of great stories written especially for screen representation and their intelligent supervision by capable directors will undoubtedly come interpretation by veritable artists.

Too Much Titling

By W. Stephen Bush.

GOOD, skilful and helpful titling is hardly ever seen on the screens of today. I have no idea into whose hands titling is entrusted by the various producers, but it is clear not only to the bad and fault-finding critic, but to the plainest man, woman and child in the audience that there is something wrong with the titles. Some of the very best of the producers are most remiss and negligent in this vital matter of titling.

It is absolutely impossible to properly title any feature, or even any single reel, unless one has seen it on the screen at least once. In the case of an important feature two men are better than one for finding the right spots and the right words for titling. All important features must be viewed more than once and they must be shown on the screen.

The worst faults of the titlers of today are their wordiness and their impertinence. Time and again the film is heavy with this verbosity. Consciously or unconsciously the title-builder tries to improve on the picture. Now that is quite impossible, if the picture is what it ought to be. If, on the other hand, the picture needs a lot of titling, it means advertising its weakness. Title-building to be of any use must be done by a man who has some psychological knowledge of the screen. Too many titles are just interruptions of the story and are not welcome at all. Some one has said that motion picture titles are a necessary evil. I am not prepared to go quite that far, but I do say that every title which is not needed and which is clumsily constructed and unsuitably inserted is an unmixed evil. It hurts the entertainment value of the picture and the entertainment value is the only "pay-streak" in the film.

In features that possess genuine dramatic value titles need only be few and far between. It seems to me that with four or five thousand feet of film it ought to be possible to express all the essential dramatic facts in the play through the pictures without much assistance from the dictionary. In comedies long titles are painful and an unfailing indication of the lack of real screen humor. Brevity is the soul of wit and this applied with special force to the screen comedy.

There are places which call imperatively for a title. The shorter this title can be made the better. The title must fit into the picture like a glove. From the work of some title-builders I am sure they have but the haziest kind of an idea as to what they are really titling. The spectator is called upon to guess. Too many titles yield their meaning only to a painstaking analysis. Of course the motion picture theater is not a place for painstaking analyses; besides the title passes too quickly for any minute scrutiny. I wish the title-builders would keep this obvious fact before them when they make their titles. A long title tires the patron. If he wants to be entertained by reading he can go to the library and save his nickels. He wants to see pictures. I take it for granted that every title builder wants to do his best and does not want to spread himself just to show what he supposes to be his cleverness. No doubt many of these long, tiresome, ill-placed and ungrammatical titles are made through a mistaken notion that quantity rather than quality is called for. Every exhibitor knows that in the matter of titles quantity can never compensate for the lack of quality. As a rule the low quantity is indicative of a high quality.

The title is good only when it is so closely and intimately related to the picture as to seem a part of the picture itself. That title is best which attracts the least attention and which is grasped instantaneously. The title is what the bridge is to the traveler. The main thing is to get across the river.

The Lesson in Maryland

By W. Stephen Bush.

ONLY by standing beside the exhibitor when he fights his battles against a host of foes is a motion picture journal able to understand his difficulties and to give him valuable assistance. I was profoundly impressed with the fight made by the Maryland exhibitors against a vicious state censorship measure. Baltimore alone was represented by exhibitors whose aggregate investments probably reach a million dollars or more.

They felt that their most vital interests were at stake, they realized that they were being made the victims of political schemers and they rallied to the fight. The Moving Picture World rejoiced in the opportunity of being of service to them, but we also realized that their ultimate salvation from the evils of censorship and from every other evil that threatens and afflicts them must come through their own efforts and above all things through maintaining and increasing the power of their organization. The happenings in Maryland as well as the conditions in Maryland are typical of every other state of the Union. The great and unfailing remedy is organization.

Exhibitors are busy men. Spend a day with them in their theaters and you will have no more doubt about the incessant and insistent demands upon their time. They are engaged in a lawful vocation, but in spite of that they are made the targets of professional agitators and professional politicians. They must meet these attacks as well as they can. They keenly feel both the righteousness of their own cause and the injustice of the attacks made upon them. Single-handed they are no match for the politicians. United and strongly organized with confidence in themselves and in their own good intentions they may safely await the assaults of so-called moralists and their political allies. Exhibitors all over the country begin to feel the truth of all this and they begin to act according to their belief. We are glad to note that they see the need of self-help and independence. The fight in New Jersey, the fight in Maryland, the fight in New York and, indeed, the fight against censorship everywhere, now rests almost entirely in the hands of the exhibitors. Let the exhibitors understand that in the fight for their rights whether within the ranks of the industry or without they must depend upon themselves. Of course they have every right to welcome assistance from the other branches of the industry. There cannot be too much of the spirit of co-operation. The real work on the firing line, however, must be done by the exhibitors. The exhibitors are furnishing much of their own munitions, but they are glad of additional munition.

During the hearing at Annapolis one thing became perfectly clear: The legislators were most deeply impressed by what was said in the interest of the exhibitor. The exhibitor is closest to the people. If the iniquitous Maryland bill is beaten it will be very largely through the plea made on behalf of the exhibitors.

The moral is: Organize. The Moving Picture World ever since its birth has been the consistent champion and spokesman of the exhibitor. Today we are more than ever convinced that the exhibitor, whether his investment is large or small, is the backbone of this industry.

Garden Capacity Taxed

Exhibitors' League, Screen Club and Stars of the Screen Combine in Making Picture Ball at Madison Square a Success—Striking Effects in Costumes and Lighting —Publicity Promoters Enjoy a Busy Evening.

By Lynde Denig.

MADISON SQUARE GARDEN accommodates the population of a fair-sized town. For small affairs like the circus or the horse show it does very well, and the architects designed it for just such moderate demands with never a thought of magnetic motion pictures. They did not foresee that on the night of February 19 so many New Yorkers would insist upon entering the Garden because of the first annual ball arranged by the Screen Club and the Exhibitors' League.

Five, eight, ten thousand, so the numbers rose, until along towards midnight the police and fire departments cried, "Enough." Uncounted hundreds were turned back to the sharp wind in Madison avenue. And to think, had it only been June instead of February, had the breezes been less keen, Gail Kane, burdened with diamonds; Clara Kimball Young, more glorious than ever after her stay in Cuba; Florence LaBadie, on her towering float, might have visited an overflow meeting in Madison Square Park. The incense wafted from Miss LaBadie's throne must have given "Arabian Nights" dreams to the men who sleep in the open. But it was too cold.

Battle of the Press Agents.

Visitors at the Garden were divided into two classes, those who came to see and those marked for the spotlight. Members of the first-class filled the tiers of seats behind the boxes and jammed the aisles until congestion was slightly relieved by the opening of the second balcony. The others, those who came to be seen, occupied the boxes encircling the arena, converted into a dancing floor. In the center was a stand large enough to hold several bands, Joe Humphrys and various officials of the Exhibitors' League and the Screen Club. Publicity promoters, ever so busy, kept in close touch with Announcer Humphrys and effected a wireless communication with manipulators of the spotlights. Arthur James, Harry Reichenbach, Leon J. Rubinstein, Paul Gulick, P. A. Parsons and others expert at adding lustre to a star improved each passing moment.

Metro was on especially friendly terms with the decorator. In whatever direction the eye wandered it met giant banners bearing a simple declarative sentence, such as "Metro Wins." Attention was drawn to the well-filled Pathe boxes, including that of the Arrow Film Corporation, by the name displayed in electric lights; Universal had Red Feather banners galore floating above the heads of the dancers, whereas Thanhouser, Triangle, World Film and Equitable, Vitagraph, Edison and other box holders figured in the decorations.

The Game Is On.

Shortly after eleven o'clock there was a flurry of excitement caused by the entrance of Clara Kimball Young, soon to be named as the winner of the Popularity Contest. By this time the floor had been cleared of dancers and the arrival of each screen celebrity was befittingly ceremonious. Then World Film-Equitable Reichenbach opened the game in earnest by leading his trump card—Gail Kane, resplendent in diamonds and an orchid-colored gown. Lights were lowered to make more effective the play of the "spot" on Miss Kane and her jewels as she circled the Garden, accompanied by an Hawaiian quintet and an escort of police officers.

Metro followed with a miniature operetta, enacted by a score of girls in Pierrot costumes bearing letters to spell "Metro Wins." They danced to the tune of "Hello, 'Frisco," easily altered to "Hello Metro." Then those who came to see, witnessed the sad spectacle of a man in evening clothes reeling across the floor, all too obviously unable to control his movements. It was Billie Reeves in a comedy interlude. King Baggot and Edna Hunter led the first delegation of Universal stars and while they were going the rounds, Director Sullivan, of Thanhouser, was marshaling his forces for the spectacular entrance of Florence LaBadie. Looking like a veritable queen of ancient history, lolling gracefully in a golden chair, carried on the shoulders of Nubian slaves, she was the center of a splendid procession. No beauty of the screen ever was given a more gorgeous setting and her triumphal march brought applause from every corner of the Garden.

Violet Merserau and Hobart Henley guided an assemblage of Red Feather stars around the circuit, and a few moments later the great popularity of Anita Stewart and Earl Williams, leaders of the Vitagraph delegation, was attested by a generous ovation. Presently Mr. Reichenbach, filling the place of Announcer Humphrys for the time being, called attention to the box in which a popular actress was seated. The spotlight plainly indicated Clara Kimball Young, who soon appeared on the floor, with Nicholas Dunaew, in a striking Russian costume.

In the second Thanhouser promenade there was a liberal New Rochelle delegation. The crowd roared its approval when Roscoe Arbuckle and Mabel Normand appeared. Edison made a good showing with Viola Dana and Richard Tucker in the lead, whereas an imposing Universal assemblage had President Carl Laemmle and Pat Powers as its center. Accompanying these officials were Violet Merserau, Hobart Henley, King Baggot, Sydney Bracey and Dorothy Phillips. Frank Powell appeared with Nance O'Neill, Alfred Hickman, Victor Benoit and Mr. and Mrs. William Teller. Gail Kane made another circuit of the building and the Screen Club and White Rats each had their turn. Among Biograph players were Claire McDowell, Charles H. Mailes, Vola Smith and Vera Sisson. Nicholas Power was represented by Jack Skerrett; Edward Earl and William Barry.

Winners of Contest Announced.

It was past midnight when Joe Humphrys announced the winners of the New York American's popularity contest and awarded the prizes, first, a $500 diamond bracelet, to Clara Kimball Young; second, a $75 wrist watch to Anita Stewart, and third, a traveling bag, to Virginia Norden. Each of the winners appeared on the platform and acknowledged the applause of fellow players and the public. Miss Young and Billy Quirk, president of the Screen Club, led the grand march, followed by Lee A. Ochs, president of the Exhibitors' League, and Miss Stewart.

Edwin Thanhouser, duplicating his offer at the Boston Exhibitors' ball, agreed to feature with Miss LaBadie, the girl selected as the most beautiful at the ball, the only stipulation being an amateur standing. The platform was immediately besieged by hundreds of eager young women and it appeared for awhile as if the Thanhouser Company had staged a riot or a bargain day. The committee of five, comprising Lee Ochs, Otto Lederer, Tefft Johnson, Frank Carroll and Joe Humphrys, finally chose Pearl Shepard, of New York Public School No. 23.

An enjoyable feature of the evening was the entertainment furnished by Metro in the concert hall on the balcony floor. Refreshments were served to Metro guests and an orchestra supplied music for dancing, Mary Miles Minter being among the hostesses.

Among the out-of-town guests were Siegmund Lubin, who brought Helen Green and several other players from Philadelphia; Frederick J. Harrington, president of the Exhibitors' National Organization; Ernest H. Horstmann, president of the Massachusetts League; Frank J. Howard, Samuel Grant, Russell E. Shanahan and H. H. Buxbaum.

The box-holders were: Metro, nine boxes; Pathe, six; Universal, six; World and Equitable, five; Mutual, four; Triangle, four; Vitagraph, three; N. Y. American, three; city officials and judges, two; Fox, two; N. Y. Motion Picture, two; Edison, Great Northern, Frank Powell, Nicholas Power, Greenwich Lithographing, Robert Warwick, Marshall Farnum, King Baggot, Ivan Film, American Seating Co., Novelty Slide, Lubin, J. H. Hallberg.

AFTER THE BALL.

No matter where you looked, it was always Metro. Banners and pennants everywhere announced Metro. Over the door of each telephone booth, in the restaurant and coat rooms, it was Metro. The auditorium on the second floor of the Garden was engaged for the evening by this progressive company and they entertained all who would dance, drink or eat.

Joe Engle, treasurer of the Metro Company, was presented with a handsome scarf-pin by the directors of his company.

* * *

Old-timers and first-liners were seen all over the hall.

* * *

Bill Swanson owes me a new hat. He wouldn't believe there was over seventy-five hundred people present.

* * *

Joe Shuchert, the Buffalo exhibitor and exchangeman, was much in evidence while the band was playing.

Winnie Sheehan was telling his many friends good-bye. Next week he sails for Europe in the interest of Fox films.

You have to hand it to Thanhouser's little "Ruby," he was very much on the job.

Gail Kane, under the direction of Harry Reichenbach and surrounded by a flock of detectives, showed to advantage her half million dollars' worth of diamonds.

* * *

Little Mary Miles Minter was the center of a large and admiring audience, no matter in what part of the hall she moved to.

Billy Reeves, the Lubin funny man, made a hit every time he hit the floor in his march around the band stand.

Mabel Normand would have showed to more advantage if she had thought to walk either in front or behind Fatty Arbuckle.

* * *

Carl Pierce and his staff were much to be seen, even though they did not create any disturbance.

* * *

Four Miles could be seen very easily from one end of the hall. They were all in the same box. Herb and Joe and the two Mrs.

* * *

Dick Rowland, the Metro president, enjoyed himself by discharging his car. Every time he started to go home, he was induced to stay another hour.

Buffalo Jack Miller and his box party consisting of Mr. & Mrs. George Terwilliger, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Shuschert, Mrs. Clay Green and Helen Green dispensed much merriment and attracted a lot of attention.

The grand march of the Screeners was a riot of fun.

Abe Warner, Mrs. Warner and Ben Goetz were patronizing the privilege man.

Tommy and Mrs. Evans were there. They have yet to miss a Screen Club or Exhibitor ball. MAC.

"Who's Guilty?" Being Made.

Anna Nilsson and Tom Moore are Playing Leads in Arrow-Pathe Serial.

SCENE-TAKING on the new "Who's Guilty?" series to be produced by Arrow Film Corporation for Pathe started on Monday, February 21, at the Arrow studio in Yonkers. The preparatory work has been in progress a long while and is now completed as to sets, costumes, locations, etc.

The "Who's Guilty?" series will consist of fourteen two-reel episodes, each episode a complete problem play in itself. The scenarios for these episodes have been secured by W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow, from a number of sources in order to secure diversity of ideas and difference of treatment. The theme was found to be so big that it was found impossible for any one writer to supply all the basic stories. Mr. Shallenberger found it advisable to use not more than two or three plots from any one source. All of these scenarios have been fictionized for newspaper serial by Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, who is the author of several of the original scenarios as well.

The series will be directed jointly by Howell Hansel and Lawrence B. McGill—Mr. McGill doing the first episode, Mr. Hansel the second, and so alternating to the conclusion.

Anna Nilsson, for several years with Kalem, and seen more recently as leading woman and star in "Regeneration," "The Scarlet Road," and "To Him That Hath," will be the woman star of "Who's Guilty?". Miss Nilsson appeared, it will be recalled, in Kalem's first feature, "Shenandoah," and her work in that picture alone should have elevated her to stardom.

Tom Moore, who is known wherever pictures are known, and in other places, too, will play opposite Miss Nilsson as the man star of "Who's Guilty?" series. Mr. Moore is a member of the famous Moore trio.

The People's Auditorium is another theater project now being promoted. The building will be located on the corner of Crocker avenue and Agatha street, and will cost approximately $36,000. The seating capacity will be 1,500. The auditorium will be used for moving pictures during the week and will be leased on Sundays to the Providence Institutional Church. The company is capitalized for $50,000.

Maryland Fights Censorship

Exhibitors of Baltimore Make Formidable Showing at Annapolis—One Member of the Committee a Screen Enthusiast Routs an Advocate of the Bryant Bill—Strong Arguments Against the Maryland Measure.

ON THE NIGHT of Wednesday, February the 17th, the Committee on Ways and Means of the Lower House of the Maryland Legislature held a session at the Old State House in Annapolis to hear the proponents and the opponents of the Byrant Censorship Bill, which was published in full and exclusively in the last issue of The Moving Picture World. The members of the committee are: Howard W. Bryant, chairman, from Baltimore County; William Cordry, Worcester County; Joseph H. Blandford, Prince George County; David J. Ward, Wicomico County; Lloyd Wilkinson, Baltimore; Mark O. Shriver, Jr., Baltimore; Wade H. Linthicum, Anne Arundel County; Nelson H. Fooks, Caroline County; C. Dorsey Hobbs, Howard County; Oliver Metzerott, Prince George County; Herbert Wooden, Carroll County; Conrad J. Herpich, Alleghany County, and Nutter Wimbrough, Worcester County.

New York Film Men Attend Exhibitors' Conference at Baltimore.

A committee of New York motion picture men, consisting of Paul Cromelin, Leslie Mason and J. W. Binder, of the Board of Trade, and W. Stephen Bush, of The Moving Picture World, had gone to Baltimore to meet the organized exhibitors of that city and to attend a conference of these exhibitors. The conference had been called by Guy L. Wonders, who is the president of the organization, and the object was to map out a program for the hearing at Annapolis. This conference was attended by the following men: J. Howard Bennett, of the Pickwick theater, one of the oldest and best-known exhibitors in Maryland; T. J. Bohannan, of the Wizard theater; B. E. Rice, of the Metro Exchange, Baltimore; J. George Wittick, of the Majestic theater, Baltimore; Peter Oletsky, of the Universal, Baltimore; Thomas D. Goldberg, of the Goldberg theater; Nick O. D. Weems, of the Mutual, Baltimore; H. E. Reddish, of the Pathe Exchange, Baltimore; F. C. Weber, Lord Calvert Amusement Company, Baltimore; B. Rosenbaum, Echo theater, Baltimore; Herbert Osborn, Pathe Exchange, of Washington, D. C.; William Fait, Jr., of the Red Moon theater; F. W. Schanz, one of Baltimore's most prominent exhibitors; John A. Cunningham, of the theater bearing the same name; J. Schaub, of the Peabody theater; W. F. Ballinger, of the General Film, Baltimore; Oregon M. Dennis, representing the West End theater, Baltimore; G. Kingston Howard, president Operators' Union, Baltimore Local 181; Frank L. Spitzer, of the Imperial theater, Baltimore; Isidore Hershberg, of the Dream theater, Baltimore; Joseph P. Brody, of the Federal theater, Baltimore; William D. Pacey, Garden theater, Baltimore; H. P. Morehead, Clover theater, Baltimore; William Kalb, Eureka and Lafayette theaters, Baltimore; W. M. Tyler, Lubin theater, Baltimore; Frank B. Sperrier, V-L-S-E, Baltimore; S. J. Mayer, of the same organization; B. H. Stern and A. J. Nelson, General Film, Washington, D. C.; Frank H. Durkee, of the Palace, Plaza and Colonial theaters; Lewis Schlichter, J. F. Everhart, of the Baltimore American, and Edwin E. Powell, manager of the Pickwick theater; Fulton Brylawski, of Washington, and Harry B. Wolf, a member of the Baltimore bar; A. J. Cipher, Royal theater, Baltimore.

The meeting was called to order by President Wonders, who was elected chairman, while the task of recording the work of the meeting fell to Mr. Bennett. The whole situation was discussed thoroughly, and speakers were selected for the hearing at Annapolis. When the deliberations and discussions were at an end, there was but little time left for refreshments. A hurried lunch was taken and then the entire delegation proceeded to the terminal of the Annapolis-Baltimore Short Line, where a special car stood in waiting. There were more rehearsals and discussions on the train as it speeded on to the state capitol. When the delegation arrived at Annapolis and had invaded the Old State House, it was found that the Committee on Ways and Means was busy with another matter of importance. It was close to nine o'clock when the motion picture men were called to enter the room, where a full meeting of the committee was awaiting them.

The Hearing at Annapolis.

The chairman declared that the committee would hear the opponents of the bill first, whereupon Mr. Wonders, the president of the organization, arose and made a brief but very able speech which was well received. Mr. Wonders said: "As president of the Exhibitors' League of the State of Maryland, I wish to thank you for the privilege you have afforded the delegation present this evening of appearing before you in reference to the proposed bill of censorship for the state of Maryland.

"Gentlemen, our fight against censorship is a fight for good pictures—true, unhampered art. If this industry of ours is to be controlled by those who stand as the advocates of censorship, the motion picture will not be art, or amusement, or anything else than the censors' idea of the rules of conduct.

"Censorship of the motion picture—which means pre-publication judgment—means that somebody else is trying to do your thinking for you, is deciding whether you shall be permitted to think for yourself or not.

"You gentlemen surely must admit that we, as exhibitors, are presenting clean entertainment to the people now. We are not showing any indecent pictures. We are not offered pictures by any of the established picture concerns which would lay us open to charges of operating an obscene theater. Our patrons attend our shows day after day. They are typical good American citizens. The standards of the pictures we present to them are their standards. If the motion picture of today were not in tune with the high moral standards of the great American public, that same great American public would turn its back on the motion picture.

"In presenting to you this evening the various speakers I desire to call your particular attention to the fact that these gentlemen have made an. exhaustive study of the fundamental objections to censorship, and I feel confident in stating beforehand that any of these gentlemen, during the course of their address, will be glad to answer any question from any member of your committee which will enlighten them on any point with which they are not familiar."

Fulton Brylawski Speaks for Exchangemen.

Mr. Wonders introduced as the first speaker J. W. Binder, of the Motion Picture Board of Trade, who spoke briefly on the fundamental reasons for opposition to censorship. He was followed by Fulton Brylawski, who spoke against the bill from the standpoint of the exchange men. He said, among other things:

"Your bill affects the exchanges very materially. The number of objectionable pictures is one out of every one hundred. In other words, you are taxing ninety-nine good films and one objectionable one. If the censors eliminate the big punch in a film, you would destroy the value of a film which cost from $200 to $1,500. You had just as well cut out the important pages in a book. Shall we censor the films down to suit children of eight to ten years of age? If we do, you will make impossible the exhibition of our great dramas. A film showing a mother making clothes for an unborn child was rejected because censors say that children of ten years believe that babies are brought to homes by storks or found in cabbage patches. The censors said that children's ideas should not be destroyed.

"By the terms of your bill you prevent posters and newspaper advertisements. If you impose this hardship upon motion pictures, the price of admission will have to be increased, while many will be compelled to go out of business."

Paul Cromelin, of the Cosmofoto Film Company, who has made an enviable reputation for himself by reason of the energy and the eloquence which he has devoted to the cause of anti-censorship, was the next speaker. He said, in substance:

"When I was asked to come to Maryland today, I asked if there was a clause in your state constitution which could be invoked against your bill. My attention was directed to that clause which preserves the inviolability of the press. Because of the war conditions in Europe, an opportunity is open to American business men to engage in this business along broad lines. As a business man I appeal to you not to strangle this industry. In Russia only is there a censorship. In other countries censorship was discussed.

"Our whole effort is to produce clean pictures. We know only too well if the unclean picture is given a chance our industry will suffer. We stand for an amendment to the federal law that would exclude unclean pictures from the mails and from interstate transportation. I left my home to come all the way to Annapolis to plead with you against this bill. Protect children by not permitting them to attend undesirable shows. If a picture is obscene, the police have the power to suppress it. We manufacturers will join in enforcing the law."

Human Experience Is Against Censorship.

By virtue of a resolution passed at the conference, W. Stephen Bush spoke last to sum up the case against the bill and against the principle of censorship. After declaring that he had felt or observed no change in the general morality of the people while he was passing from non-censorship states into and through the censorship state of Pennsylvania, Mr. Bush said the most distressing thing to him about this whole censorship question was the fact that censorship had been tried for three centuries and had been found a failure.

"In spite of the plain teachings of history and experience,"

Mr. Bush went on, "you now propose to establish censorship. Why in the name of common sense this antiquated machinery of oppression, with all its medieval tools, should be resurrected in this twentieth century and in the most progressive and democratic country in the world is utterly beyond my comprehension. Censorship is one of the Old World institutions which the founders of this New World forgot to take with them, and it is strange that their descendants should now want to import it. Censorship strikes at the very essence of democracy. You would not be here; there would be no agitation for censorship, were it not for the natural desire to protect the child. The question of the child is the foundation of all censorship. Now I say to you that it is impossible and altogether unadvisable to reduce the masterpieces of the world's literature to the level of a child's immature intelligence. The screen will take care of the child and of the peculiar needs of the child. Parental control is one way to meet the problem; restriction of hours of admission for children is another way, and no doubt there are more ways. It is simply ridiculous to try and solve the child problem through censorship. There are special books for children of different ages; there are children's sports and children's games. Right now successful attempts are being made in all parts of the country to minister to the film wants of the child in a constructive and enlightened way. You surely do not want to close the libraries of the country just because there are hundreds and hundreds of volumes on the shelves which children and persons of immature intellect should not read. The most wonderful thing in this world, the most precious and the most instructive, and the most beautiful, is the Vatican Museum of Rome. There are parts of the Vatican Museum into which I would not want to take a child brought up according to the conventional notions of the day. Some way will be found for the solution of the children's problem, but it will not be censorship."

The Advocates of the Bill Deal in Generalities.

Louis McKim Kines, a young man who said he represented the Holy Name Society of the Catholic Church opened the arguments in favor of the bill. Mr. Kines paid a tribute to the motion picture and its wonderful possibilities, but expressed the wish that some way could be found to deal with objectionable pictures. He thought censorship was the proper method, and he mentioned the fact that some film men had gone on record as saying that the motion pictures needed censorship from Washington. Mr. Kines urged the motion picture men to accept censorship in the state of Maryland, otherwise more drastic measures would have to be taken. Mr. Kines gave no hint of what these more drastic measures might be. He was followed by a Catholic priest, the Rev. Thomas J. Wheeler, one of the assistants at St. Patrick's Church in Baltimore. Father Wheeler said the Catholic Church was very friendly to the motion picture and recognized its power for good; "but," he continued, "there are too many bad pictures."

"Father Wheeler," asked Committeeman Wilkinson, "did you ever see such a bad picture yourself?"

The priest said, "No. I have it on good authority," he added, "that there are very many pictures that should not be shown."

"Well," said Mr. Wilkinson, "why don't you make sure? Why don't you go to a motion picture theater and find out personally?"

Father Wheeler became excited at this suggestion. "Do you suppose," he said to Mr. Wilkinson, "that wearing this Roman collar, the insignia of my priesthood, I would want to go to a moving picture theater? It would not look well if a man of my calling were found in a motion picture house."

Father Wheeler was followed by Thomas Smith, a former president of the Holy Name Society. Mr. Smith, a large man with a loud voice, and with an air of being very sure of himself, grew red in the face as he denounced certain motion pictures. "There are fine pictures," Smith said; "I will not deny that. There are others, however, that are terrible." As he went on, Smith warmed to his subject, and when he described the effects of the "many bad pictures" he ran entirely to superlatives.

A Timely Tribute to the Decency of the Screen.

In the midst of one of his boldest word rushes he was interrupted by Mr. Wilkinson, the member of the committee who is an avowed screen enthusiast.

"Well," said Mr. Wilkinson with a quizzical smile, "it may be just as you say. Now, I must give you my personal experience. I have seen pictures almost every night and I have never seen one as bad as you describe them."

The last words of Mr. Wilkinson were almost drowned by one tremendous outburst of applause. At the request of Mr. Wilkinson, two Baltimore exhibitors, Dr. F. W. Schanz and J. Howard Bennett, took the floor and stated their objections to the Bryant bill. Mr. Bennett said: "If the pictures displayed on my screens are to be censored, it will be a great hardship. Why should the pictures exhibited in my theater be censored, when a square distant are theaters in which actors are permitted to appear that are far worse?"

Mr. Wilkinson asked if the bill would interfere with Mr. Bennett's business. "Yes," said Mr. Bennett. "I have to book my films four or five weeks in advance. We advertise these films at great expense. If they are to be discarded by censorship, I shall be subject to great loss."

"Have you ever received any complaint on the character of your shows?" asked Mr. Wilkinson.

"No. I turned my theater over to representatives of Mothers' Congress, who reported that they found nothing objectionable. In ten years I have cut about 50 feet from films showing what I thought might prove to be objectionable. My weekly operating expenses have increased in ten years from $90 to $600."

Dr. Schanz spoke in similar fashion.

The hearing ended with a plea against legalized censorship by Dr. Orrin G. Cocks, of the National Board of Censorship.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of February 21, at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"The Black-List" at the Strand.

"THE Strand Theater offered a new photo-dramatic feature, "The Black-List," in which Miss Blanche Sweet was seen in the principal feminine role. The play was written especially for Miss Sweet by Marion Fairfax and William C. DeMille, and was produced by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company. As Vera Maroff, the school teacher in a small mining town, the star portrays a role entirely different from anything in which she has heretofore appeared. "The Black-List" is a daring indictment of the working conditions of big corporations as they exist in many States.

In the cast supporting Miss Sweet are Charles Cary, Horace B. Carpenter, William Elmer, Jane Wolf, Ernest Joy and other members of the Lasky all-star cast.

Scenic and educational studies, a new comedy and the Topical Review were also shown. Miss Grace Hoffman, soprano, and Miss Antrim Hall, violinist, were on the musical program.

Mary Pickford at the Broadway.

"Poor Little Peppina," the first seven-reel production in which Mary Pickford has ever appeared, was shown at the Broadway Theater. In this, her first Italian characterization, the Famous Players' star became a bootblack, telegraph messenger and the general scapegoat of a band of notorious counterfeiters.

Opening in Italy, the action is shown on board a steamer and next in New York, where picturesque Washington Square furnishes many of the settings. In the metropolis the action shifts from opium den to millionaire's palace. The presentation of the Italian atmosphere reflects great credit upon Sidney Olcott, the director of the picture. The Broadway News and the other usual features completed the program.

Triangle Program at the Knickerbocker.

Bessie Barriscale and William Desmond played the leading roles in "Bullets and Brown Eyes," the photoplay written by Thomas H. Imce and J. G. Hawks for the Triangle program. The picture is full of spirited romance. William Collier, in a Keystone comedy, "Better Late Than Never," had an excellent offering. Alfred De Manby and Miroslava, a Serbian prima donna, were the soloists for the week.

MOVING PICTURES IN CANADIAN CHURCHES.

Grace Church, Winnipeg, was recently the scene of a unique entertainment in which the mission work of the Methodist Church was revealed in detail in a lecture by Dr. Fred C. Stephenson, illustrated by moving pictures. The seven reels of film furnished a complete exposition of the work being done in many widely scattered parts of the world. The scenes in China were said to be especially complete. Two interesting features of the entertainment were selections sung by a Polish choir and a Chinese choir. The entertainment was repeated on the following evening at the Young Methodist Church.

A producing company at Overland Park, Kas., have photographed scenes along the historic Santa Fe Trail covering that portion lying between Overland Park and Olathe, Kas., including the down-town section of the former.

Cleveland Clubwomen Stir Censors

Maude Murray Miller Much Exercised Over Move for Better Pictures in Ohio.

CONFERENCES between Cleveland clubwomen and members of the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League started several weeks ago in the interest of the "better films" campaign of the club women, have commenced to bring results.

One of the results not contemplated in the program of either the club women or the exhibitors, is an impassioned plea from Maude Murray Miller, member of the State Board of Censors, denouncing the motion picture business in general and the Cleveland exhibitors in particular and imploring the club women to do nothing antagonistic to the censor board.

This letter, sent to Mrs. Elmer G. Derr, secretary of the civics and legislation committee of the Federation of Women's Clubs, was read before a meeting of that body at the Cleveland public library, February 15.

The letter is prefaced with the statement from Mrs. Miller that she has read in The Moving Picture World an article referring to the fact that Cleveland club women have accepted invitations of the exhibitors to view films approved and rejected by the censors. She then draws a touching picture of the stern hardships which beset the path of a censor, all of mhich she attributes "to certain motion picture men," and warns the club women against leading a movement to destroy state censorship which she predicts will result in municipal censorship and ultimate ruin in the film business.

Mrs. Miller also tells the club women that if she is permitted to make a speaking tour of the state all opposition to censorship will fade into the dim background.

Mrs. Miller writes the Ohio censor board has "succeeded admirably" and in the same paragraph characterizes the situation as "hopeless."

The club committee, which represents half a hundred women's organizations with a membership of many thousands, received the letter without comment and took no action on it.

They are, however, going ahead with their original idea of securing co-operation from the exhibitors to try model programs in selected theaters as an experiment and have been instrumental in arousing the interest of film manufacturers all over the country. At the same time the exhibitors, under the leadership of B. J. Sawyer, president of the local league, and C. E. Megowan, special representative, are conducting an educational campaign for the especial benefit of the club women. This has resulted in converting some of the more radical among the club women to the point of view of the exhibitors with regard to the merits of special programs.

The club women who have been studying the censorship problem, in minutes read at the Feb. 15 meeting of the civics committee characterized it as "a matter that seems peculiarly vital in Ohio because Ohio seems to be the only state with an official censor law.

"Club women are seriously disappointed in the effect of the censorship," the minutes said, "because the present type of programs, perhaps due to the 'lock' system-present much that is inartistic, rough, harmful to young people, in the midst of much that is beautiful and helpful. However, they recognize that censorship cannot accomplish everything."

"A canvass by members of our committee," the minutes said, "of many picture men, resulted in the impression that some kind of censorship is really approved; the troubles seem to be in too many local censorships and in the method of work."

Describing a joint meeting with the exhibitors held at the office of the General Film Company, Feb. 9, the civics committee of the Federation reported:

"Mr. B. J. Sawyer made it plain that any censor observing a reel in nine minutes instead of fifteen, making cuts as he looks, sometimes viewing two pictures at once, does not judge a picture as a whole and is scarcely able to give a very careful consideration to any of the artistic, dramatic or moral qualities of the production."

"The fees required seem to be irritating," the committee adds.

Here is how the plan of the club women is explained by Miss Bertelle Lyttle, chairman of the civic committee:

"As constructing work, our committee is trying to secure some programs in accordance with the 'better films' idea and the exhibitors express themselves as heartily in accord with the plan and have promised to arrange for at least a few programs approved by our program committee, scattered about the residence section of the city on Fridays and Saturdays. The requirements we have endorsed are:

"The programs must be entertaining. Worth remembering and talking about. Lively enough to be interesting. Comic enough to be amusing. Designed to include something educational, and something amusing.

"They must contain nothing horrible or gruesome. No over-emphasis of wrong modes of life. Nothing interesting solely for its artistic, scenic or literary value."

The program committee consists of Mrs. R. S. Thomas of the Sorosis; Mrs. Curtis Hofste, of the East Congregational Reading Club; Mrs. Joseph Janowitz, of the Council of Jewish Women; Mrs. Frank Stimson, Miss Bertelle Lyttle and Mrs. Elmer G. Derr of the civics committee, and Mrs. E. A. Pfalzgraf, Mrs. W. G. Warner and Mrs. Austin Esterbrook, of the Congress of Mothers, and Mrs. D. E. Morgan and Mrs. Alton Smith of the W. C. T. U.

"We decided to have a committee large enough to be really representative of the mothers' interest in moving pictures," Miss Lyttle said. "The greatest difficulty now confronting us seems to be concerned with practical details for the desired kind of publicity. The exhibitors have already taken many steps toward securing special films for Fridays and Saturdays."

This referred to letters recently sent out by Special Representative Megown to every film manufacturer in the country inquiring about the practicability of securing films of particular interest to children, even though such pictures are old in a trade sense. Practically every manufacturer receiving one of these letters has since sent a favorable response.

The club women presented these ideas to the executive committee of the Exhibitors' League in more tangible form than they have expressed themselves before, at a joint meeting of the women's program committee and the exhibitors at the latter's headquarters, Feb. 17. Work was at that time commenced on the drafting of definite sets for programs for the experimental work the club women propose. The films will shortly be ordered from the manufacturers.

The club women have also announced their intention of advertising their model programs by elaborate and artistic posters and newspaper displays.

This progress in the negotiations between the club women and the Cleveland exhibitors is what has aroused the spirit of Maude Murray Miller.

Helene Rosson, Designer

MISS HELENE ROSSON, the charming little lady who plays an important role in "The Craving," a five-reel Mutual Masterpicture de luxe, which is to be released February 26, has applied herself diligently to the study of causes and effects in relation to the film business.

Miss Rosson is an authority on styles and fashions of women's dress through all the periods from ancient to modern. For any role in which she is cast, she knows the appropriate in raiment, and appears faultlessly attired always.

Helene Rosson.

Several of the gowns, hats and lingerie designed for herself by herself are worn by Miss Rosson in scenes in "The Craving," and it is easily understood from her appearance how any well-balanced college man might easily fall in love with her and strive endlessly for attainment.

In the story Miss Rosson breaks her engagement with Russell because in a moment of weakness he succumbs to the overpowering inherent craving for strong drink; then later, after he has been expelled from college and comes into his own in the west, she is prompted by her love to give him a year in which to conquer the craving and prove his manhood.

He succeeds in the battle and returns to his sweetheart, where, in the final scene, he disproves false statements made by an underhanded rival, and proves that he is worthy of the deep love his sweetheart holds for him.

Ruling on Theater War Tax

Treasury Department Explains Some Points About Transfers of Tax Stamp.

THERE has just been issued by the Office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue a synopsis of rulings regarding the tax imposed on proprietors of theaters under the sixth subdivision of section 3 of the Act of Congress of October 22, 1914, known as the war emergency revenue act. This synopsis is contained in a letter which reads as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Office of Commissioner of Internal Revenue,
Washington, D. C., February 11, 1916.

TO COLLECTORS OF INTERNAL REVENUE, REVENUE AGENTS, and others concerned:

This office is in receipt of numerous inquiries regarding the special tax imposed on proprietors of theaters under the sixth subdivision of Section 3, Act of October 22, 1914, indicating that there is a more or less general misunderstanding regarding the interpretation of the subdivision above mentioned. Therefore, this office deems it advisable to restate herein its construction of the sixth subdivision of Section 3 of the Act aforesaid.

Tax Stamp Covers Building—Transferring the Stamp.

Where the owner of a building pays a special tax as proprietor of a theater, covering a theater or auditorium in the building in question, the stamp secured by him will cover all dramatic or operatic or other representations, plays, or performances given in such theater or auditorium, produced either by himself or under his proprietorship, or produced by others under lease of the theater or auditorium from the owner thereof. The owner may, upon application to the Collector of Internal Revenue, have the special tax stamp transferred to any other theater, auditorium, or airdome, provided the seating capacity of the theater, auditorium, or airdome is not greater than the seating capacity indicated on the face of the special tax stamp. Of course, if performances are continued at the building from which the stamp is transferred, a new special tax stamp must be taken out to cover such building.

Special Tax Stamp of Lessee.

Where a lessee of a theater pays special tax therefor, the special tax stamp secured by him, if not transferred to another location, will cover performances given in the theater under the proprietorship of another who subleases the theater from the lessee. However, if the lessee sells out his lease, and is no longer connected with the theater in any capacity whatsoever, his special tax stamp will not cover performances given by the purchaser of the lease.

Partners and Tax Stamp.

Where two parties pay special tax and operate a theater as a partnership, upon one of the partners selling out his interest, or a new partner coming into the partnership, the special tax stamp secured by the first partnership will cover performances given by the succeeding partnership.

Occasional Performances.

Where a hall or auditorium is maintained for public entertainment, but operatic or dramatic or other representations, plays or performances are given therein only occasionally, for example, on an average of not exceeding twice a month, the proprietors of such hall or auditorium do not incur special tax liability.

Traveling Troupes.

The owners or agents of theatrical troupes, traveling around the country and giving performances in halls or auditoriums for which special taxes have not been paid by the owners or lessees thereof, are required to pay special tax under the sixth subdivision of Section 3 of the Act aforesaid, and may have their special tax stamps transferred from place to place, upon application to the Collector of Internal Revenue. It will suffice if the owner or agent, upon entering a collection district, files with the Collector a statement as to the theaters and towns in which performances are to be given.

Any previous rulings inconsistent or inharmonious with the above are revoked to that extent.

DAVID A. GATES, Acting Commissioner.

CATHERINE CALHOUN WITH METRO.

Catherine Calhoun, a member of the famous Southern family bearing that illustrious name, has been engaged by Metro, and will make her first appearance under the auspices of that company in "Playing With Fire." This five part feature is being produced by the Popular Plays and Players for the Metro program, and Mme. Petrova, the gifted emotional actress, will be seen in the stellar role.

Before going into motion pictures Miss Calhoun, who is a genuine Southern beauty with the novelty of auburn hair —so rare in Southern types—had a successful career upon the speaking stage. She made her professional debut in "Brown of Harvard," with Henry Miller, playing the little Southern girl in the original company. She also essayed the prominent role of "Amy" in the original "Little Women" company. Miss Calhoun had the distinction of being the only American playing a role in Booth Tarkington's "Monsieur Beaucaire," when that highly successful play was produced by an English company of players, headed by Lewis Waller.

MissCalhoun was born in Richmond, Va., where she attracted attention, both in high school and at college by her remarkable histrionic ability.

"Playing With Fire" is the original story, written by Aaron Hoffman, who is now writing all of Mme. Petrova's features. Besides Mme. Petrova the cast includes Arthur Hoops, Evelyn Brent and other well-known artists of the stage and screen.

Jay Dwiggins

JAY DWIGGINS, the unctuous comedian, who ended his stock engagement of eighteen months with the Vitagraph Company and who was almost immediately re-engaged by them as a feature writer in the scenario department, is now a free lance author-actor with the goods to sell in both departments.

Jay Dwiggins.

Jay's stories have all been successful; his range is from one-reel comedies to five-reel feature dramas.

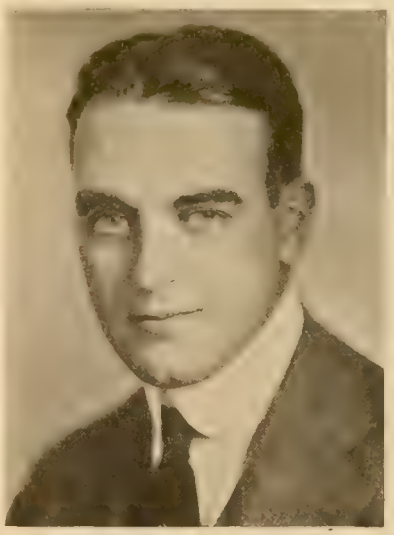
His first release both as actor and author was "Bunny's Little Brother," which title was at once transferred from the play to the player when Jay Dwiggins succeeded the jovial John Bunny as comedian at The Vitagraph.

Mr. Dwiggins tells us he has gotten together a splendid line of straight, farcical one-reel comedies all suited to his unusual personality and very much desires a connection that will give him the opportunity to produce and act them in his well-known natural and convincing way.

Mr. Dwiggins is a Californian and rather hopes a new connection will take him back there.

William Davidson

WILLIAM DAVIDSON, who plays the heavy lead in "A Yellow Streak," the big Metro feature in which Lionel Barrymore and Irene Howley are starred, is a newcomer in motion pictures, and is known among his new friends at the Columbia-Metro studio as "The war baby of motion pictures." It was the present war that caused Mr. Davidson to take up his present profession, in which he has made such marvelous strides. When the war broke out Mr. Davidson enjoyed a successful exporting and importing business downtown. His business was practically ruined, and he began casting around for another line of work. Because of his remarkable physique and fine appearance a friend suggested that he try motion pictures. Mr. Davidson immediately set about with that end in view, and was successful in inducing William Nigh, the Columbia-Metro director, to give him a "type" part in "Emmy of Stork's Nest," in which little Mary Miles Minter is starred.



William Davidson.

Mr. Davidson made such a success out of a thankless part that Mr. Nigh arranged to give him the heavy lead in his very next picture, "A Yellow Streak." Mr. Davidson is a graduate of Columbia University, and was quite active as student there. He was the hero of the famous Columbia University football eleven in 1905, the last team the university had until this year. He appeared in several of the varsity shows, and wrote the interpolated musical numbers for "The Ides of March," in 1907, and "Captain King," the following season. He was on the rowing crew one season, and was one of the best all around athletes of his day at Columbia. Mr. Davidson further proved his versatility by being selected assistant editor of "The Spectator," the university publication. He was born in Dobbs Ferry in 1888, and says he is in pictures "for keeps."

Right to Appeal Upheld

Justice of Court of Common Pleas Makes Short Work of Breitinger Claim That Censors Have "Sole and Exclusive Jurisdiction Over Films"—High Judicial Tribute to Motion Pictures and the Men Who Make and Run Them."

A VERY important decision has been rendered by the Court of Common Pleas of Philadelphia, in a recent appeal from a decision of the Censor Board. Once for all Justice Barratt, of the Court of Common Pleas of Philadelphia, has defined the limitations of the powers bestowed by the Pennsylvania Legislature on the Board of Censors. He makes short work of the Breitinger claim that he and his two Catonion Sages have "the sole and exclusive authority to determine the propriety of motion picture films to be exhibited in the State of Pennsylvania." The justice holds that the right of appeal is statutory and that such an appeal from the Breitinger Board raises not only a question of the formal regularity of their proceedings, but concerns itself with the question of whether Breitinger and his Sages have abused their discretion. The motion to dismiss the appeal made by Breitinger on the ground that no irregularities appear in the record is denied by the Court. In regard to this aspect of the question the court says:

The words "right of appeal" from the decision mean that the whole matter is before the Court de novo, and that it is to be examined and tried as if it had not been tried before. Appeal means the removal of a case from a court of inferior to one of superior jurisdiction for the purpose of obtaining a review and retrial. This is the nature and scope of this appeal under the act of 1915, and, as the duty of review upon the merits has been placed upon us by the Legislature, we must discharge it.

That this duty of retrial rests upon the Court is clear from the language of the statute. Section 26 refers to an appeal in two places. In the first instance, it provides that where any elimination or disapproval of a film, reel or view is ordered by the board, the person submitting such film, reel, or view for examination will receive immediate notice of such elimination or disapproval, and, if appealed from, such film, reel, or view will be promptly re-examined, in the presence of such person, by two or more members of the board and the same finally approved or disapproved promptly after such re-examination, with the right of appeal from the decision of the board to the court of common pleas.

The "appeal" in the first instance requires a retrial or re-examination, by two members of the board. There is nothing in the statute to show that the use of the word "appeal" in the second instance is used in a different sense. The word is the same in both cases. The connection is close and intimate. To use the word as having one meaning in one part of the sentence and as having a different meaning in another part of the same sentence, would certainly be most awkward and faulty literary construction. Nothing in the act requires the court to treat the word as so used. There are a number of reasons which forbid any such interpretation. In the first place, an "appeal" means a retrial or examination, wherein it differs from a writ of error. Upon a technical appeal the Appellate Court reviews the testimony, and, although it may not disapprove the findings of the lower body or tribunal for light reasons, yet it is vested with the decision anew. Rawle's Bouvier, Vol. 1, 208; Behn v. Campbell, 205 U. S. 407 (1907), Moody, J.

And so the word "appeal" to the court in Section 26 imputes a decision or re-examination anew. In the next place, as has been pointed out, the literary construction of the sentence requires that the word "appeal" be read in the same sense when twice in such sentence. In the third place, it will be noticed, that the appeal is not to the Court of Quarter Sessions, but to the Common Pleas. The Quarter Sessions is the ancient tribunal for certain executive and only quasi judicial functions, such as the opening and vacation of roads, or the erection of bridges, and custom and principle would point to that court as the tribunal to which to send an appeal where the case was to be considered simply as a quasi executive function. Thus in Steadman's case, 14, Phila. 376 (Mitchell, J.), the appeal given by the Act of 1879 from a refusal of the Mayor of Philadelphia to grant a theatrical license, was to the Quarter Sessions, and unless abuse of discretion were shown the Sessions would not reverse the decision of the executive official of the city. See also the Theater Co. v. Weaver, et al., 15 Pa. Dist. Reports, 794 (1906), Sulzberger, P. J.

The grant of an appeal to the judicial tribunal of the County—the Common Pleas, is a further indication that a general review was intended. Moreover, the history of the legislation points in the same direction. When the act under discussion was in passage in the Legislature, the Censors' Act of June 19th, 1911, was before the Supreme Court. One of the grounds of attack upon the constitutionality of that act was that it did not provide an appeal from the decision of the Board of Censors. The Supreme Court held that in matters of police regulation, when decisions resting on questions of public safety are entrusted to an administrative board, the right of appeal need not be conferred. Plymouth Coal Co. v. Pennsylvania, 232 U. S. 531 (1914), Pitney, J.; Buffalo Branch of the Mutual Film Corporation v. Breitinger, 250 Pa. 225 (1915), per curiam.

The latter case concerned the Censors' Act of 1911, and was decided by the Supreme Court on July 3, 1915, which was after the passage of the present Act of May 15th, 1915.

Judge Barratt has this to say about motion pictures:

Moving pictures have grown so wonderfully in public esteem that a late writer, speaking from the standpoint of an old-fashioned legitimate character actor, characterized them as an epidemic which has spread into every town and hamlet. There is, perhaps, no parallel in our commercial history to the growth of the motion picture business, which now occupies fifth place among American industries in point of volume, and represents over $500,000,000 of invested capital. It is estimated that it gives employment to more than 100,000 people. There are more than 18,000 motion picture theaters throughout the country. The attendance is figured at 15,000,000 persons daily. Approximately $1,000,000 per day is paid for admissions, giving the amazing total figure of $360,000,000 for the year. Handsome theaters in expensive locations are now given over to the motion picture business. The most notable actors are employed at high salaries, and the best plays are being "filmed." The cost of production has in several notable instances exceeded $100,000.

Recognizing their educational qualities and possibilities for good and evil, apart from the mere feature of amusement, the Commonwealth has adopted the policy of regulation for the protection of the community, especially of the young and immature. And this power to determine whether a film is sacrilegious, obscene, indecent, or immoral, or such as tend, in the judgment of the board, to debase or corrupt morals, is lodged in a Board of Censors. It is a delicate task, at best, and in its exercise involves good taste and a nicety of judgment with which we are indisposed to interfere, because they are matters about which many disagree and differ, unless we are satisfied their action is unwarranted, arbitrary or improper. The Censors are public officials, acting under the law, for the good of the community, and prima facie we ought not to disturb their findings, unless for cause shown. At the same time we must not lose sight of the fact that moving pictures are a great commercial enterprise in which many millions of dollars are invested by our citizens, and that property rights ought not to be injured or destroyed capriciously, wantonly or by rules which seek to impose a degree of strictness of requirements or standards, which amount to confiscation of property. A motion picture theater conducted by responsible people, visited daily by thousands, principally women and children, could not afford to exhibit on its screen anything of doubtful propriety, because loss of reputation as a proper resort for women and children would be speedily felt in decreased receipts at the box office, and result in bankruptcy. In addition, the Mayor of the City of Philadelphia and his Director of Public Safety have ample power and authority to protect the public if they deem a motion picture improper or immoral, as they still exercise supervision over theaters, and many States consider this a sufficient protection.

"Get Ready for Baby Week"

Manufacturers and Exhibitors Can Do Their Part to Help the Committees Now at Work.

THE following letter received by us from E. G. Routzahn, Associate Director of the Department of Surveys and Exhibits, Russell Sage Foundation, New York City, states its case clearly. It is as follows:

"Many anxious people are seeking motion picture films for use during National Baby Week, March 4-11, 1916, under the auspices of the U. S. Children's Bureau, Washington, and the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

"If you know of any films having to do with babies or the care of milk, will you be so good as to inform the writer?

"Will not you also suggest to both exhibitors and patrons among your readers that they pass the word along to the local Baby Week Committees, giving whatever assistance they can so that committees may be able to rent desirable films.

"More than 1,200 Baby Week Committees are now at work, but many of them, and many yet to be organized, will hold their celebrations at dates later than March 4. New York City, Columbus, and other places have planned for later dates."

The most recent films touching on this subject that we are able to suggest are "Not a Lamb Shall Stray," (showing care of infants in Hebrew Asylum, New York City), made by The Universal Film Co., and released September 22, 1915, under the Victor brand, and an eight-reel illustration of how the Borden Co., prepare Grade A, Grade B, and Certified Milk for the market; also the manufacture of condensed milk. This collection can be sub-divided and used in two and three-reel lots.

KNAPPEN GOES TO ATLANTA.

Harry L. Knappen, for the last six months manager of the Denver branch of the Pathe Exchange Inc., leaves Monday next for Atlanta, Ga., where he will continue to represent Pathe in a similar capacity. As manager of the Atlanta office Mr. Knappen will be in charge of Pathe interests in the territory represented by Georgia, Florida and parts of South Carolina and Alabama. This is considered one of the most important subdivisions of the United States from the motion picture standpoint, and the selection of Mr. Knappen as the man best qualified from a list of managers in twenty-eight cities to represent the company's interest in the second metropolis of the South, is considered a very high tribute to his business-getting and managerial abilty.

WATSON AT WORK AGAIN IN KLEINE COMEDY.

Harry Watson, of Bickel and Watson, featured in George Kleine's film comedy "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer," has returned to work at the Kleine studio, after an absence of seven weeks necessitated by illness and a surgical operation.

Watson, naturally elated at the splendid reception by the public of "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer," appeared happy as an artless kid when he again donned his "make up" and appeared before the camera as "Musty Suffer."

J. ALBERT HALL JOINS FAMOUS PLAYERS.

J. Albert Hall has been engaged by the Famous Players to support Mary Pickford. Mr. Hall is an actor of real ability. He has been seen in several Famous Players subjects as well as in pictures of other makes, and his work has always stood out. He has had wide stage experience.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

NORTH CAROLINA CONVENTION.

Motion Picture Exhibitors Hold Meeting at Greensboro—Against Federal Censorship.

THE semi-annual convention of the Exhibitors' League of North Carolina held last week was voted to be the most successful gathering of motion picture men in the South. The convention opened in the Piedmont Theater with an invocation by the Rev. Melton Clark, of the First Presbyterian Church of Greensboro, and ended up with a general discussion of all subjects of direct interest to the business.

The convention was called to order by President Percy W. Wells, of Wilmington. "We meet here," he said, "for the purpose of preparing ourselves as the representatives of North Carolina, to do our share in fighting the battles of the great army of exhibitors of the nation, our purposes being three-fold: First, to safeguard and protect the interests of our exchange men in our territory; second, to promote the business interests of ouselves, and lastly, but of still greater importance, the organization is designed to protect the rights and the welfare of our patrons, the theater-going public. And within the past twelve months there has been thrust into our aims and purposes a fourth and important subject, that of protecting ourselves from burdensome legislation and unjust taxation. There are those among us who say that the first three named purposes of our organization will take care of themselves, but there is not one who will deny that if we wish to continue to exist it is absolutely necessary that we prepare ourselves to exert a strong influence against the evil of burdensome legislation.

"And when we figure it all out, all of these aims and purposes, if carried out, co-operate among themselves to bring about a solution of our many problems. By co-operating with our exchanges, helping them to weed out of the industry the undesirable and disreputable ones, we enable the exchange and the film companies to give us better pictures for less money, because we won't have to make up for the fellow who does not pay. We will furthermore, get better service from one exhibitor to another when the slip-shod exhibitor has been removed from our midst. Careless shipping, careless handling of films, all means money out of our pockets, as well as the exchange man's. There are many evils that have crept into the industry, during its phenomenal growth that can be removed through co-operation, the removal of which will better enable us to serve our patrons.

"The third and really most important purpose of our organization, that of safeguarding the interests of our patrons, should receive more serious consideration than it has in the past. The age has passed when motion pictures were in the novelty class, and they have become, next to the public schools, the greatest factor for spreading knowledge, good and bad, in the land, and I am glad to say that the majority of the latter are fast disappearing."

In conclusion, President Wells said: "Our organization is ambitious; we acknowledge that, and I sincerely trust that when this meeting is adjourned we shall, every individual of us, be breathing a spirit of unity that shall mean our lasting success, collectively and individually."

In a well delivered address, Mayor T. J. Murphy welcomed the visitors to the city and told them that the exhibitors were stewards of a great calling. "Children now learn by seeing as well as hearing, where we learn by hearing only," he said, after he had briefly outlined the working of the so-called censorship committee of the city.

President Wells responded to the address of welcome in the absence of A. F. Sams, of Winston-Salem, who was delayed in reaching the convention, then introducing J. W. Binder, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of New York, who spoke as follows:

MR. PRESIDENT AND GENTLEMEN:—I am mighty glad to have the privilege of coming down here in North Carolina and talk with you a little about the problems and possibilities of this great industry in which we are all engaged.

When your secretary, Mr. Varner, invited me, I hesitated a little at first. I didn't just know how it would be for a Pennsylvania Dutchman to come here and try to tell you something about your business which you no doubt knew better than he. I realized, however, that because of that hospitality which is so justly a synonym of the Southland, I knew I could hardly go far wrong.

Any doubts which I may have entertained have been entirely dispelled by the splendid welcome you have accorded me and through the cordiality that radiated like the golden beams of the rising sun from every word of the address of welcome just made by Mayor Murphy. I know now that I am in no sense a stranger in a strange land, but that I am among friends. Nor am I likely to get homesick for the splendid cooking of my Pennsylvania Dutch ancestors, so long as the hostelry just across the way lives up to the breakfast I have just enjoyed. It was fine—worthy in every way, I am sure, to be compared with the many other advantages and charms of your beautiful city—Greensboro, the Gate City of North Carolina.

But, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I must not linger on these topics, congenial and pleasant as they may be. You are here, representing the Motion Picture Exhibitors of North Carolina, and I representing the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America. We are happily met; may be, ere we part, we will know each other much better.

The motion picture industry consists of three main factors. First: There is the producer—the man or concern who takes the scenario and from it produces the finished picture. Second, there is the distributor or exchange man who receives the finished picture and distributes it, and third, there is the exhibitor who receives the pictures from the distributor and shows them in his theater to the public. Time was when each of these factors looked with suspicion upon each of the others. The manufacturer sat in his corner here; the exchangeman held his place and the exhibitor kept strictly to his own field. There was nothing in common between them excepting hatred and suspicion. The sun of that day has set forever, and already a new day is being born—a day in which the mists of doubt and distrust and suspicion are being dispelled by the all-powerful beams of the sun of unity and harmony, rising in a cloudless sky, radiant with promise for the future of our beloved industry.

Under and out from these latter conditions the Motion Picture Board of Trade was born. It is an organization with a two-fold purpose—defense and offense. Defense—against those who by legislative enactment, either Federal, State or Municipal, would harass and hamper this industry. Censorship? Yes. Oppressive and unfair building restrictions? Yes. Railroad discrimination against transportation of films? Yes. Unfair insurance rates? Yes. And any other legislation that is harmful to the healthy growth of the industry. The Board will fight such legislation while it is being considered. If it becomes a law, it will continue to fight in the courts.

But while the Board is fighting these enemies from without it is just as aggressively fighting those practices within its borders which have subjected it to criticism in the past. The unclean picture, the unfair business practice, the fly-by-night and get-rich-quick artist in any branch of the industry and those unethical and unfair practices which besmirch the fair name of the industry. All these are being fought untiringly and whole-heartedly. They will be overcome just as we will overcome the obstacles and enemies which beset the industry from without because they are wrong

The principal danger which confronts the industry is censorship. Mayor Murphy has alluded to the harmonious way in which the local board of censors is working with your theaters here. I am glad of it; but that fact does not deter me from saying to you that the Motion Picture Board of Trade is fundamentally opposed to any form of censorship, and having said this I must give you my reasons. They are simply these:

There are three ways in which I can convey a certain thought now pulsing through my mind to you. I can talk it as I am doing now. You hear my words and get my thought. I can write it down on paper and have it printed in a book or newspaper and you read the printed words and get the thought. These two ways of expression are free—so guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States and of the sovereign States. I can say or print anything I please. Of course, if what I say is immoral, indecent, obscene, libelous or slanderous, I go to jail—but not until after publication and after I have been convicted by due process of law. I hold that this same freedom must be accorded to the new—the third medium of expression—the motion picture. And unless it is extended, I claim the other two vehicles of expression—speech and the press—must and will be similarly fettered. Who would barter away that liberty of speech and of the press which has made America? None, I am sure. Then, do not open the way by sitting by complacent while Congress attempts to throttle the third—the greatest medium of expression—by compelling all picures to be submitted to censorship because a few are bad. Hence, I ask you before your convention adjourns, to place yourselves squarely on record on this question by passing a resolution condemning the principal of pre-publicity censorship, whether by the nation, the State or the municipality and opposing the bills creating a Federal censorship board now pending before the House Education Committee.

The afternoon session was an executive one, held in the rooms of the Chamber of Commerce, at which a number of resolutions were adopted. Included among these was one which brought about the sending of the following telegram to Representative Robert L. Doughton, of North Carolina, at Washington, D. C.:

Motion picture exhibitors of North Carolina in convention assembled unanimously ask you to vote against a favorable report of the Smith-Hughes or any of the other censorship bills being considered by the House Education Committee. There are represented in this convention 175 motion picture theaters in North Carolina, patronized daily by more than 100,000 people. (Signed) H. B. Varner, Secretary.

Another resolution read as follows:

WHEREAS, the action of the Southeastern Tariff Association in its classification of fire risks is working unfair and oppressive burdens upon the motion picture interests of North Carolina by exacting insurance rates of 4½ per cent. for the same class of risks that bear a rate of only 1.1 per cent. in South Carolina and other States, and

WHEREAS, unreasonable and unwarranted requirements and restrictions are being foisted by said associations in the interest of private corporations, and without regard to the true and proper classification of risks or requirements of construction; now, therefore, be it

RESOLVED, by the North Carolina Motion Picture Exhibitors' League in convention assembled, That the action of said association be condemned as unwarranted oppression and robbery, and,

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that a committee be appointed by this body to protest against the action and policy of the said Southeastern Tariff Association and to take such steps for relief of the situation by legislation or otherwise, as may by said committee be deemed expedient and advisable.

The evening's entertainment consisted of a Dutch supper at the Guilford Hotel at which there was a genuine get-together movement. At the invitation of Messrs. Pryor and Schofield the delegates and guests visited the several theaters of the city.

L. G. Schofield, of the Piedmont and Elm Theaters, Greensboro, made the opening address of the second day's session, speaking on "Theater Management." He declared that it takes a large amount of real diplomacy to successfully manage a modern motion picture theater, and said that exhibitors and their managers should cultivate the many courtesies that tend to make friendships. The average patron of the theaters expects a fair amount of courtesy and consideration at the hands of the attaches of the theaters, and unless this is recognized the business of any theater may be expected to lag and fall off.

George W. Pryor, manager of the Bijou Theater, of Greensboro, furnished a very interesting article on "Co-operation with Competition," which was read by Secretary Varner. He told of what could be accomplished by competitors if they would only get together on a common ground and co-operate one with the other.

An open discussion followed during which all phases of the business were brought up. In this, exhibitors and exchange men alike entered. The film companies who demand the placing of deposits with them by exhibitors prior to the rendition of service were assailed by several of the exhibitor speakers. These objections were answered in large part by Carl F. Senning, manager for this territory for the Fox Film Corporation, who showed that this deposit was necessary, not alone to the film company who in renting their products gave into the care of the exhibitors valuable merchandise, but also to the exhibitors themselves because of the protection to them from the cancelling of their service and the placing thereof with a competitive concern. These deposits are also necessary because of the great losses the exchanges had suffered; it was a protective measure against fly-by-night concerns and the legitimate houses could hardly object to it. Further, he declared, the demanding of deposits cut down the losses, diminished in this respect the overhead expense of the exchanges, and really led to better rates.

Alan J. Bachrach, representing V-L-S-E, spoke of the open booking system followed by that concern.

R. D. Craver, of the Piedmont Amusement Company, spoke of the value of co-operation. Henry E. Friedman, of the World Film Corporation, urged that there must be truth and honesty as between the exhibitor and the film man, as a lack of this reacts to the detriment of both.

Otto Haas, of the Ottoway Theater, Charlotte, one of the most prominent exhibitors in this section, gave a very interesting talk on "Organization and Local Censorship."

Secretary Varner, on behalf of the exhibitors of the State, expressed their thanks for the presence of the film men, stating that the fact that they attended the convention showed it to be the desire of the companies which they represented to co-operate with the exhibitors.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., through the Charlotte office, had a very excellent exhibit at the Guilford Hotel. Henry E. Friedman showed his energy by proceeding immediately upon his arrival to literally plaster a section of the wall of the lobby of the hotel with everything from a one-sheet to a six-sheet advertising the productions of the World Film Corporation, which he represented. As a result of his enthusiasm, however, his concern faces a bill for the redecoration of the entire lobby, to be in lieu of a very large rental that would otherwise have accrued. This was one of the best pieces of advertising pulled off at the convention. Mr. Friedman, it is to be remembered, was very active in securing the original organization of the league in this State and his efforts in behalf of the exhibitors in bringing about so much co-operation has not been forgotten.

The Nicholas Power Company gave a demonstration of their latest projecting machine. The Wilmot Ventilating System Company, of Roanoke, Va., had one of their systems installed in a vacant building. This was acknowledged to be one of the best exhibits ever made at a convention. A. B. Cheatham, of the Charlotte office of the Mutual Film Company, had a nice display of posters.

Prior to the final adjournment it was voted that the next semi-annual convention of the league, to be held in the spring, should be staged at Durham. A large number of cities were in the field to secure the event, but the Durham offer was the most attractive and $250 was pledged for the entertainment of the delegates at that place.

Among those present were: L. Bloomberg, Strand theater, Asheville; C. F. Senning, Fox Film Corporation, Washington, D. C.; James Howard, Bijou Theater, Wilmington; G. Bain, publicity manager, Howard & Wells' Theaters, Wilmington; Aaronson & Brown, Alamo, Grand and Lyric Theaters, Raleigh; Charles Arrington, Alamo, Rocky Mount; A. C. Burgess, Broadway, Mount Airy; N. C. Jones, Princess Theater, Reidsville; C. H. Welsh, Main Theater, Salisbury; Sterling Smith, Auditorium, Winston-Salem; W. E. Stewart, Pastime Theater, Concord; H. Cooley, Crystal Theater, Burlington; C. Cobel, Crystal Theater, Burlington; Mr. Stephenson, Princess Theater, Henderson; H. B. Varner, secretary North Carolina Exhibitors' League, Lyric Theater, Lexington; A. F. Sams, Winston-Salem; J. W. Binder, New York; C. E. Wagoner, Broadway Theater, High Point; Mr. Rucker, Universal Film & Supply Company, Charlotte; W. E. Lindsay, Tar Heel Theater, Chapel Hill; J. F. Pryor, Strand Theater, Danville, Va.; George W. Pryor, Bijou Theater, Greensboro.

CLARENCE L. LINZ.

NEW YORK MEN, HERE IS YOUR LAST CHANCE!

The Great Rally at Albany, March 1 and 2, Will Be the Most Important Event in the History of Exhibitors in this State.

LAST CALL TO GREAT EXHIBITORS' RALLY AT ALBANY MARCH 1ST AND 2ND. Exhibitors in every State are getting busy organizing and protecting their investments. Nowhere is action and co-operation needed more urgently than here in the State of New York. The help of every exhibitor is needed. East and West, North and South exhibitors are getting together. This week has seen important events in exhibitors movements in Oklahoma, in North Carolina, in New Jersey and in Maryland. The trend is everywhere the same. They all feel the need of perfect co-operation. Read the "ad" (an entire page), in this week's issue of the Moving Picture World, dealing with the proposed work of the convention at Albany.

Whether you belong to an organization or whether you don't, whether your theater seats 300 or 3,000, you are welcome because you are needed toward obtaining results. You know it is proposed to close every motion picture theater on Sunday and it is also proposed to fasten a most vicious form of state censorship upon the exhibitors in this State.

Ask any exhibitor or any exchange man in Ohio or Pennsylvania who has the figures how much censorship in those two States has helped to depopularize the motion picture. The proposed bill by Mr. Ahearn gives you no right of appeal. Three persons, one a woman, have the rights of life and death over your theater. The only way to prevent this is by acting promptly and the best way to show your power is to appear in large numbers at the seat of State legislation. March 1 and 2 at Albany that ought to be the slogan of every exhibitor who believes in the protection of his investment.

Do not hestitate. Delegations are expected from Yonkers, Rochester, Buffalo and from the metropolis. It is confidently expected that every section of the State will be generously represented.

It is proposed to introduce beneficial legislation and the great rally of exhibitors will have many points to consider along these very lines. Your opinion and experience are needed in order to draft a measure which will do the greatest good to the greatest possible number. Original suggestions will be welcomed. The utmost freedom will prevail on the floor of the meeting. Questions will be taken up which directly affect the pockets of every exhibitor. They cannot be successfully and justly determined without a large and generous attendance. The gathering must be representative.

Remember the time: March 1 and 2; the place, Ten Eyck Hotel, Albany.

The Moving Picture World has made complete arrangements to cover the convention. Make your preparations to attend RIGHT NOW, FOR THIS IS POSITIVELY THE LAST CALL.

INDIANA CONVENTION.

Planning to Make It a Record Breaker—Ninety Per Cent. of the Exhibitors of the State Expected to Attend.

WHEN the Indiana Motion Picture Exhibitors convention, which is to be held at Indianapolis March 2 and 3, is over, it is expected that Indiana will go down on the records as having had the greatest convention ever held by a state organization. The various committees are working energetically to complete arrangements to take care of the crowd that has already signified its intention of attending.

Space for the manufacturers exhibit to be held in connection with the convention, is rapidly being sold, and indications point to the largest display of its kind ever assembled in the middle west.

The convention will be called to order in the Severin Hotel at 10 o'clock, March 2, and the gathering will be brought to a close Friday evening March 3, with a grand ball, to be held in Indiana's largest auditorium, Tomlinson Hall. Arrangements have been made to bring a number of film stars from all parts of the country to take part in the ball, and also address the members during the convention.

The present outlook is that 90 per cent. of the exhibitors in the state will attend, and the association is trying to make it a perfect score by having every one attend. Invitations are extended to every theater owner whether he be a member of the organization or not, and it is a cinch that every man who has his business welfare at heart will take advantage of this opportunity, to meet his business associates, talk over business conditions, and benefit thereby.

J. W. Binder, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Board of Trade, will be one of the speakers at the convention March 2-3 of the Indiana Motion Picture Exhibitors League. Mr. Binder was formerly national secretary of the National Board of Censors and his talk in Indianapolis will be upon censorship and organization, upon both of which subjects the Indiana exhibitors consider him well equipped to speak.

William J. Sweeney, of Chicago, also will talk. Mr. Sweeney is recognized as one of the biggest men in the business in the middle west.

Fred J. Herrington, Pittsburgh, national president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, has promised to come if possible.

F. J. Rembusch, vice president of the Motion Picture Board of Trade, and active in the Indiana exhibitors organization, will talk, and is taking active part in the arrangements for the convention.

Exhibitors, Everywhere: Are you getting all the benefit out of this paper that you may? Are you reading it? Did you read Sargent's Advertising Department in last issue? Pretty Good, was it not, particularly Page 1292?

ORGANIZING IN NORTH DAKOTA.

Exhibitors Meet at Fargo and Form Theatrical Association —Meeting Well Attended.

THE formation of the North Dakota Theatrical Association was one result of the meeting of exhibitors of North Dakota at the Annex hotel in Fargo Feb. 7 and 8. H. L. Hartman, of Mandan, was elected president, John Piller, of Grafton, vice-president; F. Voskie, of Hankinson, secretary, and A. Tweeden, of Fargo, treasurer. The organization will have no dues or initiation fees.

Active in the promotion of the meeting were Manager H. P. Johnson of the Fargo exchange of the Mutual Film Company. Manager Lee A. Horn of the Fargo exchange, of the Universal Film Company, and J. M. Freeman, of Hillsboro, vice-president of the state organization.

A Dutch lunch at the Annex cafe was a feature of the first day's program. Exhibitions were given of Pathe features, the Bluebird "Undine" and two episodes of the Essanay serial, "The Strange Case of Mary Page."

Among the exchangemen present were B. E. Reed, Zenith Features; Earle Perkins, All Star Features; H. B. Burgess, Universal; J. H. Margoles, Blue Bird Photo Plays; L. E. Davis, Mutual; H. R. Harrison, All Star Features; S. B. Sampson, Pathe; F. G. Sherrick, Pathe; S. T. Obrian, Universal; E. S. Flynn, V-L-S-E; Theodore Quandal, Mutual, and Gilbert M. Tyler, Essany General.

"Damaged Goods" was shown to the visitors at the Strand theater, the Fargo exchange of the Mutual furnishing the film.

A banquet was held at the Annex hotel the closing night, at which seventy-five were present. This was followed by a dance at the Sons of Norway Hall.

Next years' convention probably will be held in Fargo.

House Peters With Paragon.

HOUSE PETERS is the first star to be signed by the Paragon Films, Inc., the new producing company of which Maurice Tourneur, the famous director, is the artistic head. The picture in which Mr. Peters will make his debut is "Hands of Peril," which is based on the popular novel of the same name.

In the cast supporting Mr. Peters are June Elridge, who has been seen in many of the Peerless productions, and Ralph Delmore, whose work on the legitimate stage will never be forgotten by those who saw him as the brutal inspector in "The Third Degree."

Mr. Peters has been very fortunate in his moving picture work, having played only leading roles, with the Famous Players, the Lasky Company and the Lubin Company. As Stephen Ghent in "The Great Divide," he establishes himself as one of the genuine artists of the screen. He feels highly honored because of Mr. Tourneur's decision to make him the first star in the Paragon galaxy. Mr. Tourneur has already signified his intention of using Mr. Peters in his next picture which is based on a very popular story which has many unusual situations in it.

House Peters.

Although Mr. Peters has received offers from other producers, he has indicated that he prefers to be associated with Mr. Tourneur because of the artistic satisfaction there is in his direction, rather than the monetary gains that he could have with other producers.

Being of athletic disposition Mr. Peters thinks nothing of taking a five mile walk in tht morning before coming to the Paragon studio for his days' work. Contrary to the custom of most players he is up at 6 a. m. and is not put out by the long trip from his home in New Rochelle to the studio in Fort Lee. He is usually the first man at the studio in the morning, and his genial manner with his associates has made him one of the most popular of the film stars.

Essanay's New Studio

Big Addition to Company's Chicago Plant Now in Commission—Has Many New Features.

THE Essanay Company in Chicago is now in the throes of moving into its new quarters. The new studio practically is completed and while carpenters and electricians are still hard at work putting on the finishing touches, the movers are changing offices from the old studio building to the new, and property men are busy fitting up their new department.

The new studio building is 350 feet long by 175 wide. It forms a west wing to the old studio, and runs from Argyle street one block south. On the east side of the old building there is an extension for factory purposes, while in the center there is a large rear portico, so that the building as it now stands forms a perfect E.

The main entrance of the offices will be in the new studio building. There is a large reception hall in the first floor at the entrance, where those who come to the office on business will be attended to and directed to the necessary departments. To the right of the entrance is a large carpenter shop, and back of this is the new studio stretching back to the end of the building, and said to be the largest indoor artifically lighted studio in the world.

The entire two stories of the building are given over to the studio, with the exception that on one side there is a long gallery with 50 dressing rooms devoted to male actors only. Just east of the studio is a large property room extending the full length of the studio. Over this there are two new exhibition rooms, gymnasiums and shower baths for the men. There is a gallery that connects the baths with the dressing rooms, so that they are of easy access. There is also a large room off the gymnasium for a general lounging place for players when not busy on the floor.

The front of the building on the second floor is devoted to the main offices, including that of George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, and other officials. Here also are the advertising, scenario, and auditing departments, and offices of the directors and assistants.

The advertising department, scenario department, offices of the directors, and dressing rooms of the actors now located on the second floor of the old building all are being moved into the new building.

This entire wing of the old building will be given over to the women's department. Carpenters have already started remodeling and finishing it off, making it more comfortable, while the office furniture is being moved out. A matron will be put in charge with several maids to look after the comfort of the actresses.

The business offices on the first floor and which now are being moved to the new building will make way for a factory extension. The taking of photoplays already is progressing in the new studio. The sets are being snapped, however, by temporary lights; some floor lights, and others fastened to a scaffolding. Work is going on rapidly on the great cranes which will carry the permanent overhead lights, switching them back and forth from one part of the studio to the other, as required by the various sets.

Essanay having been cramped for floor space for its multiple reel features, all of which require large sets, it was necessary to use temporary lights in order to push its plays to completion on time. It is expected that the new lighting system will be completed shortly, and that within a month the whole plant will be running in smooth working order.

Big Trade Show Planned

Board of Trade Will Conduct It At Madison Square Garden in May.

MADISON SQUARE GARDEN, New York, will house the First National Exposition of the Motion Picture industries from May 6th to 13th. The exposition will be under the auspices of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, Incorporated, and will be managed by J. M. Binder, Executive Secretary of the Board of Trade and Harry A. Cochrane, General Manager of Madison Square Garden and one of the most successful American organizers of the trade shows and Industrial Expositions, having originated the Annual Business Show, now in its twelfth year; the National Graphic Arts, or Printing, Lithographing and Allied Trades Exposition, the third annual exhibition to be held in Madison Square Garden this Fall; also manager of the Brooklyn Automobile Show, the Gas Appliances Exposition, the National Household Shows, the Stationers' National Exposition, Chicago Motor Boat Show, the International Wearing Apparel, Styles and Fabric Expositions in New York and Chicago and many others.

The Motion Picture Board of Trade of America is the national organization directing the destinies of the motion picture industries and allied interests in this country and it promises one of the most elaborate and extensive indoor expositions ever held in this country. Many important trade conferences and conventions will be held in conjunction with the Exposition.

Film manufacturers will have all their private favorites on hand to meet the public, motion pictures will be made every day during the exposition to give the public an insight into the manufacturing end of their favorite amusement and in addition all the latest devices, accessories and equipment for studios and theatres will be shown for the benefit of the trade.

Jacques Earl Abrams

JACQUES EARL ABRAMS, one of the most widely informed and generally known men in the moving picture business, has become the Special Representative of the Knickerbocker Star Features and Vim Comedies. Mr. Abrams will go among the exchanges and exhibitors throughout the entire United States, representing these two popular brands, which have been making rapid progress to the front in the film trade.

Jacques Earl Abrams.

Mr. Abrams is a man who knows the entire picture business from "Script to Screen." He has had about five years' experience, beginning as an exhibitor, then writer, to actor, director, technical director and general representative of important companies.

Several popular vaudeville acts are credited to Mr. Abrams, the most popular being, "Cloak Models," which was played in every prominent vaudeville house in the country. Also "Sunshine Girls," "Dream Girls," and a number of others.

Mr. Abrams graduated from acting before the camera at the Balboa studios, becoming a director, and finally technical director for that company.

Directly on signing with the Knickerbocker Star Features, Mr. Abrams left for Boston, from there he will tour the entire Middle West and Southwest with the Melies products. The Knickerbocker Star Features and the Vim Comedies are realeased on the General Film Program, Thursdays and Fridays of each week. Mr. Abrams will confer with exhibitors generally, endeavor to learn their wants and announce to them the future plans of the Melies Company to supply the trade with the best dramas and comedies which can be made today.

Metro Has Election.

Re-Elects Rowland and His Associates—Enthusiastic Annual Meeting Approves Big Plans for the New Year.

AT THE most enthusiastic meeting ever held by the Metro Pictures Corporation, Richard A. Rowland was re-elected president, Joseph W. Engel was re-elected treasurer, and the two were inducted into office with votes, thanks and approval that would make even less modest men tingle with satisfaction. The director's meeting followed the annual stockholders meeting held on Wednesday in the Metro offices in the Longacre Building, and Friday and Saturday were spent in going over Metro's program of events and ratifying the schedule outlined by its leaders.

The Board of Directors was increased from seven to nine by the addition of L. Lawrence Weber, president of the Popular Plays and Players, Inc., and an associate of H. H. Frazee in theatrical enterprises, and A. S. Beymer, of the Keystone National Bank of Pittsburgh.

The following is a list of the other officers elected: First Vice-President, James A. Fitzgerald, of Detroit; Second Vice-President, James B. Clark, of Pittsburgh; Treasurer, Joseph W. Engel, of New York; Secretary, Louis B. Mayer, of Boston; Assistant Secretary and General Counsel, J. Robert Rubin, of New York. Executive Committee: Richard A. Rowland, of New York; Joseph W. Engel, New York; Louis B. Mayer, Boston. Directors: Richard A. Rowland, New York; Joseph W. Engel, New York; Louis B. Mayer, Boston; James A. Fitzgerald, Detroit; L. Lawrence Weber, New York; A. S. Beymer, Pittsburgh; O. N. Davies, Minneapolis; John D. Clark, Philadelphia; James B. Clark, Pittsburgh.

Secretary Louis B. Mayer, addressing the meeting, congratulated the corporation on its growth from a small beginning a little less than a year ago to its present status as the young giant among the feature companies, and the contender for first honors in the motion picture industry. He ascribed Metro's success to ability, leadership, enthusiasm and complete co-operation.

In thanking President Rowland and Treasurer Engel for their unremitting labors and the results they have achieved, the spokesman voiced the sentiments of the board when he said: "Metro has proved what exchange men can do when they stick together as one man and by co-operation and enthusiastic support of the central body turn the tide of victory their way."

Responding, President Rowland said: "We have gone forward with determination to give the exhibitors what they needed and what they wanted, and their response has been certain and sure. We are proud of our record, but we are not puffed up about it nor content with it. Our march has been along progressive lines that were business-like, and we have tried to be fair to the exhibitors, to the public and to ourselves."

Mr. Rowland then called upon his associate Mr. Engel, who spoke also of Metro's progress. Mr. Engel said: "We were told that exchange men didn't know the meaning of co-operation, but we knew better, and I want to point out to you that in all the months since our start your management has suffered no embarrassment from lack of full, complete and cordial co-operation."

An appropriation of $250,000 was voted for publicity and general advertising, to be expended in the next twelve months, and the publicity program arranged in a series of special campaigns was approved in toto by the board.

A number of big things may be expected from Metro during the coming year, and it was announced that these would be made public at scheduled intervals. The first announcement includes series of Metro Travelogues, which include a new departure in scenic pictures, a cartoon series along new lines and an addition of a number of novelty subjects in short length releases.

The program for the big series in which Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne will be starred was approved. These pictures will be released one each week, in addition to the regular feature release. The weekly schedule includes one five-reel Metro wonderplay, one Metro-Drew comedy, one Metro Travelogue and one installment of the Bushman and Bayne series, the name of which will not be announced until March.

In approving in its entirety the publicity and advertising program for the new year the board passed a resolution congratulating Arthur James, publicity director, on the nation-wide scope of the publicity campaigns which have so materially contributed to the successes of the year.

California Signs Otis Skinner.

America's Leading Romantic Actor Will Be Presented in "Kismet" by the Coast Company.

OTIS SKINNER has been captured by the advancing art of the motion pictures. The greatest romantic actor on the American stage has capitulated, conditionally, to the charms of the screen drama, and while the surrender has not been complete, it is none the less significant, important and cheering to lovers of animated photography. "Kismet" is to be the vehicle in which his picturesque and eloquent art is to be brought to a wider public. The conjunction of star and spectacle was the achievement of the California Motion Picture Corporation—a singularly happy resultant of forces which have been at work for many months.

Otis Skinner.

Otis Skinner has frequently declared himself opposed to the practice of actors and actresses confusing their identity by alternate appearances on the stage and on the screen, and was quick in the refusal of all overtures to accept a season in various motion picture enterprises. He has been flooded with fabulous offers. No figure tempted him and no inducements seemed competent to budge him from his attitude. With a popularity on the stage reaching from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and with gifts which render him of all players most appealing to all classes of playgoers, he was reluctant to abandon his clientele even temporarily.

Indeed, why should he?

Finally "Kismet" was procured by the California Motion Picture Corporation, but the Western concern would not consider a production of such a magnificent and costly drama with any other than Otis Skinner in the leading role. "Give us Otis Skinner and we'll produce 'Kismet'," they said.

That star had previously hinted that if he was to be lured even for a single season from his footlight friends, no play but "Kismet" would entice him, and his reasons for this were obvious and legitimate. With "Kismet" as his vehicle for a screen debut, Skinner's objections to a departure from the stage would naturally crumple, as will shortly be shown. So the California corporation brought the play and the star together, Otis Skinner signed the contract and "Kismet" with a wealth of scenic splendor, will be produced, its release being scheduled for early next fall. It will be in ten reels and the promise is given forth that the glory of ancient Bagdad, the luxuriousness of the Orient, the sensuous charm of the East and the mystery and languor of the Arabian Nights' Entertainments, of which "Kismet" is one of Scheherazade's finest tales—will be reproduced with all the fidelity to the original that is found in Burton's unexpurgated "Arabian Nights."

FRANCELIA BILLINGTON JOINS UNIVERSAL.

Francelia Billington, one of the best-known film actresses in the Los Angeles photoplay colony, this week joined the forces of the Universal Film Company at their Pacific Coast studios where she is to appear in leading roles opposite Herbert Rawlinson under the direction of William Worthington.

Although she has had absolutely no experience on the legitimate stage, Miss Billington is regarded by local critics as one of the foremost emotional actresses in the drama.

Mr. Theater Manager: We are really more proud than ever of last week's issue. Full of meat, as usual. Look up and read a second time Mr. Bush's article on Page 1271, and Mr. Sargent's Department of Advertising. Especially Page 1292.

Triangle Program.

"Peggy," the Billie Burke Picture, Will Head the List—Two Two New Keystones.

FOLLOWING the Triangle's release this week of its biggest feminine star, Billie Burke, in Thomas H. Ince's production of "Peggy," there is announced for the corporation's several hundred exhibitors its most prominent male acquisition from the legitimate, De Wolf Hopper. The Fine Arts version of the Cervantes novel, "Don Quixote," has been cut to five reels since its initial showing at the Knickerbocker Theater in New York several weeks ago and for release this coming Leap Year Week is combined with Kay-Bee feature, "The Last Act," in which Bessie Barriscale is starred.

"Don Quixote," as it emerges from the Griffith studios, deals with the adventures of the muddle-headed old knight in righting the wrong done by the crafty Don Fernando to the fair Dorothea and preventing Fernando from marrying Lucinda, beloved of Cardenio. The film version gives naturally only a small portion of the many adventures which befell the Cervantes character. Chester Withey, who made the adaptation and also plays Don Fernando, brings in the episode of the windmills and the scenes at the inn where Dulcinea was the slavey until Don Quixote arrived and dubbed her the fairest lady in Spain.

In "The Last Act" Miss Barriscale is an actress who gets a good part when she needs it most. Into her life comes a prosperous man who neglects his wife because she neglects him for charities. When the actress is tempted to yield to his attentions she is reminded very forcibly of the consequences by recalling the climax of her own play. She then induces the wife to devote a little more time to her husband, discard her dowdy apparel and attire herself in the frills that every husband loves. When this is done the last act or last reel becomes a happy one.

Two new Keystone comedies will go out to exhibitors this same week. Ford Sterling and Chester Conklin are the respective stars of "His Pride and Shame" and "Cinders of Love."

Fitz-Patrick With Juvenile Film Co.

JAMES A. FITZ-PATRICK has just completed his third production, "Chip's Backyard Barn Stormers," for the Juvenile Film Company, a concern which has been devoting its efforts, exclusively, toward producing children's films for children.

Mr. Fitz-Patrick writes his own scenarios and takes part in them also. Previous to his debut in pictures he held down the position of star reporter for the Bridgeport Standard and the New Haven Times Leader, two of Connecticut's leading newspapers. He has also written many magazine articles and vaudeville sketches.

Jas. A. Fitz-Patrick.

In addition to his journalistic career, Mr. Fitz-Patrick, who is a former student of the Frohman Academy, taught a children's school of dramatic art in Brooklyn. It was at this school that he "discovered and trained little Janethel and Joseph Monanhan, eight and seven years old, respectively, who are now the two leading characters of his "kid" company.

"It is a surprise to me," said Mr. Fitz-Patrick, "that the children have been so long neglected by the "big" producers of moving pictures. It must be like a session in a Puritan Sunday School to a little boy, who is obliged to sit through five long reels of melodrama, so deep with plot, vice and intrigue that the poor "kid" either goes to sleep or absorbs it as he would the contents of a dime novel.

"A big change, however, is coming; children will have their day! Only yesterday, two ladies of high social standing, came to our office to see some of our pictures. They said they were organizing a circuit for children's photoplays and had already interested several New York exhibitors with the idea of special shows for children."

Rothacker's Research Laboratory.

E. H. Spears, Who Has Had Thorough Technical Experience and Training in Such Work, Has Been Appointed Director.

WATTERSON R. ROTHACKER, president and general manager of the Industrial Moving Picture Company, announces the inauguration of a special research laboratory in direct connection with the company's factory organization. This step marks an important innovation, as this is the first department of its kind to be exclusively maintained by an individual moving picture manufacturer.

The research laboratory of the Industrial Moving Picture Company will be directed by E. H. Spears, who, until February 1st of this year worked along these lines under the personal supervision of Dr. Kenneth S. Meese, director of the research laboratory of the Eastman Kodak Company.

E. H. Spears.

Mr. Spears entered the moving picture business in 1902, with the Kinetograph Company of New York City, which was then managed by Percy Waters. In 1905 Mr. Spears accepted a position with the Eastman Kodak Company. While in the Eastman employ his work covered practically everything in the field of moving pictures from camera work to the production of the finished picture. He made exhaustive experiments on the Gaumont three-color process and went through all the branches of the Gaumont work from camera man to the finished product. For two years he was engaged in experiments on a two-color process which was expected to be more satisfactory than the Gaumont three-color process. Mr. Spears has had thorough experience in research work directly pertaining to developing, the chemistry of developers and dyeing, and the chemistry of dyeing, toning, fixing, etc. He is, therefore, well qualified in every way to handle capably the new research laboratory which Mr. Rothacker has placed under his direction.

In addition to continuing his experimental research work, the duties of Mr. Spears will include the personal screen inspection of the Industrial Moving Picture Company's product, and in giving special and expert advice to customers of the company, and the conduct of a special educational campaign for the direct and special benefit of the Rothacker employes.

TWO NEW FACES ON GAUMONT SCREEN.

Two new faces will be seen on the Gaumont screen when that company releases "Feathertop" the five-reel feature in which Henry J. Vernot is now directing Miss Marguerite Courtot. The two new players in this Mutual Masterpicture are Gerald Griffin, well-known on both the American and European stage, and Charles Graham who is equally well-known here and in England. Others in the cast are: Sydney Mason, Gerald Griffin, Charles Graham, Lucille Taft, Mathilde Baring, James Levering and John Reinhard.

"THE SPOILERS" FOR SOUTHERN TERRITORY.

"The Spoilers," Selig's screen version of Rex Beach's Alaskan tale, has finally been secured by Sol L. Lesser and M. Rosenberg for exploitation in the States of Kentucky, Maryland, Virginia, South Carolina, Delaware and the District of Columbia. Offices have been opened under the name of the L. & R. Feature Film Company, Bank of Commerce Building, Washington, D. C.

Coming Selig Releases

Kathlyn Williams to Appear in Her First Railroad Drama—Selig Strong for Single Reels.

NUMBER 13, WESTBOUND" is the title of the first drama of railroad life in which Kathlyn Williams ever appeared. Despite the fact that this star of Filmland has undertaken hundreds of different character roles running the entire gamut from wild animal dramas and comedies to "The Adventures of Kathlyn," she never in her varied career as a motion picture star took a chance with a flying locomotive. The drama has to do with a girl who saved hundreds of lives by flagging an express train. As the signals, the girl, overcome with fright, faints in the pathway of the approaching locomotive which is checked just a few inches from her prostrate body. "Number 13, Westbound," will be release in General Film Service on Monday, March 20. There are three reels of sensational occurrences. The comedy relief in this drama is something new to film dramas of the rail. Miss Williams is supported by Guy Oliver and an all-star cast.

On Monday, March 27, the Selig Company will release through General Film service an unusual society drama entitled, "A Social Deception," featuring Harry Mestayer and Eugenie Besserer. There are a succession of surprises in this drama and some unusual scenic effects. A carefully selected company of Selig stars enact interesting roles.

The Selig Polyscope Company has now on file many letters written by exhibitors in eighteen states praising the Selig-Tribune, the new news film released twice weekly through General Film service. The new style of poster originated for the Selig-Tribune has also been universally praised.

The old argument of the worth of the one-reel picture-play is again being discussed pro and con. One significant action was recently taken by a large film manufacturing company which has curtailed production of five-reel subjects to return to that "first love," the single reelers.

William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, is one prominent film manufacturer who has staunchly held to his ideas of the worth of picture-plays in one reel. While it is true that the Selig Company is noted for its spectacular dramas, yet Mr. Selig has never permitted his single reel productions to suffer and has gone right ahead releasing one-reel pictureplays while others have eliminated this class of film from their programs.

That Mr. Selig's policy was a far-sighted one is shown by the recent revival of one-reel picture-plays and the statements of several manufacturers that they will again return to the production of one-reel comedies and dramas.

There will always be a demand for short-length films of worthiness," said Mr. Selig recently." We have spared no expense or care in the stories and the production of our one and two reelers and our sales have jumped within the past few months to a figure that is most gratifying. The public will always demand good comedies and dramas in one and two reels, and I should not be surprised to witness a strong revival of the split-reel film. Feature films have won decisive and lasting favor, it is true, but shorter length films have never really lost favor with the public."

MARGUERITE SNOW RECOVERING FROM INJURY.

Marguerite Snow, the Metro star, who was last seen in "The Upstart" and "Rosemary," and who has just completed the stellar role in the new five-part production, "A Corner in Cotton," has just recovered from injuries she received while working in her last feature, and which nearly cost her her life. While racing in an old-fashioned buckboard to catch a train on the outskirts of Savannah, Ga., one of the rear wheels came off and Miss Snow was thrown violently to the roadway. She rolled for several feet over the gravel and rocky surface, and in addition to severe bruises and scratches all over her body and face she suffered three fractured ribs.

BURGER LEAVES PATHE.

J. K. Burger, for the last four years connected in the film industry, has tendered his resignation to the Pathe Company. Mr. Burger's many friends and acquaintances will be surprised to learn of his decision to leave Pathe. He has made no definite plans for the future. Mr. Burger's experience for the last four years has been of a broad scope, having been connected with the old Mutual Organization, the World Special Film Corporation, and having been in the capacity of auditor, comptroller, special representative and district manager for Pathe.

Ivan Abramson, Master Craftsman

LIKE all new arts, that of the photoplay found its workers engaged in different spheres. It gathered its laborers from the stage, the desk and the laboratory. And to this new field none came better equipped than Ivan Abramson, director general of the Ivan Productions, the genius who is directly responsible for the phenomenal success of the Ivan feature plays.

Ivan Abramson,

As one of the foremost producers of grand opera, Mr. Abramson is well known to the theatre going public of the country, the largest traveling opera organization being under his management for a number of years.

He was the manager of the greatest stars known to the Yiddish stage. Jacob P. Adler, Sarah Adler and Mme. Malvine Lobel are some of the artists he has handled. Among other things, the most successful plays produced on the Jewish stage, emanated from his brain.

And when the era of feature photoplays dawned, Ivan Abramson was one of the first to realize their possibilities, and two years ago he organized the Ivan Film Productions.

As a director of feature photoplays, his record is monumental. Such dramas as his latest productions, "Forbidden Fruit," and "A Fool's Paradise," are rarely excelled both as to story and direction. Each play he directs, Mr. Abramson creates himself.

Among the feature photodramas which Mr. Abramson has directed are, "Should a Woman Divorce," "The Unwelcome Wife." A Mother's Confession," "Concealed Truth," "Forbidden Fruit," and "A Fool's Paradise." At present Mr. Abramson is engaged in producing his latest work, "The Immortal Flame."

Ora Carew Joins Universal

ONE of the latest of recent players to join Universal forces at their Pacific Coast studios is Ora Carew, at present playing the feminine lead in Henry McRae's production of Frank Wiltermood's two-reel drama, "Rival Towns."

Ora Carew.

Miss Carew is regarded as one of the most versatile photoplayers in the Los Angeles colony, her work having been divided between comedy and drama in each of which she was equally successful.

Miss Carew's first film experience was at the old Reliance-Majestic studios where she worked under the director of D. W. Griffith in the production of Mutual releases. Following her engagement with this company, she joined the Keystone to try an entirely different line of work—that of comedy. She remained with this latter company until McRae offered her a better place with his 101 Bison company as leading woman opposite Lee Hill, also a recent arrival at the Universal studios.

Prior to her joining the Griffith companies, Miss Carew had earned an enviable reputation for her work on the legitimate and vaudeville stages which has proved invaluable since joining the film game. She is regarded as one of the most able ingenue leads at the big plant and will continue in the leading roles opposite Hill in McRae's productions.

"Fatty" Working in New York

Doing Some Big Stunts in "The Bright Lights," a Keystone Comedy of Life in the Metropolis.

ROSCOE ARBUCKLE used Joe Bordeau as a human battering ram at the Keystone studio in Fort Lee the other day and Joe still lives, although he was driven like a wedge through a 12-inch property wall with such force that a gap was opened large enough to admit the bulky "Fatty" to a Bowery dive, where his country sweetheart, Mabel Normand, was held a prisoner. This scene will furnish the big thrill in "The Bright Lights" when that new Keystone comedy is released to Triangle exhibitors. Joe says he'll be at the Knickerbocker the first night to see how he survived an experience for which they use 42-centimeter shells in the Champagne.

For more than two weeks Arbuckle has been preparing for this scene. He came from California with a determination to show Mack Sennett that New York was just as fertile a field for the Keystone brand of comedy thrills as the Pacific Coast. He made a good start in "He Did and He Didn't" and then approached "The Bright Lights" with eagerness as he looked over the story and saw that much of the action would take place on the Bowery. Personal representatives began to scour the East Side for types. The group in the engraving is fairly illustrative of the class of extras secured.

Vitagraph to Produce Big Serial

A Thirty-One Reel Blue Ribbon Subject Has Been Planned Entitled "The Secret Kingdom."

DIRECTOR Theodore Marston and a company of Vitagraph players are in San Antonio, Texas, arranging for the production of "The Secret Kingdom," one of the greatest motion pictures ever attempted. The picture, a 31-reel Blue Ribbon Serial, will be made under Marston's direction at a cost of approximately $250,000, according to his estimate. At least one-fourth of the work in connection with the ambitions connection will be done in San Antonio and adjacent country.

The San Antonio Chamber of Commerce has assured Director Marston of its co-operation and that of all the city's interests. A campaign by that business organization was started with a view to inducing the big motion picture concerns to establish headquarters in that city.

"We were induced to come to San Antonio," said Mr. Marston on his arrival there, "through correspondence with the Chamber of Commerce, and while I cannot speak authoritatively for the Vitagraph I will lay the matter before them of establishing a permanent studio in San Antonio.

"The picture is one of the most elaborate and expensive ever attempted by any motion picture concern. The scenario for 'The Secret Kingdom' was written by Louis Joseph Vance and Basil Dickey. The story is exceptionally strong and is based on love and adventure. The serial promises to be one of the most interesting ever offered the American public. Arrangements have been made for the appearance of the story in serial form in more than 100 newspapers at the same time installments of the picture are released.

Charles Richman, who starred in "The Battle Cry of Peace," will play the leading role in "The Secret Kingdom." The cast includes Arline Pretty, Dorothy Kelly, Joseph Kilgour, Ned Finley, Robert Whitworth and William E. Dunn. Arthur Ross is the camera man who will film the entire series.

In the last two years Marston has made a total of ninety-seven pictures for the Vitagraph Company. Among his recent successes are "Mortmain," "The Cave Man," featuring Robert Edeson; "Surprises of an Empty Hotel," and "The Patriot," featuring Charles Richman, and "The Quagmire," and "Miss Warren's Brother," featuring Joseph Kilgour.

Lois Meredith with Balboa

LOIS MEREDITH, Balboa's newest star, is one of those fortunate girls to whom success has come in the heydey of her youth, without a struggle. It is not meant by this that she has not had to work. Far from it! She is the hardest sort of worker. But her career before the public has not been beset with the hardships that so many of those who have arrived like to talk about.

Lois Meredith.

Miss Meredith comes to the screen after an almost meteoric flight across the dramatic sky's most recent period. Born in Pittsburgh, less than a score of years ago, Lois Meredith had the benefit of foreign travel at an impressionable age. An extended sojourn on the Emerald Island gave her accent the delightful Irish flavor which contributed so much to Miss Meredith's recent success in "Peg O' My Heart."

On a reecnt trip east, H. M. Horkheimer, president and general manager of Balboa, chanced to see a photoplay in which Lois Meredith was playing the lead. Her winsome personality and bright manner impressed the producer as having wonderful possibilities. When it came to signing a contract, it was found that, on account of her youth, it was necessary for Miss Meredith's mother to sign to make the document legal.

While she has filled several screen engagements during the last six months, none of the silent plays have been such as to give Miss Meredith's dramatic ability full scope. For this reason, President Horkheimer is having a number of scenarios specially built for her by well-known writers.

J. GUNNIS-DAVIS ASSISTING EDWIN MIDDLETON.

In the making of the Gaumont five-reel feature, "The Haunted Manor," Director Edwin Middleton is being assisted by J. Gunnis-Davis. Mr. Davis has been transferred from the Gaumont Company which has been making "I Accuse." In the latter production, which has now been completed, Alexander Gaden is the star. It will be released as a Mutual Masterpicture Feb. 21. "The Haunted Manor" will follow "According to Law" as a Gaumont March release. It will be seen on the screen Feb. 20.

TO MR. AND MRS. KARGER—A SON.

Frederick M. Karger is Metro's newest favorite. He arrived at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell Karger on Feb. 13, and Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., of which Mr. Karger is the general manager, is now figuring out a carnival, fete or route to celebrate the advent of a new Karger. It is reported from the Karger home that Frederick is a ten-reel feature subject or, in other parlance, a ten-pound boy. Metro is buying silver cups, rattles, spoons and teething rings.

Mr. Theater Manager: Permit us to suggest a second careful reading of article on Page 1271, by W. Stephen Bush, "Your Best Friend Is Your House." You will then read it a third time. IT IS WORTH CONSIDERATION.

Universal Heights Busy

Facilities of New Studio Work Great Improvement in Production—A Long List Cited.

WITH a dozen directors at work on the great stage, Universal Heights, New Jersey, is today in point of footage produced and number of directors working the most active of all Eastern studios. The staff of directors, under the general direction of Producing Manager Julius Stern, comprises the following well-known names: Ben Wilson, Lucius Henderson, Harry C. Myers, Henry Otto, Stuart Paton, Edwin Stevens, W. J. Kelly, Robert Hill, William Garwood, Allan Holubar, Matt Moore and Rex Ingram.

"The improvement in Eastern Universal pictures upon our moving into the new studios," said Manager Stern, "was apparent almost with the first picture there. Lighting, settings, photography—there has been no question about the improvement. I will name concrete pictures, that I invite anyone to see, that will bear out these claims. All 'new studio' pictures, these, from start to finish, and they rank, I assert with the productions of any manufacturer anywhere.

"See 'The Poet's Progress,' with Matt Moore and Jane Gail; 'The Sheriff of Pine Mountains,' with Ben Wilson and Dorothy Phillips; 'The Girl Who Feared Daylight,' with Mary Fuller; 'Easy Money,' 'Love's Spasms,' 'Lathered Truth,' 'Model Husband,' 'Hash House Heiress,' and 'Object, Matrimony,' all with Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby, with Violet Mersereau; 'Love's Triumph,' with Ben Wilson and Dorothy Phillips; 'The Humming Pigeons,' with Edith Roberts and Stanley Walpole; 'The Captain of the Typhoon,' with King Baggot; 'Aschen Brodel,' with Ben Wilson and Dorothy Phillips; 'The Invisible Husband,' with Mat Moore and Jane Gail; 'Hetty Gray, Millionaire,' with Mary Fuller; 'Elusive Isabel,' a five-reeler, with Florence Lawrence; 'Jim Slogan,' with King Baggott; 'The Ways of Providence,' with Ben Wilson and Dorothy Phillips; 'Thrown to the Lions,' a five-reeler, with Mary Fuller; 'Why Mrs. Kentworth Lied,' with Mr. Moore, Miss Gail and Augustus Phillips; 'Held for Damages,' with Harry Benham and Edna Pendleton; 'The Experiment,' a five-reeler, with Violet Mersereau; 'The Unconventional Girl,' with Edith Roberts, Stanley Walpole and Sydell Dowling; 'The Blind Man Who Saw,' with Ben Wilson, Clara Byers and Joe Girard, and 'Behind the Curtain,' with Dorothy Phillips and Allan Holubar. These are given in their general order of production, which will be their general order of release. See any of them or see all of them; they all show the quality advance that Universal Heights has brought to Eastern production.

"Since coming to the Universal Heights studio, we have tripled our scenario staff. We believe we have the best scenario brains in the East in the enlarged department. We have augmented our acting staff, too. In the past few weeks I have engaged for Eastern productions Harry Millarde, of the Kalem, Sidney Bracy, of the Thanhouser, Stanley Walpole, of the Bolair, Lionel Adams, of the Vitagraph, and Augustus Phillips, of the Edison—stars, every one! I believe that in these engagements, Universal Heights has taken on more high-priced actors than have all the other Eastern studios combined in the same space of time. We have perfect facilities, the best players, the most notable directors and the largest staff of the East. And the result is pictures that we are not afraid to name in bulk and ask the whole world to inspect."

William Garwood, who starred in pictures produced at the Universal studio in Coytesville, New Jersey, and then made the long hike to Universal City to be featured in the "Journal of Lord John" series under the direction of E. J. Le Saint, has returned to the Eastern Universal. He will both direct and act at Universal Heights. Manager Julius Stern has been awaiting Garwood's return with some eagerness, having accumulated a number of typical Garwood stories while the star was under "loan" to Universal City.

RICHARD GARRICK'S COMPANY IN EVERGLADES.

Richard Garrick, supervising director of Gaumont stock companies at Jacksonville, Fla., is himself directing Miss Mildred Gregory in the five-reel feature, "According to Law." Mr. Garrick is a great lover of out-door life, and in directing this play he has ample opportunity to live close to nature. Miss Gregory and the players prominent in her support are just finishing a sojourn of two weeks in the Florida Everglades. Those in the party are Howard Hall, Alan Robinson, Albert Mackling and Helen Marten.

Mutual Program

Notable Masterpictures and Many Shorter Subjects Scheduled for the Week of February 28.

TWO Mutual Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition, from the studios of the Horsley company will be included in the three Mutual Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition, three-reel feature releases of the Mutual Film Corporation for the week of Feb. 28. On Monday, "A Law Unto Himself," a western picture featuring Crane Wilbur, and on March 4, Friday, a drama featuring Margaret Gibson entitled "The Heart of Tara" will be released. The third Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition for that week will be "Embers," an offering from the American Film Company's studios in which Arthur Maude and Constance Crawley play the leads.

"A Law Unto Himself" gives Crane Wilbur an opportunity to display his versatility in two very different roles. For one, he creates a new type for the screen—that of a "gentleman sheriff." The story is strong and well built, and gives scope for real subtlety of acting, as well as for sweeping action, the background of the hills and mountains of the West offered opportunities for picturesque photography, with the result that "A Law Unto Himself" has some extraordinary scenes.

"The Heart of Tara" offers a vastly different locale from that pictured in the other Horsley feature. This picture has the color and picturesqueness of India as its background. The story centers around the love affair of a young English army officer and a Harem favorite, later, the love affair of the captain's daughter and the vengeful plot of an Indian Rajah to kill the two. Margaret Gibson, only recently raised to stardom, proves the confidence of the Horsley company in her ability, in this picture of the Orient. Her role requires emotional ability, quick understanding and versatility. William Clifford, who plays the role of the English army officer, is at his best in the "Heart of Tara."

"Embers," the American feature of March 2, is an intensive study of human emotions, although there is action of a sustained quality, which keeps the interest of the spectators to the very end. The drama is founded on the difference between love which is physical and love which is spiritual.

Arthur Maude and Constance Crawley are the leads in this picture. Nell Franzen plays the part of the thoughtless girl.

The three-reel feature issuing from the Mutual exchanges during the same week are "The Happy Masqueraders," "What Doris Did" and "Margy of the Foothills." "The Happy Masqueraders" in an American drama, featuring Winifred Greenwood and Edward Coxen. It is a study in happiness. A wealthy young clubman contends that happiness comes from within, and changes places with a cab man for a number of months, to the proof of his theory. In support of Miss Greenwood and Mr. Coxen are George Fields, Charles Newton, Dodo Newton and Ward McAllister. The picture was directed by Thomas Richetts.

"What Doris Did," is a Thanhouser three-reel picture, telling the story of Doris Grey, the pretty star who jumped into fame over night, because she was the prettiest girl at the Boston exhibitors' ball.

Art Acord and Dixie Stratton play the leading roles in "Margy of the Foothills," the Mustang release of March 3. The plot is typically western, and the picture is filled with thrilling adventure and with real heart interest. Lawrence Peyton, Joe Massey and Claude Cooper introduces the week's comedy output.

"Johnny's Jumble," featuring Carol Halloway and John Sheehan will be the "Beauty" release of Wednesday, as will "Dad's College Widow," featuring the same comedians be the "Beauty" comedy of Sunday, March 5.

The second "Falstaff" release of the week will be "Maud Muller Modernized," with Riley Chamberlin and Louise Emerald Bates in the leads.

George Ovey, the popular Horsley star of "Cub" comedies, will appear in "The Desperate Chance" on Friday.

The "Vogue" funny pictures of Thursday and Sunday have not yet been titled.

Mutual Weekly, No. 61, and the Gaumont split-reel scenic and cartoon comes, "See America First and Keeping Up With the Joneses" complete the week's output of Mutual pictures. The former appears on Thursday, the latter on Sunday.

Exhibitors Criticize Censorship Advocates

Reply Made by Arthur H. Spiegel Breathes Indefinite Hopes —W. W. Hodkinson Concurs.

ARTHUR H. SPIEGEL, President of the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation and General Manager of the World Film Corporation, is the recipient, this week, on behalf of his companies, of the following official notification from the International Motion Picture Association of Illinois.

Immediately upon receipt of this notification, Mr. Spiegel went into executive session with W. W. Hodkinson of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, who represents the Paramount interests of the pro-censorship controversy, with the result that the following correspondence ensued:

LETTER TO MR. SPIEGEL:

Chicago, Feb. 9, 1916.

Equitable Motion Pictures Corp., 130 W. 46th street, New York, N. Y.:

Gentlemen: At the last regular meeting of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Association of Illinois, held Friday, Feb. 4th, at which time the annual election of officers took place, the following resolution was unanimously passed by a very large and representative gathering of exhibitors.

"That we, the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Illinois, desire to go on record as unalterably opposed to any form of legalized censorship, national or otherwise, and that we most heartily disapprove of the recent attitude of the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, as well as the Metro and Paramount, in their endorsement of and favoring legal censorship."

The secretary was instructed to forward a copy of the above resolution to the Feature Film Companies in question, and also the trade papers. Yours truly,

MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' ASSOCIATION, Illinois.
By J. H. FRUNDT, President.
By SIDNEY SMITH, Secretary.

Mr. Spiegel responded, after his conference with Mr. Hodkinson, as follows:

February 14, 1916.

Motion Picture Exhibitors' Assn., Illinois, 57 E. Van Buren street, Chicago, Ill.:

Gentlemen: We have carefully noted the contents of your communication of the 9th inst.

We regret that the attitude of our company as well as that of the Paramount and Metro has met with the disapproval of your Association; but we wish to assure you that, in our opinion, our action will ultimately result to the best interests of everybody engaged in the motion picture industry.

The companies mentioned in your letter who have expressed themselves as being in favor of proper national censorship gave this question most serious and thoughtful consideration before arriving at any definite conclusion, and our final decision was based on the fact that proper national censorship would surely finally result in great benefits for producers, distributors and exhibitors. We are striving to promote the best interests of this industry and to establish its permanency. We know and you know that there is a certain class of pictures being produced to-day which is objectionable not only to the exhibitor but to his patrons, and pictures of this character should be suppressed solely because their suppression will surely work for the best interests of the industry.

The motion picture industry, as an industry, has thrived simply because the motion picture theater is a place for the masses—for men, women and children. But when a certain kind of picture is produced which will surely result in keeping men, women and children out of the theaters, then it is quite evident to every one that the industry will be seriously harmed.

It is hoped and desired that proper national censorship will do away with a class of productions that is bound to ultimately create havoc in the business. And it is further believed that once we have proper national censorship, all other forms of State and Municipal censorship will be finally abolished.

We, and I think I may state the other producers mentioned in your communication, are opposed to State Censorship, as we think it unfair and unwarranted; but we realize the urgent necessity for National Censorship—first, because it is bound to result in our general good; and, secondly, because we feel that once we have proper national censorship, it will be a stepping stone to the complete abolishment of all forms of State Censorship.

In conclusion, we wish to assure you that our sole purposes in this entire matter is to create a condition which will finally result for the best interests of every one engaged in this industry.

Very truly yours,
WORLD FILM CORPORATION,
(Signed) ARTHUR H. SPIEGEL,
General Manager.

Mr. Hodkinson's endorsement of Mr. Spiegel's response to the Illinois Association is given herewith:

February 17, 1916.

Mr. Arthur H. Spiegel,
World Film Corporation,
130 West 46th Street, New York City.

My Dear Mr. Spiegel: I have read and return herewith your letter dated the 14th, addressed to the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association at Chicago which is in answer to their letter of the 9th, addressed to you.

I think it is a very comprehensive and good answer and trust that you will send it as it is.

With kindest regards,

Yours very truly,
(Signed) W. W. HODKINSON.

Further than the above correspondence, Mr. Spiegel would not commit himself on any of the statements contained in his letter to the Illinois Association.

Actors Fund Starts Strong

Theaters in Los Angeles Among Early Contributors—Mayors of Cities Endorse Project.

THE campaign of the allied moving picture interests to raise $500,000 for the Actors Fund of America in fifteen weeks, inaugurated a little more than a week ago, has already reached nation-wide proportions under the energetic direction of Samuel Goldfish, chairman of the executive committee.

From coast to coast theater proprietors, stars of the studios and the humbler members of the film industry have responded to the call with enthusiastic spontaneity. Individual offerings have begun to reach Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, treasurer, at the offices of the finance committee in Locust avenue, Brooklyn.

Los Angeles, heart of the producing field, sent in $2,500 last week. Preliminary benefits were held in twenty-two moving picture, vaudeville and legitimate theaters for three days. De Wolf Hopper, Theodore Roberts, Victor Moore and other favorites of screen and stage made personal appearances before audiences which taxed the capacities of the amusement places and were in hearty sympathy with the spirit of the occasion.

From all over the country mayors of municipalities are accepting the invitation of the film men to co-operate with them to make Monday, May 15, a day unprecedented in the history of theater patronage and popularity. Every one of the 20,000 picture playhouse proprietors will donate a share of receipts to the fund on that, the final, culminating day of the whirlwind campaign. Mayor James M. Curley, of Boston, and Mayor Clifford B. Wilson, of Bridgeport, recently sent letters assuring enthusiastic support.

Although Monday, May 15, has been officially fixed upon as "National Tribute Day," many picture house proprietors have been unable to restrain their benevolent in pulses. They have written to the headquarters of the campaigners at 30 East Forty-second street, of their intention to make the day a notable one, but, not content with the single day benefit, will share receipts with the Actors Fund of America on another and earlier day as well. Beginning early in March, it seems assured that the fund will be the continuous recipient of monies from theaters, great and small, in all parts of the United States.

Marcus Loew has the distinction of being first in the held to publicly endorse the philanthropic crusade and to put his chain of seventy vaudeville and picture theaters at the service of the fund on May 15. Hardly was the movement under way when he announced that he would donate ten per cent. of the gross receipts of all his theaters which exclusively display moving pictures, and five per cent. of the day's revenue in playhouses which combine vaudeville and pictures.

Mr. Loew spoke in commendatory terms of the movement and promised his active and continuous co-operation to make the day a sensational record-breaker.

From the offices of the campaigners a vast amount of correspondence and literature is being disseminated to all corners of the country. It is the avowed intention to get in touch with every person remotely or intimately associated with the motion picture business in order to enlist interest and secure an optional donation.

Walter Moore, of the H. C. Minor Lithographing Company, has been appointed chairman of the General Committee of Lithographing and Bill Posting of the work. Mr. Moore will name his own committee of ten. The concerns in that line of industry will be furnished with publicity material and petitions, and it is expected that under his able direction every employe in the lithographing and bill posting field, which is adjacent to the motion picture field and is practically a part of it, will take a personal interest in the project.

CANADIAN SCHOOL ADOPTS MOVING PICTURES.

The Provencher School in Winnipeg, under the direction of Brother Joseph, have adopted films in the teaching of such subjects as natural history and geography. The first lesson given through the new medium, when the entire school assembled in the auditorium, consisted of studies of ants, spiders and other insects. The sub-titles of the films were supplemented with explanations given by the instructors. The experiment was announced as being fully satisfactory. A Simplex projection machine has been purchased and films will be rented from local exchanges at regular intervals.

Modern Theater Construction*

An Ideal Type of Small Motion Picture Theater.

By Edward Barnard Kinsila.

Article VI.

THE previous articles on Modern Theater Construction have all dealt exhaustively with the erection of large and medium sized playhouses, suitable for motion picture display, without particular reference to the smaller sized and more plentiful picture houses that have sprung up like mushrooms on a damp morning throughout the entire country.

These small theaters represent the great majority of the 25,000 playhouses devoted to the exhibition of motion pictures, admissions to which alone total over a million dollars daily. Such theaters are more frequently built in small towns, where there are no architects, or at best, no architects equipped with a knowledge of theater requirements.

Small Theaters Should Also Be Comfortable.

The small theater should be provided with the same facilities for comfort as the larger one. The same psychological elements prevail there that tend to induce amusement and satisfaction of the minds of the patrons. The provisions of ample cloak rooms and sufficient wide space between the seat rows to permit free passage without causing those already seated to arise, is particularly essential. An absence of glaring light for illumination, and a proper supply of stage settings, a combination that permits an attractive display of comedy pictures in a brilliantly lighted auditorium and dramatic ones in a moderately dimmed light, add as much to the illusion in a small theater as in a more pretentious one.

The addition of individual coat lockers, or the installation of a system of tiny electric bulbs to indicate vacant seats, or the illumination of balcony steps to avoid patrons from stumbling on their way to their places, are all features as desirable in a small house as in a larger one.

Waiting Room Often a Useful Innovation.

Frequently a small theatre is wide enough to permit of the introduction of an entrance lobby at the ground level with the stage above it, entrance to the auditorium being gained by two series of a few steps each on either side of the stage, as described and illustrated in the previous article.

Such construction would naturally add to the capacity and in addition would permit of a half basement underneath the auditorium that would contain ample cloak room space and a commodious waiting room, where late comers could be amused with comedy or current topic pictures while awaiting an intermission in the regular program of the auditorium above.

No Balcony for Small Theaters Preferred.

If the size of the plot will permit enough comfortable seating space on the ground floor, it is decidedly preferable to build without a balcony. If the building be long and narrow, it can never have the appearance of a regulation theater, often essential for purposes of pure illusion. Why not attack the problem boldly, and construct the edifice as an Assembly Hall, without any attempt to simulate a regulation theater? Ordinarily a balcony in such a house is a bad financial investment, because of the popular prejudice existing in this country against balcony seats. A gallery installation involves the loss of valuable seating space on the main floor for stairways. A large assembly hall without a balcony would also give greater opportunities for architectural grace.

The European has not the same ill feeling against the balcony as exists in America. There balcony seats are the choice places and demand the highest price, probably because they are remote from the stage and have less tendency to tire the eyes. In England the objection to climbing stairs is overcome because the orchestra stalls are down stairs below ground, while the balcony stalls are more nearly on the street level. On the continent, however, motion theater patrons prefer to ascend an additional flight of stairs to the balcony and pay more for their seats in that location. Vain attempts have been made in this country to instill the same choice among motion picture patrons in this country. Such efforts have invariably met with failure. There seems to exist in America a deep rooted dislike for climbing stairs of any kind.

No Necessity for Resemblance to Regular Theater.

Not only is it better to construct a long, narrow theater that bears no resemblance to a regulation theater without a balcony, but other features necessary to a dramatic theater may also be eliminated. There need be no thought with a small theater as to the simplicity of design. Its patrons are not fastidious in their taste, and usually prefer something more bizarre and fanciful. The best examples of this type of architecture and decoration are found in the Byzantine, Egyptian, Assyrian and some forms of the Greek and Roman orders. Most of these types furnish an exceedingly attractive design for the exterior, which serves as a bally-hoo for the show itself. The designs while offering gayety to the eye, if pure, are refined art of the highest kind.

Egyptian Order of Architecture.

In the present instance I have selected the Egyptian style of architecture. An Egyptian front with tapering pilasters at either side of the small stores and two richly decorated Egyptian columns on each side of the open lobby, with a round ticket kiosk in its center, forms a most attractive entrance. The fanciful Egyptian figures painted in bright primary colors on the walls, pilasters and columns, with corresponding gaudy decorations on the entablature and deep outwardly rounded cornice above, present an unusual and interesting aspect that can hardly be surpassed.

The Land Plot.

The theater here shown is designed for a plot fifty feet wide and one hundred and twenty-five deep, with a seating capacity for six hundred persons, and space for two small stores on each side of the main entrance. The seat rows are arranged three feet from back to back to permit free passage without the necessity of seated patrons arising, a provision that is absolutely essential in any theater.

A Balcony Included.

A balcony has been included in order to increase the capacity so as to comfortably seat six hundred people, the customary number for small theaters. The twenty-one rows downstairs seat about 400, while the six rows in the balcony accommodate about 200 more. Allowance downstairs of twelve feet, and six feet upstairs is made for standees back of the last row of seats. The orchestra pit for the music is sunken out of sight, as in the larger theaters.

The Stage.

Ample depth of stage is allowed for the installation of a shadow box effect for the screen, which is placed between the supporting columns of an Egyptian arch elevated over a series of broad steps at the rear of the stage. A light blue circular domed canopy, mounted on uprights, with headroom beneath, encircles the arch at the rear. Upon this plain sky surface all manner of cloud or storm effects may be introduced between the showing of pictures.

The distance between the screen and the proscenium arch gives the desired shadow box effect when the stage is darkened for the projection of the picture, and permits the entire auditorium to be brilliantly lighted while a comedy picture is being displayed, or dimly illuminated during the exhibition of a dramatic picture, without the light from the auditorium affecting the picture in any way.

The theater should never be entirely dark, and while comedy pictures are being shown it is much better to have the lights all up. Laughter is contagious and patrons are bound to laugh when they see their neighbors enjoying the fun. No amount of light in the auditorium can materially affect the picture on a thoroughly darkened stage, where reflected or indirect lighting in the auditorium is employed. The picture is only affected by direct light rays that reach the screen.

Concealed Lighting.

The illumination of the auditorium is intended to be entirely by tubular incandescent lamps of large diameter hidden in continuous rows behind the upper cornice, with their light rays indirectly reflected from the large curved cove in the ceiling. Regular electric dimmers are to be employed to reduce this light suddenly or gradually as desired.

Different Theaters Require Special Consideration.

The subject of Modern Theater Construction in these articles has of necessity been treated more or less in a semi-general manner. All of the known requirements of a modern theater and many original suggestions have been dealt with. Varying conditions may often affect their installation.

The size and position of the land plot and its disposal, local legal ordinances, and fixed conditions always materially govern theater problems. Special conditions require specific treatment. Two theatrical projects are rarely the same. The duty of erecting a theater always calls for a specialist in that line of construction. It is always better to leave it to the expert.

My aim in penning these articles and diagrams has been to concisely illustrate the essential requirements of a first class theater, indicating occasionally commonly practiced faults to be avoided, always clearly stating my reasons for such elimination. If I have materially accomplished anything that will tend toward bettering existing conditions, I am truly thankful.

NEW THEATER FOR LOS ANGELES.

The Palace Amusement Company, of Los Angeles, owning and operating the Palace of Pictures, will open a new theater. It is to be called the "Palace Theater," and will be housed in the building formerly known as the Chocolate Den on Seventh street, between Hill and Broadway. The place will be transformed into a first class photoplay house, with a seating capacity of seven hundred. A large pipe organ will be installed and first run features will be shown. The first film to be shown will probably be "The Island of Surprise," the Vitagraph feature from Cyrus Townsend Brady's well known story. C. W. Nouls is the president of the Palace Amusement Company, and Dr. H. B. Breckwedel is secretary and treasurer of the corporation. Dr. Breckwedel will act as general manager of the theater. The present Palace of Pictures will be closed.

LUBIN COMPANY BACK FROM SOUTH.

Nance O'Neil and a company of thirty players under the direction of Edgar Lewis has returned from Thomasville, Ga., where they have been for the last three weeks busily engaged in making the exterior scenes for "Fires of St. John," a future V-L-S-E release, adapted for the screen by Alfred Hickman, from the play of the same name by Hermann Sudermann.

When "Fires of St. John" is released Miss O'Neil will be seen in the dual role of Marika, the daughter, and Zirah, her gypsy mother. Edgar Lewis, who is directing the picture, is enthusiastic over the success of his southern trip and gives his opinion that it will surpass any picture he has ever made.

AUSTRALIAN NOTE.

Waddington's, Ltd., has secured the lease of the Strand theater, which was completed a short time ago. It is one of the best shows in Sydney, and seats over 1,000 persons. The new management will show Paramount features.

News and Views of Photoplay Houses Everywhere

MAJESTIC THEATER, LOUISVILLE, KY.

This Photoplay House Has Ornate and Beautiful Entrance—Interior Also Very Handsome—Has Seating Accommodations for 1,200—Managed by L. J. Dittmar.

PRE-EMINENCE has been the watchword of the Majestic Amusement Company of Louisville, Ky., which for a number of years has been one of the most successful moving picture concerns in the country. The company operates the Majestic theater which has one of the most elaborate entrances in the country. The interior of this theater is also very ornate throughout. In the summer of 1908 L. J. Dittmar, George G. Fetter, R. S. Brown, Charles H. Bohmer and A. P. Barnard organized the Majestic Amusement Company with a capital stock of $15,000. Several buildings were torn down at 546-548 Fourth avenue, and a theater erected. This first house had a seating capacity of 650 persons, was at that time the largest in the state, and one of the largest in the country. The investment represented an outlay of approximately $20,000.

Louis J. Dittmar.

This first house was erected on a lot 32x140 feet. The stage was thirty feet deep, and the screen was placed at the front of the stage. For the first three years the pictures were projected from the rear of the screen. False boxes were provided at each side of the stage for singers. The house was completed and opened on Christmas Day of 1908. From Christmas Day until September 1909, the theater just about broke even, but a change came along about that time in the film supply world, and with only first-run pictures the house began to pay, and has been a big paying investment ever since.

In 1911 the company took in forty-three feet of land adjoining, and decided to build a new house on the property which now is 75x200 feet. The new theater was built over and around the old one, only three weeks actual loss of box receipts being recorded, as the shows went right along in the old house, until it was closed, dismantled and carried out from under the roof of the new house. In building the new house the lobby entrance was built thirty-two feet wide, extending back a distance of fifty feet. Forty-three feet of the frontage was cut into two stores, fifty feet deep, and extending back from the street even with the lobby, making the auditorium proper the same width and depth throughout, that being 70x130 feet, five feet having been cut off on the south side for a passage back to the alley. Two side exits open directly into this passageway, while there are two five-foot exits at the rear, on each side of the stage. At the entrance of the house are two large doors used for entrance and exit, giving the theater a total of six wide exits.

The construction of the building is fireproof throughout, the walls being of steel and brick, while the roof is supported on heavy steel beams. The floor of the building is of concrete, with a wood covering. The stage opening is 35x30 feet, and the stage is thirty feet deep. The heating and ventilating system of the building, while simple, has proven very effective. Several ventilators, of large size, open directly to the outside air near the floor. Other ventilators are placed in the ceiling to carry the stale air from the building. Two large exhaust fans are placed in the ceiling. In the matter of heat, a large steam boiler in the basement supplies steam to radiators in various parts of the building. To the left of the lobby, and at the back of the auditorium is a large and commodious dressing room for women while a lavatory for men is provided at the side of the lobby. Lighting is secured through the indirect type of fixtures, suspended from the ceiling, and small side lights placed at regular intervals above the wainscoting.

This company was one of the first to use wide and comfortable seats. The theater is now equipped with 1,200 seats, which range from 19 to 22 inches in width, and which are set thirty-two inches from back to back. These seats are upholstered in black leather, the wood being of mahogany, with metal supports. The seats are divided into three sections, with aisles between the sections and on each side of the outer rows of seats. A cross aisle extends across the theater at the central exit. With these many five foot aisles and numerous exits, the theater is about as safe from fire or panic as it is possible to build one. The interior of the theater is finished in the French Renaissance style of architecture. The ceiling beams are highly ornamental, being finished in figured or modeled plaster. The wall panels are also finished in decorative plaster work. The color scheme is carried out in cream and old rose throughout, while what little woodwork is to be seen is mahogany.

Majestic Theater, Louisville, Ky.

Directly behind the last row of seats an ornamental railing of brass has been placed. This railing is fitted into handsomely carved mahogany posts and was recently erected to prevent people sitting in the last row from being annoyed by less fortunate patrons who happened to be standing at the rear of the auditorium where there is a clear space of twelve feet across the house. Although the theater is equipped with a deep stage, the screen is set at the front of the stage opening. The throw is 130 feet, the picture being 15x20. Two Simplex motor-driven machines are used. During 1912 a special machine was used for Kinemacolor productions which were added to the program.

When the theater was reconstructed in 1911 the capital stock of the corporation was increased to $30,000, each stockholder taking his part of the issue according to the amount of stock already held. The new building cost about $50,000, in addition to such supplies and equipment as were transferred from the old house. The building was erected on leased ground, the land being leased for a period of twenty years from 1911. In January, 1913, the capital stock was increased to $150,000, giving the corporation plenty of capital with which to handle its business with ease. In 1915 it was decided that a more ornate entrance should be erected and one designed along the French Renaissance type, in keeping with the interior of the house, was built. The floor and certain portions of the arch were composed of Rookwood and Alhambra tile, two of the most expensive tiles produced. Figured plaster was also largely used in carrying out the entrance decorations which are finished in the general color scheme of blue and cream and high lighting gold. The box office, which was of white marble, was allowed to remain in its old place, but the marble was taken out and the new box is of tile. Handsome, large, oil paintings have been placed in special frames, one over each of the doors leading into the lobby. Myriads of small lights are hidden in the various fancy figures worked out in the plaster, and six small lighting standards, supporting four white globes, are placed around the interior of the entrance. The exterior of the building is of stucco and white enamel brick. Since the opening of the new house in 1911 a Hungarian orchestra of six pieces has been employed constantly. In operating the house Manager L. J. Dittmar has a force of twenty-four assistants to aid in the various departments.

In the way of publicity the theater uses a great deal of local newspaper space, but does not go in to any extent on circular advertising, contests, or any of the hundred and one stunts used by many exhibitors in their attempts to get business. Admission prices at the theater have always been ten cents for adults and five cents for children. However, Mr. Dittmar and other leading exhibitors have been discussing for some time the advisability of increasing night prices for the double purpose of getting a larger afternoon attendance and of relieving the congestion in the evening.

While it is not generally known, Louis Dittmar came to Louisville, direct from Germany, at the age of eight years. After receiving a liberal education in the Louisville schools he entered the wholesale shoe business as a traveling salesman, representing a number of lines of Cincinnati and other manufacturers in Louisville and on the road. He retired from the shoe game early in 1908 when he became interested in moving pictures, the Majestic being his first venture. At this time he is president of the Louisville Photoplay Association, and of the Moving Picture Exhibitors League, Branch No. 7, of Kentucky, having been at the head of the latter organization for some time. He is also a director and one of the organizers of the leading Theaters' Circuit, Inc., which was recently organized in New York, by a number of the leading exhibitors from various parts of the country, for the purpose of handling special features for members of the organization and other exhibitors throughout the country.

An exchange will probably be established at Indianapolis to handle films in the vicinity of Louisville. While Louisville is one of the leading exhibiting cities it has never been an exchange center, shipping facilities having kept it out of the exchange game, as Cincinnati, Indianapolis, St. Louis and Atlanta are able to reach a larger territory.

LYRIC THEATER, BLACKSBURG, VA.

Small House in Small Town Does Good Business With Admission Prices of 10 and 20 Cents.

THE accompanying illustrations are views of the Lyric theater at Blacksburg, Va., taken before and after renovation. The small picture shows the condition and appearance of the house when J. A. Karnes purchased it; the big picture conveys the state of the theater after it had been subjected to a complete remodeling by the owner. The marked improvement is manifested in the contrast, and the renovated structure gives a hundred per cent. more credit not only to the town of Blacksburg, but to the motion picture industry in general. Mr. Karnes bought the Lyric from Argubrite & Vauter on June 25, 1915. He began making improvements in the structure immediately. In the old theater the seats were on a floor which was level and there was much craning of necks to see the screen. Mr. Karnes had the floor inclined to such a degree that a clear view of the picture can be had from any seat in the house. The operating room was rearranged and made fireproof and a new Power's 6a machine was installed. Mr. Karnes spent $650 in making the improvements in his theater.

View of the Lyric Theater, Blacksburg, Va., Before Renovation.

The seating capacity of the Lyric is not large; there are just 200 seats. The house is opened at 4:30 and closes at 9:30. The admission prices are 5 and 10 cents, except on Saturday, which is a special feature day, when the prices are 10 and 20 cents. Mr. Karnes says that business with him has been very good since he purchased the Lyric. On Monday, Wednesday and Friday the program is made up of General Film Company pictures; on Tuesday, the Pathe serial, "Neal of the Navy," is booked; on Thursday, "The Red Circle," another Pathe serial, is shown; on Saturday, Metro pictures make up the bill.

Another element in the conduct of the Lyric which redounds to the credit of the management is the display of posters. As can be seen from the large photograph, these are not strewn all over the entrance and pasted on every available space on the exterior, a pernicious habit with some exhibitors; but they are arranged in accordance with the limit of the proper space obtainable. The exterior is adequately illuminated with incandescent lights. The Lyric has been in existence for five years. Mr. Karnes, while actively engaged in the picture business for only one year, has been following the strides of the industry for a number of years. He is, consequently, equipped with knowledge to enable him to run an up-to-date moving picture house.

COLISEUM THEATER, SEATTLE, WASH.

Interior Decorations and Furnishings Done in Ancient Byzantine—Big and Costly Symbolical Paintings and Mosaics Add to the Embellishments—Smoking-Room Turkish in Design, While Women's Parlor Is Beautiful in Its French Gray and Ivory.

THE Coliseum theater, Seattle, Wash., which cost a half million in construction alone, was dedicated on Saturday, January 8. Long before the opening hour, the streets were jammed in front of the theater by a crowd eager to get a glimpse of the magnificent interior. The beauty of the exterior had won the admiration of the entire city long before the interior appointments were completed. The theater has a seating capacity of 2,500. Of a solid, brilliant white terra cotta exterior, profusely lighted with the newest type of electrical display, the Coliseum looms up at night like a bright gem.

The interior decorations and furnishings are a novel, colorful combination of the ancient Byzantine, relieved by inlaid designs, softened by the gray and black tones of velvet. The carpets are mosaic. The color scheme throughout represents the strong, though subdued tones of the Levant. A great panel directly over the proscenium arch has for its central feature a painting, 14 by 24 feet in size, representing one of Egypt's fighting Pharaohs reclining under the royal canopy on a starlit night, after a particularly disastrous day for his troops in the field, and seeks solace in the music of the harpsichord of the period, in the hands of a slave attendant.

The surrounding setting for this feature consists of myriads of colored Mosaics in elaborate design, and the sky has added the feature of an astronomically correct twinkling star field. In triangles to the left and right of the sounding-board are two great paintings representing legends of the reign of Queen Cleopatra. The one to the right shows Cleopatra receiving gifts from Mark Antony whose galleys ride at anchor in the harbor of Alexandria. To the left, Cleopatra is shown in her desire for a dramatic exit from life, trying out various poisons on her unfortunate slaves.

Directly above the sounding-board are three long ceiling panels, Egyptian in design, purely ornamental, executed in transparent glaze colors on a background of gold, and lighted by three great, specially designed electroliers. The three-domed ceilings to the rear of the above are executed in arched hands of Mosaics in fields of rich blue tiling. The paneled ceilings of the balcony, mezzanine, foyer and lobbies are decorated likewise in specially designed patterns of Mosaics.

The mezzanine, containing the loges, the ramp with its inclined planes and the promenade, is decorated on a field of Bagdad red in the most elaborate manner in panels and friezes of many-colored Mosaic designs, the ornamental metal work in wrought iron being flat black and gold. The smoking-room is Turkish in design and color and most elaborate in character and detail.

An innovation in the Coliseum theater is the nursery-room for children, decorated with pictures of characters well known in nursery rhymes. The room represents a color scheme of ivory and dull blue. Furniture of miniature size for the tots adds to their comfort. The women's retiring and rest rooms are done in shades of soft French gray and ivory, the woodwork in ivory eggshell gloss, the wall panels in blended green-striped silk, edged with flat black and gold. A Japanese maid in a quaint kimono is in attendance. The incline leading from the main mezzanine entrance is decorated in period of French Renaissance, with soft tones of gray, the panels in figured silk with edging of black and gold, and floral relief of Japanese wistarias. The seats are especially designed to give plenty of "knee room."

The air in the Coliseum theater is changed every 90 seconds and is driven out by a powerful electric motor through a fan that measures 14 feet in diameter. In summer the air is ice-cooled and in winter preheated. All approaches to the upper balcony from the main floor are inclines, doing away with stairways. An elevator, carrying 27 persons, stops at the lower and main balcony. The interior lighting is a distinct novelty. Instead of being indirect lighting or concealed, the entire theater is illuminated by reflected light, thus insuring an unusually well-lit playhouse and avoiding any direct glare.

The Coliseum theater is operated by the Greater Theaters Company, of which Jensen & Von Herberg have the controlling interest. Jensen & Von Herberg also operate the Liberty, Mission and Alhambra theaters in Seattle.

FRANKLIN THEATER, OAKLAND, CAL.

A beautiful motion picture theater is the Franklin theater, situated at 14th and Franklin street, Oakland, Cal. It is owned and operated by C. W. and Rex W. Midgley and M. A. Krueger. The Midgleys were formerly of the American theater, Salt Lake City, Utah. The accompanying illustration of the exterior shows the handsome appearance of the structure. The lobby walls are decorated with framed pictures of the photoplayers which add a tone of dignity to the frontal effect. The canopy extending across the sidewalk is studded with transverse rows of incandescent lights, and these together with the other electric lights across the cornice in the perpendicular sign bearing the word "Triangle Plays," and those in the signs at each side and at the top of the structure emblazing the name of the theater adequately illuminate the exterior of the Franklin.

The theater was built a year and a half ago, and has seating accommodations for 1,000 persons. The price at matinees is 10 cents while at evening shows 15 cents is charged. The Franklin is opened at 1:30; a two hour entertainment is given. Selections appropriate to the pictures are rendered by an orchestra of six pieces and a pipe organ. Triangle service is used, and the program is changed twice a week. C. W. and Rex W. Midgley are also the owners and operators of the Alameda theater in Alameda, Cal.

ARBOR THEATER NEARING COMPLETION.

The moving picture theater being built at North Swan and Second streets, Albany, N. Y., by William H. Buck is rapidly nearing completion. It is contemplated that the structure will be opened at the end of March. Mr. Buck is a popular and experienced theatrical man.

CASSIL BUILDING PHOTOPLAY HOUSE.

F. H. Cassil of Red Cloud, Neb., is building a 400-seat moving picture theater at that town. The name of the house will be the Orpheum, and motion pictures will be shown five nights a week. The Orpheum will be fitted with a stage big enough to accommodate road shows.

MOTZ OWNER OF THE NEW GRAND.

It was stated in our issue of Feb. 12 under the department head of "Picture Theaters Projected" that O. L. Winslow purchased the Bell theater at Warsaw, Ind. This is an error, for H. M. Motz of Warsaw was the purchaser of the photoplay house. He has thoroughly remodeled the structure and has changed the name to the New Grand.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Jimquin Denies.

JIMQUIN of L. A. says he did not get the idea for demonstrating the Powers 6-B from Picture Theater Advertising, as he has used the idea before. He adds that he has gained some ideas from P. T. A. and it is a pretty fairish book that can teach Jimquin. As samples he sends in some photographs. One shows Father Time walking down the streets of Los Angeles on New Year's Eve carrying a suit case labeled, "Leaving town to-night, fare paid by the Isis theater, Spring near Sixth." Put this away in your file and think of it along in December. We would reproduce the photograph only Jimquin is about as good a photographer as we are, and even engravers are entitled to a little kindness now and then. Anyhow it seems to be one of those two-story mannikins that are used for ballyhoo purposes, provided with a white nightie, whiskers and scythe. It makes a striking figure and at that time of year a most appropriate one. Mr. Quinn seems to be making "Spring near Sixth" a sort of slogan for an address. It may seem to be a funny slogan, but it sticks, and that is what counts. You'll probably remember "Spring near Sixth" to-morrow. If you do try and figure out a catchy address of your own. That is a lot better than 542 South Spring. The other photograph shows a lobby crowd reading some of Mr. Quinn's mail; letters from his two younger brothers "Somewhere in France" with the Allies. Letters from the front are regarded with interest and make a fine lobby attraction. And just for good measure he sends along these Jimquins:

It keeps us up o' nights figuring out ways and means for your better entertainment.

We know quite a bit about running this theater of yours, but not all. Your suggestions will help.

It's sweet music in our ears to hear you say on the way out, "That's a GOOD show." We prefer it with the loud pedal, too.

"O wad some power the giftie gie us
To see oursel's as our patrons see us!"

Our business is to entertain you.

Your's to come often to be entertained.

We mind our business.

DO YOU?

If you find anything to complain about, for goodness sake let's keep it in the family. Tell us, not the neighbors. We're even more interested.

A Sectional Weekly.

The Exhibitors' Weekly is the title of a new eight-page weekly newspaper published by E. F. Dardine at Charlotte, N. C., and distributed to every exhibitor in the Carolinas, the Virginias, Maryland, Georgia, Florida and Eastern Tennessee. It runs about three pages of boiler plate and some local news, but most of the material can be had, with more, in the National publications. It is probable that a stronger appeal would be made with a greater proportion of local news, wherein the paper will have less competition. Still it is young yet and it takes some time to train the exhibitor to get gossipy.

And Tom North Knows.

Picture Theater Advertising has been very generally praised, but two notices we particularly value. One was written by George Editor Carpenter and the other is taken from a recent V-L-S-E Pals, of Seattle. Here it is:

Every week the Moving Picture World carries a notice on Mr. Sargent's page, "Advertising for the Exhibitors," offering the book, "Picture Theater Advertising," compiled by Mr. Sargent and published by the Moving Picture World for sale. We have just finished reading this and are reading it again.

We think so well of it that we are going to publish excerpts from it from time to time in PALS. We know positively that any exhibitor who will read this book conscientiously, not once but a number of times, will get hundreds of dollars' worth of the best kind of advice on the best way to conduct theaters.

Mr. Sargent has given the exhibitors of America credit for most of the ideas but due credit must be given him for the excellent manner in which he has gathered the various data and compiled it in a way that makes every page intensely interesting.

We do not hesitate, in fact we urgently advise every reader of PALS who has not already secured a copy of this book to order one at once. It will be one of the best investments you have ever made and you will, without a doubt, be repaid many times over for the small investment called for. It is worth many times the price asked.

We are particularly appreciative of this because it comes from a man who knows his business thoroughly and who has demonstrated that he knows. And it is not said merely because Mr. North wants a mention here now and then. We've been lifting good stuff from Pals every week and would continue to do so even though he said the book was bad. But he likes it and advises its purchase, not because he wants to curry favor but because, like Mr. Carpenter, he knows that it will help his patrons to do better advertising and so ensure a greater success that will not only permit them to pay their exchange bills promptly but also will permit them to take a better service and make more money still.

Good on One Side.

The Palace theater, Emanus, Pa., sends in a program one side of which is a lithographed picture of Lillian Gish without advertising. The other side carries the house program. The management has laid out its announcement well, but the local printer has done his durndest and it is some durn, too. If we had to deal with a man like that we would talk to him over the telephone and not trust ourselves to get too close to him. This is an ideal arrangement for a small program,

THURSDAY January 6th.	HONOR THY FATHER. A powerful 3 reel feature based upon the Fourth Commandment. THE TRIUMPH OF ELAINE. The last chapter of the Romance of Elaine. Elaine will be followed next Thursday by the great serial of the sea, "Neal of the Navy." CUTEY'S AWAKENING. A Vitagraph comedy
FRIDAY January 7th.	THE WOMAN HATER. Presenting Henry Walthall and Edna Mayo in the 3 act feature comedy of a bachelor's plunge into matrimony. THE DAWN OF UNDERSTANDING. Maurice Costello and Leah Baird in a pleasing two-reel drama. A PERILOUS CHANCE. This highly spectacular "hazard" of the Helen Series is alive with action. One additional subject.

if it is well printed, and once the boxes are built up there will be no additional expense for setting as the boxes are retained and the new matter set to measure and dropped in. In the original the program is five inches wide. The trade advertising surrounds the program and frames, but does not hide it. It is all so well planned that we regret that the printer has spoiled the job, but as the management writes, it is better to hold the job in the local office.

Even where the work is not so well done as it could be done outside, it is better to go to the local concern. One of the secrets of the small town success is to keep the money in the town where possible.

Thoughtful.

The Princess theater, Memphis, Texas, sends in a trifle late its Christmas program and a Thanksgiving card. Both carry a red and green poinciana. The card is about the size of a visiting card and is neatly lettered to express the thanks of the management to its patrons of the day of general thanksgiving. The Christmas program seems to be the regular house issue with the addition of the two-color ornament. It is a three by five four pager, three days to the page inside and with a quotation on the back. This may not be as telling as some house talk and yet, because it is well chosen, it is possible that it does even more good. If a few persons are particularly appealed to by some one of these sentiments and it is pinned up somewhere, it will serve as a permanent advertisement. Sentiment does not mean some funny toast or humorous saying, but a really helpful thought well expressed. Many of these can be found in post card stores and can be taken over to the program if not copyrighted, as few of them are.

The newspaper advertising is similarly direct. There is no big type, but a well displayed program for the week in a space sufficiently ample to give it room, this particular advertisement being two nines, or nine inches across two columns.

Small But There

For a small program the Mystic, Petaluma, Cal., gets out a neat four-page program about four by six. It is printed on news stock and carries no cuts, which would be out of place. As the house runs mostly one and two-reel titles there is a lot to be gotten into so small a space, but they manage to get it in. Any house can afford a program this size.

Hennegan Issues

The Hennegan company is sending out a new lot of program covers and other features, all neatly bound with a brass ring by which they may be hung up if desired. They present a new line of single sheet blanks around six by ten inches with a variety of designs. They are not much cheaper than the four-page covers so far as cost is concerned, but they save cost of composition and can be used as a two-fold folder and be printed up on the back with address form. They also have a smaller four-page two-color cover supplied four pages to the sheet so that they may be printed two at a time and cut apart, requiring to be run through the press only as many times as there are programs instead of twice the number. These are about 4 by 6½. There are also new designs in the old offset series. The Hennegan covers are useful if you can order in quantity, which can be done by splitting your order with brother exhibitors in nearby towns.

Lehigh Changes.

The Lehigh Orpheum, South Bethlehem, Pa., has changed its program style again and we like this one about as well as anything they have done yet. It is four pages, about five by six and its arrangement is best suggested by a reference to the cut which shows the first page and one of the inside pages showing the panel arrangement with the dates above and not in the panel. The front page, it will be noticed, recapitulates the program for the week. Inside there are three pages to the day, each by itself. We do not quite like the borders. They seem to be making too much of an effort to be ornamental, but the ornamentation around the house name is in excellent taste. The Lehigh and its sister, the Third Street, Eaton, can do things. This is one of the best things they have done. The program is on heavy cream stock, just a tint, and is printed in brown, which is good if the printer knows how to work the ink. This printer does.

In Colors.

The Theatorium, Mt. Carmel, Pa., sends in several Hennegan covers printed up as a four-page program. The form of the program layout is changed each week and this, we are inclined to think, is a needless expense. It gives variety, but a well laid out program with a change of type matter will permit the advertising to be kept as standing matter. Of the samples sent we like best the program from the week of January 3rd. The display of program matter is good in all issues and the management does not make the common error of letting the same matter stand in the head too long. If you tell the same story week after week, the argument presently loses force and is unnoticed, but giving new copy each week, even if it does mean a little more work, will give a definite return in value. This weekly change of all material is a capital feature of the Theatorium programs, but we think that money may be saved, without sacrifice of effect, by having a standard program form.

Either they have a good printer or they have educated one. The type display shows up the facts to the best advantage, not merely the title but the facts. There is a proper relation in sizes of the faces and the choice of face as well. But do not always blame the printer for a poor display. You have to first supply the right sort of copy. If you write too much it will be too small and too little is apt to get too black. Do as Mt. Carmel does and work in with the printer. Tell him what you want and let him tell you, as well, what he wants. Then strike an average.

Another Organ.

The Lyric, Coeur d' Alene, Idaho, is issuing the Lyric News, a four-page house organ that is made to work for the house. In the issue to hand they use the "Rotten" argument, started by J. W. Llewllyn. This is something that every house manager in the country should take up. Teach your patrons that the show is not rotten merely because it does not please the speaker. Grant them the right not to like the show, but educate them to say that the show did not please them instead of saying it was rotten. It is in things such as this that the house organ has its greatest value. You have many ways of announcing your program, but there are only two ways of talking to your patrons—the screen and the house paper—and of the two the house organ does better work, for it reaches those who do not see your screen. The only straight program matter is the condensed program on the first page and here they use a form new to us:

"The College Widow"
Geo. Ade Comedy.
Saturday only.
January 8th.

John Barrymore in
"The Incorrigible Dukane"
Sunday and Monday.
January 9th—10th.

"The Chalice of Courage"
Tuesday and Wednesday.
January 11th—12th.

This varies from the usual form of date, attraction and star, but it has an advantage in that it makes the appeal with a known star instead of an unknown play. The rest of the advertising is done with readers.

The house offers an "economy ticket" giving $1.20 for $1, but we are waiting to see others using the commutation ticket offered by the Star, Trail, B. C. There should be a chance for this in any small town, and it does not have to be so very small at that.

All But.

A. H. Cobb, of the Temple, Hartsville, S. C., sends in his first program. It is a neat four-page card, three by five, and is very nicely done except for the mottled stock, which does not show up well. The display is good and the general imprint excellent. Mr. Cobb writes:

> I began reading the Moving Picture World about three years ago. At that time I was an operator and read the projection department only, but I soon began reading the advertising department also and the first thing I knew was reading it from cover to cover. If I don't receive it on time now I have a scrap with the news stand until I get it.
